THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33d CONGRESS, 1st Session.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1853.

NEW SERIES... No. 1.

THIS is the first number of the CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE for this session—the first of the Thirty Third Congress. I will print several thousand surplus copies to supply all who may subscribe in a reasonable time—say by the 15th of next month—with the numbers from the commencement of this session.

The CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE and APPENDIX and LAWS will not be sold separately, as they were a few years ago. When separated they did not give general satisfaction, as a subscriber for one would frequently want the other when too late to furnish him with the back numbers. Therefore the CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE and the APPENDIX and the LAWS will all be sold together. A man who may think he has not the money to spare to purchase the whole, may get a club to join him.

The price for the whole for this session is $6 00. They all go free by mail.

THIRTY-THIRD CONGRESS. FIRST SESSION.

SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

MONDAY, December 5, 1853.

* Executive appointments.

Hon. DAVID R. ARCHISON, President pro tempore, called the Senate to order.

CREDENTIALS OF SENATORS.

THE PRESIDENT presented the credentials of Hon. ROBERT W. JOHNSON, appointed by the Governor of Arkansas, a Senator from that State, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the acceptance by the Hon. SOLON BORLAND, of the mission to Central America.

The credentials were read; and Mr. JOHNSON, having taken the oath prescribed by law, took his seat in the Senate.

Mr. JAMES presented the credentials of the Hon. PHILIP ALLEN, chosen by the Legislature of Rhode Island, a Senator from that State for the term of six years from the 4th of March last.

The credentials were read; and Mr. ALLEN, having taken the oath prescribed by law, took his seat in the Senate.

Mr. DAWSON. I beg leave to present the credentials of the Hon. JOHN BELL, Senator elect from the State of Tennessee, for the term of six years from the 4th of March, 1853. I do this in consequence of the absence of his colleague, [Mr. JONES.]

The credentials were read; and Mr. BELL, having taken the oath prescribed by law, took his seat in the Senate.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Mr. President, the Hon. JOHN SLIDELL has been elected by the Legislature of Louisiana to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Mr. SOULE. He has not yet received his credentials: I presume, however, there will be no objection to his being sworn.

The PRESIDENT. If there be no objection the Chair will administer the oath of office to the Hon. JOHN SLIDELL of Louisiana.

There being no objection, the oath prescribed by law was administered to Mr. SLIDELL and he took his seat in the Senate.

NOTICE OF ORGANIZATION.

On motion of Mr. BRODHEAD, it was Ordered, That the Secretary acquaint the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate has assembled, and the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

HOUR OF MEETING.

On motion of Mr. BADGER, it was Ordered, That the daily hour of meeting of the Senate be twelve o'clock, m., until otherwise ordered.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. BRODHEAD gave notice of his intention to introduce a bill extending the provisions of the several laws granting bounty land to the officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, gave notice of his intention to introduce a bill granting to the State of Iowa certain alternate sections of public lands for the construction of railroads therein.

Also, a bill to organize a territorial government for the Territory of Nebraska.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, gave notice of his intention to introduce a bill making donations of public lands to the State of Iowa, for the construction of one or more railroads in that State between the Mississippi and Missouri rivers.

Mr. GWIN gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce the following bills:

A bill to make a donation of the public lands to the State of California, for the purpose of constructing a railroad and telegraph line from the city of San Francisco to the Colorado river, or South eastern boundary of said State, with a branch passing through the valley of the Sacramento river to the boundary line between said State and the Territory of Oregon;

A bill to establish a line of mail steamers from San Francisco to California, via the Sandwich Islands, to Shanghai, in China;

A bill to authorize the appointment of a United States district judge for the Southern district of California, and for other purposes;

A bill to pay the expenses incurred by the State of California for the suppression of Indian hostilities in said State.

NEWSPAPERS FOR SENATORS.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I desire to submit a resolution:

Ordered, That the members of the Senate shall, from the commencement of the present session, be supplied with five daily papers, or publications equivalent thereto, in lieu of the number heretofore ordered.

The object is, Mr. President, merely to add one additional daily paper to those that are now allowed to the members of the Senate.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

Mr. SEWARD submitted the following resolution for consideration; which lies over under the rules:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not in his opinion incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to the Senate any correspondence that may have taken place between the Government of the United States and his Majesty the King of the Sandwich Islands.

SICKNESS IN EMIGRANT SHIPS.

Mr. FISH. Mr. President, I have a resolution to offer, which, if there be no objection, I ask may be considered at the present time:

Resolved, That a select committee of five be appointed to consider the causes and the extent of the sickness and mortality prevailing on board of emigrant ships on the voyage to this country; and whether any, and what, further legislation is needed for the better protection of the health and lives of passengers on board of such vessels.

Mr. HAMLIN. It seems to me that there would be propriety in allowing the resolution to lie over until the appropriate committee to which the subject should be referred shall be appointed. I desire to inquire what would be the appropriate reference for the subject.

Mr. FISH. The resolution proposes the appointment of a select committee. I am not aware of any standing committee to which the subject could be appropriately referred. It is a subject of vast and vital importance. Vessels are arriving with a thousand passengers a day at a single port, almost entirely decimated on the voyage by the prevailing sickness. There should be no delay, but prompt action. I desire to have the subject taken up and considered as soon as possible.

Mr. ADAMS. I am not disposed to object to the resolution, but it occurs to me that it would be better to have the President's message before proceeding with other business.

The PRESIDENT. If there be any objection the resolution cannot now be considered.

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not wish to interpose any objection; but I think this is a legislative matter, and it is entirely unusual to proceed with legislative business until the organization of both Houses. I have no objection, however, to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. MASON. I submit to the Senator from New York, whether this is a very proper subject of inquiry until the two Houses are organized and ready for business, and have received the recommendations of the Executive. Let the resolution go over.

Mr. FISH. Let it lie over.

The resolution accordingly lies over under the rule.

APPOINTMENT OF CHAPLAINS.

Mr. BRIGHT offered the following resolution; which was considered, by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That two Chaplains of different denominations be appointed for the present session, one by each House, and to interchange weekly between the two Houses.

ABSENT SENATORS.

The absent Senators were—
Mr. WILLIAMS, of New Hampshire,
Mr. TOUCEY, of Connecticut,
Mr. BUTLER, of South Carolina,
Mr. TOOMBS, of Georgia,
Messrs. FITZPATRICK and CLAY, of Alabama,
Mr. DIXON, of Kentucky,
Mr. JONES, of Tennessee,
Mr. GEYER, of Missouri,
Mr. SEBASTIAN, of Arkansas,
Messrs. MORTON and MALLORY, of Florida,
Messrs. RUSK and HUSTON, of Texas, and
Mr. WALKER, of Wisconsin.
The Senate adjourned until twelve o'clock tomorrow.

The Members elect, for the Thirty-Third Congress, having assembled in the Hall of the House of Representatives at precisely twelve o'clock, m., JOHN W. FORNEY, Esq., Clerk of the House for the last Congress, called the House to order, and said:

This being the day fixed by the Constitution of the United States for the meeting of Congress, I will now proceed, with the assent of the House, to call the roll of the Members and Delegates elect, and request that such as are present will be pleased to answer to their names.

The roll of Members was then called.

The following members of the above list did not answer to their names, viz:

The Clerk thereupon announced that a quorum had answered to their names.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS.

MR. OLDS. I move that the House do now proceed viva voce to elect a Speaker for the present Congress.

The motion was agreed to; and Messrs. INGERSOLL, of Connecticut, CHANDLER, of Pennsylvania, DAVIS, of Indiana, and EWING, of Kentucky, were appointed tellers to count the votes.

The Clerk then proceeded to call the roll, and the following was the result: Whole number of votes, 217; necessary to a choice, 109; of which—

Linn Boyd received.....	143
Joseph R. Chandler.....	35
Lewis D. Campbell.....	11

For Mr. James L. Orr—Messrs. Aiken, Boyce, Brooks, and McQueen.

For Mr. John G. Miller—Messrs. Samuel Caruthers, Lindley, and Mordecai Oliver.

For Mr. Thomas M. Howe—Messrs. Lewis D. Campbell and Meacham.

For Mr. Preston—Messrs. Cox, Haven, and Zollcoffer.

For Mr. Millson—Mr. Keitt.

For Mr. Ashe—Mr. Clingman.

For Mr. Breckinridge—Mr. Sollers.

The Clerk then, addressing the House, said, LINN BOYD having received a majority of all the votes given, I hereby declare him duly elected Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States for the Thirty-Third Congress.

The SPEAKER elect was then conducted to the chair by Messrs. ORR and CHANDLER.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen of the House of Representatives: By the vote just given you have manifested a degree of respect for, and confidence in me peculiarly gratifying to my feelings, and for it you have my sincere thanks. Confidently relying upon your kindly cooperation—without which it were vain to hope for success—and guided, as I trust I shall be, by a sleepless desire to maintain order and promote the harmony of this body by a faithful execution of its laws, I engage in the duties assigned me with no feeling to gratify inconsistent with the claims of impartial justice, no aim to accomplish inconsistent with the country's good. [Applause.]

MR. GIDDINGS, the oldest consecutive member of the House, then administered to the SPEAKER the customary oath to support the Constitution of the United States.

The Members were then called by States, and approaching the Chair were severally qualified by taking the usual oath to support the Constitution of the United States.

MR. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that a message be sent to the Senate, informing that body that a quorum of the House of Representatives has assembled, and elected LINN BOYD, a Representative from the State of Kentucky, its Speaker. The motion was agreed to.

RULES OF THE HOUSE.

MR. MACE. I move that the rules of the last House be adopted as the rules of the present House, with the following amendments:

No debate shall be had in the House, in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, or in Committee of the Whole House, but what is upon or german to the subject under consideration, except in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union when the President's message is under consideration, at which time any latitude may be given to debate consistent with the decorum of the House. No rule shall conflict with this rule.

Rule.—When a bill is reported from a committee, it shall be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, or to the Committee of the Whole House, and placed upon the Calendar in its order, without debate, unless otherwise ordered by a vote of two thirds of the House.

MR. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I would ask the gentleman from Indiana to allow me to submit a substitute for his motion.

MR. MACE. I will yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

MR. CAMPBELL. Then I offer the following as a substitute:

Resolved, That the rules of the last House of Representatives be adopted as the rules of this House until otherwise ordered: Provided, however, That there shall be appointed a committee of five members to revise said rules, which committee shall have power to report at any time, and their report shall be acted upon by the House until disposed of, to the exclusion of all other business; anything in the rules hereby temporarily adopted to the contrary notwithstanding.

MR. MACE. I wish to state very briefly, not for the information of any gentleman who served upon this floor during the last Congress, that it is my anxious desire upon this occasion to endeavor to place the rules of this House in such a condition as will enable us to do the business of the country.

Let me say a word then in reference to the first amendment which I propose. The order of things during the whole of last Congress, seemed to be this: after the expiration of the morning hour, some gentleman would move to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose, as was supposed, of transacting the business which appeared on the Calendar; but, instead of that, the very moment we got into committee, under the latitude of debate which was allowed there, the universal practice with all of us was, to stand upon this floor and make nothing but Buncombe speeches. This was the case, day after day. Now, sir, I am not adverse to such speeches, and gentlemen will perceive that I have made a provision in the amendment which I have offered, which will enable us to engage in that kind of debate whenever a majority of the House wishes to indulge in it. Consequently, by the amendment which I propose, whenever it is the wish of the House to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and take up the message of the President, then debate will open upon any and all subjects; but unless the message is under consideration, the provision which I have offered will confine members as much to the matter immediately under consideration in the committee as they are confined by the rules when in the House. I think, therefore, that the beneficial character of my amendment must be apparent. If it be not adopted, we shall have a repetition of the scenes enacted at the last session of Congress.

Mr. Speaker, in reference to the second proposition, I beg gentlemen, and especially gentlemen who were present here at the last session, to give the subject their earnest and undivided attention. Now, it will be remembered, at the first session of the last Congress, that when engaged under the rules, in calling upon the committees for reports, we progressed as far as the Committee on the Public Lands. At that point we stalled, and there remained for nine months, or until we adjourned; and what was the reason?

[Here a message was received from the Senate by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., its Secretary, notifying the House that a quorum of that body had assembled, and were ready to proceed to business.]

Mr. MACE, (resuming.) What was the reason of our stalling at the Committee on the Public Lands? Some four hundred subjects had been referred to that committee, and I do not make any reflection upon its members on this occasion, nor did I at the last session, for their course of conduct. They were desirous, as all committees were, to get in their reports before the House; and, under the rules, a member of that committee had nothing to do during the morning hour—the only hour during which reports were received—than to report a bill from his committee, occupy the whole of that hour in the discussion of the merits of the bill, and when the hour expired move that it be recommitted to his committee. And there was an end of the calling of committees for that day, as a matter of course. Under the provision which I offer, I have attempted to guard and place business in such a condition that if a bill be reported from a committee, and it be essential that the House should act upon it at once, that two thirds of the House can so order it. Unless that necessity exists, bills from all committees will be placed upon the calendar in their order, and be discussed when they come up in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. So that I think that I have fortified against that great abuse which existed at the last session of Congress. Now, I am aware that, during the last session, many gentlemen supposed our rules were efficient; that they were proper for the guidance of the House. But as one member of the last Congress I protested that such was not the fact; and I say now to gentlemen, that every man who wishes to legislate and transact the business of the country, and to pass affirmatively or negatively upon measures, that unless he vote for the adoption of the rule about which I am talking, that but little legislation will be done. There is a class of men who believe that no legislation should be had, and for the purposes of that class of men there never was a better set of rules adopted than the one of the last session.

COMMITTEES.

Mr. OLDS. I would ask the gentleman to give way for a moment, so that a motion may be made to appoint a committee on the part of the House to join the committee on the part of the Senate to wait upon the President of the United States, and inform him that we are assembled and ready to receive any message he may have to make. The gentleman's proposition may give rise to considerable debate, and as the House is organized, I think that it is best we should have the message first.

Mr. MACE. I have no objection to yield for the purpose indicated.

Mr. OLDS. Then I move that a committee of three be appointed on the part of the House to meet the committee on the part of the Senate, to wait on the President of the United States, and inform him that a quorum of each House is present, and ready to receive any communication he may have to make.

Mr. McMULLIN. I suggest that all the proposed proceedings be postponed until we shall have elected a Clerk. I would request the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MACE] to withdraw his proposition until after the House shall have proceeded to the election of a Clerk.

Mr. MACE. I should be very much gratified to accommodate my friend, but I see no reason why the motion I make should take up much of the time of the House. I will, however, yield for a moment to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. OLDS,] in order to enable him to make the motion indicated by him.

Mr. OLDS. I now submit the motion which I have stated, in reference to the appointment of a committee on the part of the House, to meet a committee on the part of the Senate, to wait upon the President of the United States, and inform him that the two Houses are organized, and are ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER thereupon appointed Messrs. OLDS, of Ohio, CHANDLER, of Pennsylvania, and BAYLY, of Virginia, as members of such committee.

THE RULES AGAIN.

Mr. MACE. I am not disposed to take up the time of the House in useless discussion. I have submitted these propositions; they are perfectly intelligible, as every gentleman upon the floor must see, and they are fully understood by most of them.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I am opposed to the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. MACE,] particularly the first branch of it. In a Government like ours, I think the largest latitude of debate should be allowed, which a convenient dispatch—not a hasty dispatch—but which a convenient dispatch of the public business will allow. By our rules we have already restricted debate, to some extent, in the House of Representatives; but the result of the adoption of that rule, would be to preclude all debate upon general subjects in the House of Representatives, except during the first eight or ten days of the session. That general debate is allowed by that resolution only when in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the President's message. That message is usually referred in eight or ten days, and it certainly ought to be referred after the allowance of some eight or ten days for debate upon its recommendations, because it is known, by the rules of this House, that the committees can originate nothing, but can only act upon subjects referred to them by the House; and, until the message is cut up and referred to the appropriate committees, that largest basis of action for the committees is withheld from them. After the President's message has been referred, with a long session of Congress before us, no general debate could arise in this House.

I think myself that the practice of general debate in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union is a wholesome one, and I have not seen, in a pretty long experience in this House, any great mischief arising from those debates. This House has the power to stop debate whenever it is weary of it, and it has been its practice, constantly, as soon as they thought that general debate had proceeded to a reasonable extent under the rule, to stop the debate; and it seems to me, with that rule recognized and constantly acted upon, the House has it in its power to protect itself from all interminable and useless debate.

Sir, it was the first position that I assumed which causes me to be most earnest in my opposition to that resolution. It is putting a trammel upon us, which it seems to me is inconsistent with the spirit of our Government. Besides these considerations, there is another one, and that is, it would lower and degrade the dignity of this House. It is a question of propriety—a new Administration is coming into power. We have an unprecedentedly large Democratic majority upon this floor, and the opposition is comparatively small. It does seem to me, in this view of the case, that this immense majority has it already in its power to check unreasonable debate. It does seem to me that with so large a Democratic majority, with a Democratic Administration just coming into power, at a time, too, when the Whigs are so feeble, that it would not have the most captivating aspect for us for the first time to introduce a resolution restricting debate in this House.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I do not rise for the purpose of discussing the old rules of this House. It is certainly evident to every man who knows anything about the matter, that there are just grounds of complaint. You know there are, Mr. Speaker. This House knows it, and the country knows it. This is the only period of the session at which we can provide against the difficulties existing in the rules of this House. If the old rules are temporarily adopted without any provision looking to a revision and expeditious action, the very force of the rules themselves is such, as to prevent any modification or amendments. I propose, Mr. Speaker, not to introduce amendments in detail now, but simply that this whole subject shall be referred to a committee, with a provision that they shall have power to report at any time, and that this House shall be compelled to act upon this report to the exclusion of everything else.

I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MACE] accepts my substitute.

Mr. MACE. I accept the substitute of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CAMPBELL,] as an additional amendment.

Mr. CAMPBELL. There is another reason which I desire to offer. The honorable gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] has adverted to the fact, that the Democratic party has an overwhelming majority in this House. That is true. But I wish him to understand, and I wish that Democratic majority to understand, although there are but few Whigs here, as the honorable gentleman remarked, yet that these few, and the country, will hold the large Democratic power in this House to a strict responsibility for their legislation. We want them to understand, that we come forward with readiness and willingness to assist them in sweeping away the evils that have existed heretofore. We do not intend that they shall go back to the country, if their legislation is not correct, with that old and worn-out excuse that the rules of the House have prevented them from adopting proper legislation. I would inquire of the Speaker what would be the effect of moving the previous question upon this proposition? Would it be to bring the House to a vote upon my amendment?

The SPEAKER. A motion for the previous question would not cut off debate. In other words, it would open the motion for the previous question itself to debate, but would cut off all amendments.

Mr. DUNHAM. I would inquire if the adoption of the previous question would not cut off the amendment itself of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CAMPBELL?]

The SPEAKER. The previous question, if sustained, would cut off the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio under the operation of parliamentary law.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If that will be the effect, then I will not make the motion. I understood the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. MACE,] however, to accept my proposition as a part of his own resolution.

Mr. MACE. I accept the gentleman's proposition as a part of my own.

The SPEAKER. With that understanding,—if the gentleman from Indiana accepts the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio as his own,—

then that is the only proposition before the House, and the effect of the previous question, when sustained, will be to bring the House to a direct vote upon that proposition.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I then move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. There seems to be some misunderstanding in relation to the acceptance of the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CAMPBELL.] I understood the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MACE] to accept it absolutely as a substitute for his own proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understands it.

Mr. STANTON. But there is some misunderstanding in relation to it. Other gentlemen understand it differently.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. As I understand the matter, the gentleman from Indiana accepted the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio as an addition to his own, and as a portion of it, so that both resolutions are now before the House as the original proposition of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. MACE.]

The SPEAKER. With that explanation the resolutions as they now stand will be reported to the House.

The resolutions were again read by the Clerk, as inserted above.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. The two resolutions are utterly inconsistent with each other; and, therefore, I say that for the gentleman from Indiana to accept the resolution of the gentleman from Ohio, as a part of his own proposition, and for the two to stand together, is an absurdity in itself. I prefer the resolution offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I agree with the gentleman from Tennessee, that there is a misunderstanding in relation to this subject. I wish a separate vote upon my own proposition, and I therefore call for a division of the question.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I desire to inquire of the Chair, if this subject is debatable under parliamentary law?

The SPEAKER. It is not debatable, the previous question having been ordered. What the Chair stated, was that the motion for the previous question itself was debatable.

Mr. GIDDINGS. It is with reference to that point that I rose. Gentlemen will recollect that when the motion for the previous question was made, the Chair did not listen to several gentlemen who rose to speak upon it before putting the question. I move that the whole subject be laid upon the table.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I beg to know what would be the effect of laying the whole subject on the table? Would it have an effect on any future motion on the adoption of the rules?

The SPEAKER. None whatever, the Chair thinks, for we have no rules now, except the parliamentary rules and usage.

Mr. STEPHENS. Then I will vote for the adoption of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that in another form that proposition may be made.

The question was then taken on laying the whole subject upon the table, and decided in the negative.

The Chair then stated, that the question would be upon the first proposition, which the Clerk read, as follows:

Resolved, That the rules of the last House of Representatives be adopted as the rules of this House until otherwise ordered: Provided, That there shall be appointed a committee of five members to revise the said rules, which committee shall have power to report at any time; and the report shall be acted on by the House, until disposed of, to the exclusion of all other business; anything in the rules hereby temporarily adopted to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. HAVEN. I desire to know if the vote now to be taken is on the proposition just read, or on that made by the gentleman from Ohio?

The SPEAKER. I propose to put the question on the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana.

After inquiry from the Clerk, however, the Chair said that the proposition was that of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. HAVEN. I hope that the House will adopt it.

Mr. STANTON. If I understand the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio, it is to be put as an amendment to that of the gentleman from Indiana.

The SPEAKER. Such is not the decision of the Chair. The impression of the Chair is, that the gentleman from Indiana adopted the proposition made by the gentleman from Ohio as a part of the original proposition. It is, therefore, the same proposition, though it is to be voted on in different branches.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. As the gentleman from Indiana adopted the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio, and made it a part of his, on the division of the question I suppose that the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana is first to be voted on, that being the first branch of the proposition as it stands.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana will please to state the order in which he desires the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio to stand.

Mr. MACE. I stated expressly when the gentleman from Ohio offered his resolution that I adopted that as part of my proposition.

The SPEAKER. So the Chair understood it; but does the gentleman not think it would be better for it to precede his original proposition?

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. Upon the first branch of that proposition I demand the yeas and nays.

[Loud cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. BAYLY. Well, I will withdraw the call, as that seems to be the wish of the House.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Do I understand the gentleman to say that he withdraws the call for the yeas and nays?

Mr. BAYLY. Yes, sir, I withdraw it.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I renew the call.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then taken on Mr. MACE's proposition; and it was rejected.

The question recurring on Mr. CAMPBELL's resolution, it was put, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to reconsider the vote by which that resolution was adopted, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was put on the latter motion, and it was agreed to.

ELECTION OF CLERK OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I move that the House do now proceed to the election of a Clerk.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DEAN. I believe it is customary to put in nomination individuals to be voted for for this office.

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. DEAN then nominated JOHN W. FORNEY, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. WHEELER nominated RICHARD M. YOUNG, of Illinois.

Mr. CARPENTER nominated E. P. SMITH, of New York.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine, nominated EBENEZER HUTCHINSON, of Maine; and Mr. BENNETT nominated PHILANDER B. PRINDLE, of New York.

Messrs. DEAN, WASHBURN, of Maine, CARPENTER, and WHEELER, were appointed tellers to take the vote.

The roll was then called, and the following was the result of the vote, viz:

Whole number of votes given, 200; necessary to a choice, 101; of which—

John W. Forney received.....	121
Richard M. Young.....	27
P. B. Prindle.....	18
E. Hutchinson.....	13
E. P. Smith.....	10
James C. Walker.....	6
W. H. Rogart.....	2
J. M. Barclay.....	1
Chas. Brown, of Philadelphia.....	1
Geo. W. Mumford.....	1

The following is the vote in detail:

For Mr. Forney—J. C. Allen, D. J. Bailey, Thos. H. Bayly, N. P. Banks, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bissell, Bliss, Boyd, Breckinridge, Bridges, Chamberlain, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchill, Clark, Cobb, Colquitt, Craig, Curtis, John G. Davis, Thos. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dent, Disney, Dowdell, Drum, Dunbar, Dunham, Eastman, Eddy, Edgerton, Elliott, Ellison, English, Faulkner, Fenton, Florence, Fuller, Gamble, Green, Grow, Hamilton, A. J. Harlan, S. W. Harris, W. P. Harris, Hastings, Hendricks, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Hughes, Ingersoll, Johnson, D. T. Jones, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Lilly, Lindsay, McDonald, McDougal, McMullin, McNair, Macy, Maxwell, May, Mayall, S. Miller, Morrison, Mullenberg, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Olds, A. Oliver, Orr, Packer, Peck, Peckham, B. Perkins, J. E. Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Pratt, Richardson, Riddle, Thos. Ritchey, Robbins, Rowe, Ruffin, Seymour, Shannon, Shower, S. A. Smith, Wm. Smith, Snodgrass, F. P. Stanton, R. H. Stanton, H. S. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, D. Stuart, J. J. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walker, Warren, Wells, J. Wentworth, Westbrook, Witte, and H. B. Wright.

For Mr. Young—Messrs. Abercrombie, Ashe, Bell, Benton, Bugg, Caskie, Etheridge, Goode, A. Harlan, Keitt, Kerr, Knox, Letcher, Lyon, McQueen, Millson, Powell, Puryear, Reese, Rogers, Sapp, Shaw, A. H. Stephens, Walsh, Wheeler, Yates, and Zollicoffer.

For Mr. Hutchinson—Messrs. E. B. Hutchinson, L. D. Campbell, Chandler, Cook, Culham, Everhart, Farley, Goodrich, Howe, Ready, E. B. Washburn, I. Washburn, and Benson.

For Mr. Smith—Messrs. Appleton, Carpenter, Chase, Flagler, Hiester, McCulloch, Matteson, Middlesworth, Pringle, and Russell.

For Mr. Walker—Messrs. Clingman, Corwin, Ewing, Hunt, S. W. Parker, and J. L. Taylor.

For Mr. Barclay—Mr. Meacham.

For Mr. Bogart—Messrs. Morgan and Sage.

For Charles Brown—Mr. Boocock.

For G. W. Mumford—Mr. Edmundson.

Mr. FORNEY was then duly qualified by taking the oath to support the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. For the purpose of saving time, I offer the following resolution for the election of the three old officers—the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Doorkeeper, and Postmaster. I suppose there will be no objection to it:

Resolved, That J. Glossbrenner be hereby appointed Sergeant-at-Arms, Zadoc W. McKnew, Doorkeeper, and J. M. Johnson, Postmaster of the House of Representatives for the present Congress.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

DRAWING FOR SEATS.

Mr. MCNAIR offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk of this House, immediately after the passage of this resolution, place in a box the name of each member and delegate of the House of Representatives, written on a separate slip of paper; that he then proceed, in the presence of the House, to draw from said box, one at a time, the said slips of paper, and as each is drawn he shall announce the name of the member or delegate upon it, who shall choose his seat for the present session: Provided, That, before said drawing shall commence, the Speaker shall cause every seat to be vacated, and shall see that every seat continues vacant until it is selected under this order.

Mr. HILLYER. I wish to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCNAIR] an amendment to his proposition, which I have no doubt he will adopt. It is that the Speaker cause the members of the House to retire beyond the bar.

Mr. MCNAIR. I accept the amendment, and call for the previous question.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. From the reading of the resolution it would appear, that members who have not yet arrived are deprived of the opportunity of drawing seats under this resolution.

VOICES. "Certainly." "That's right."

Mr. SMITH, of Alabama. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will withdraw his resolution until I can make a suggestion.

[Cries of "No!" "No!" all over the House.]

Mr. MACE. I move the House adjourn.

[Cries of "No, no!" "Yes, yes!"]

The motion was put, and the House refused to adjourn.

The resolution was adopted.

The House then proceeded to execute its order, and the members retired without the bar. The roll was called and the drawing proceeded, each member, as his name was announced, selecting his seat.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. ENGLISH. I desire to give notice that I will on to-morrow, or some subsequent day, ask leave to introduce—

I. A bill to constitute the city of Jeffersonville, in the State of Indiana, a port of delivery;

II. Also, a bill donating a portion of the public lands to aid in the construction of a railroad from the Falls of the Ohio river to a point on the Mississippi river opposite the city of St. Louis;

III. Also, a bill to reduce the price of the public lands in certain cases.

Mr. DAWSON. I give notice that on to-morrow, or some subsequent day I will introduce a bill of the following title:

A bill to encourage agriculture, commerce, manufactures, and all other branches of industry, by granting to every man who is the head of a family, and a citizen of the United States, a tract of one hundred and sixty acres of land out of the public domain, upon condition of occupancy and cultivation of the same, &c.

Mr. GROW. I give notice, that on to-morrow, or some subsequent day, I will introduce a bill for the encouragement of agriculture and every other branch of industry, by granting to every actual settler upon the public domain one hundred and sixty acres of land.

HOOR OF MEETING.

Mr. McMULLIN. I move that, until otherwise ordered, twelve o'clock be fixed as the regular hour to which the House shall each day adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and

The House then adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 6, 1853.

Prayer by Rev. C. M. BUTLER, Chaplain to the Senate.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORGANIZATION OF THE TWO HOUSES.

The following message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. V. McKEAN, Chief Clerk:

Mr. President: I am directed to inform the Senate that a quorum of the House of Representatives has assembled; that LINN BORN, one of the Representatives from the State of Kentucky, has been chosen Speaker; JOHN W. FORNEY, of Pennsylvania, Clerk; and that the House is ready to proceed to business.

I am also directed to inform the Senate, that the House of Representatives has passed a resolution for the appointment of a committee, jointly with such committee as may be appointed on the part of the Senate, to wait on the President of the United States, and inform him that a quorum of the two Houses has assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make; and that Mr. OLDS, of Ohio, Mr. CHANDLER, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, have been appointed the committee on the part of the House.

On motion by Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, it was Ordered, That a committee of two members be appointed jointly with the committee appointed by the House of Representatives to wait on the President of the United States, and inform him that a quorum of each House has assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

On motion by Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, it was Ordered, That the committee be appointed by the President pro tem.

The PRESIDENT appointed Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, and Mr. BELL, of Tennessee, the committee.

PETITION.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, presented a petition of citizens of the State of Iowa, praying for the establishment of a new land district in that State; which was ordered to lie on the table until the standing committees shall be appointed.

HARBOR OF MICHIGAN CITY.

Mr. PETTIT submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a port of entry at Michigan City, in the State of Indiana, and also of making an appropriation to continue the improvement of the harbor at that place.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. CHASE gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to cede to the State of Ohio the unsold residue of the public lands remaining in that State.

He also gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to encourage agriculture, commerce, and manufactures, and other branches of industry, by granting to every head of a family, being a citizen of the United States, or having declared his intention to become a citizen, a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of the public domain, on condition of occupancy and cultivation for the period therein specified.

Mr. ADAMS gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to prevent the issue and circulation of notes of a less denomination than five dollars within the District of Columbia;

Also, a bill to reduce and graduate the price of the public lands;

Also, a bill making donations of land to the State of Mississippi to aid in the construction of the Southern Railroad; the New Orleans, Jackson, and Aberdeen Railroad; and the Central Railroad.

Mr. BRIGHT gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill providing for the surrender to the State of Indiana of certain bonds of that State held by the United States.

Mr. JOHNSON gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to grant to the State of Arkansas the right of way and alternate sections of the public lands to aid in the construction of a railroad from Gaine's Landing via Camden and Washington to Fulton, in Arkansas.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. GWIN. At the close of the last session of Congress, I pledged myself to the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. DODGE,] that I would assist him in passing the homestead bill after we got through the discussion and passage of the Pacific railroad bill. It is well known to the Senate that both bills failed during that session. I now give notice that I shall, to-morrow, or at some early day thereafter, ask leave to introduce the bill commonly known as the homestead bill.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS.

Mr. GWIN, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to make a donation of the public lands to the State of California, for the purpose of constructing a railroad and telegraph line from the city of San Francisco to the Colorado river, or southeastern boundary of said State, with a branch passing through the valley of the Sacramento river to the boundary line between said State and the Territory of Oregon; which was read the first time and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, as the committees are not yet formed, the bill can lie on the table for the present. But inasmuch as the subject is of some importance,—the road mentioned in the bill being the commencement of a great national road between the Pacific ocean and the Mississippi river,—I move that the bill be printed for the use of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

INDIANA UNIVERSITY LAND.

Mr. BRIGHT. Mr. President, on the last night of the last session of Congress, a bill was passed "to indemnify the State of Indiana for the failure of title to a township of land granted to said State on her admission into the Union in 1816." It received the signature of the Speaker of the House of Representatives; but, owing to some mistake on the part of some officer of the House, it was not brought to the Senate for the signature of the President of this body, and was not sent to the President of the United States, for his approval: and consequently it did not become a law. The matter at that time was very fully understood by the Senate, and there was no objection to the bill then. I hope there will be no objection now to my offering the bill and asking the unanimous consent of the Senate to pass it at this time.

There being no objection, leave to introduce the bill was granted; and it was read twice, and considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to authorize the Governor of the State of Indiana to select nineteen thousand and forty acres of land, out of any land of the United States in that State now subject to private entry, in lieu of one of the townships granted to the State for the use of the State university, by the act of April 16th, 1816, the title to which has been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States not to be in the State: provided, that the proceeds of the substituted land, when sold, shall be forever applied for the use of the Indiana University.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third read, read a third time, and passed.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Mr. President, on behalf of the joint committee appointed to wait on the President of the United States, and inform him that the two Houses of Congress are organized, and ready to proceed to business, and receive any communication he might have to make to them, I have to report that the committee performed the duty assigned to it, and the President of the United States replied that he would immediately communicate with the two Houses.

SIDNEY WEBSTER, Esq., Private Secretary of the President, shortly afterwards appeared below the bar, and said:

Mr. President: I am directed by the President of the United States, to deliver to the Senate several messages in writing.

The PRESIDENT. I will present to the Senate the annual message of the President of the United States. The message will be read.

The Secretary proceeded to read the message, which will be found in the proceedings of the House of Representatives.

The message having been read—

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, it was Ordered, That the usual number of the message and accompanying documents be printed.

Ordered, That ten thousand copies of the message and accompanying documents, in addition to the usual number, be printed for the use of the Senate.

UNITED STATES JUDICIAL SYSTEM.

Mr. CLAYTON submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President be respectfully requested to present to the Senate the plan referred to in his message to Congress this day, and which he is prepared to recommend, for the enlargement and modification of the present judicial system of the United States.

Mr. CLAYTON. I ask for the consideration of the resolution at this time.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Let it lie over.

The resolution accordingly lies over under the rules.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after a short time spent therein, the doors were reopened; and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 6, 1853.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. EWING informed the Chair that his colleague from Kentucky, Mr. CLEMENT S. HILL, who had not been qualified yesterday, was now in attendance and ready to take the customary oath.

Mr. RICHARDSON made a similar application on behalf of his colleague, Mr. WILLIS ALLEN.

The SPEAKER directed those gentlemen, and any others similarly circumstanced, to come forward and be qualified.

The usual oath to support the Constitution of the United States, was then administered by the Speaker to Messrs. HILL, ALLEN, and A. B. GREENWOOD.

The following officers of the House also came forward, and took the usual oath.

Mr. FORNEY, Clerk.

Mr. GLOSSBRENER, Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. McKNEW, Doorkeeper.

Mr. ASBURY DICKINS, Secretary of the Senate, entered and read the following message from that body:

IN SENATE, December 6, 1853.

Resolved, That a committee be appointed jointly with the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives, to wait on the President of the United States, and inform him that a quorum of each House has assembled, and that Congress is ready to receive any communication that he may be pleased to make.

Ordered, That Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, and Mr. BELL be the committee on the part of the Senate.

Attest, ASBURY DICKINS, Secretary.

Mr. STRAUB proposed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk cause to be furnished to the Representatives during the present session, such newspapers as they may respectively direct, the expense thereof not to exceed thirty dollars per annum.

Mr. GROW. A resolution of a similar effect passed the last Congress; and does it not remain in force until altered by a subsequent Congress?

The SPEAKER. If it be a law of Congress, it would have that effect.

The Speaker directed the Clerk to read the former resolution on the subject.

The Clerk then read the following resolution:

"Resolved, That during and for the present session, and every subsequent session of Congress, each Representative and Delegate of Congress be furnished with such newspapers and publications as he shall select, not to exceed in amount per annum the cost of four daily papers."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The House of Representatives of the second session of the Thirty-Second Congress cannot pass resolutions for the House of Representatives of the Thirty-Third Congress.

Mr. STRAUB consented to withdraw his resolution.

Mr. EASTMAN. I ask the unanimous consent of the House for leave to introduce a joint resolution for the relief of Alexander P. Field, late Secretary of Wisconsin, and his sureties. And I also ask permission to offer a word or two of explanation, after which I am sure no person will object to the passage of the resolution.

This resolution was introduced in the Senate during the last Congress; it was referred to the Finance Committee, and by them reported back unanimously. It passed the Senate and was returned to this House, and by the House it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, amended by that committee, reported back to the House, and passed by this House. It was then signed by the Speaker and by the President of the Senate, but through an error of the Clerk, it was not returned to the Enrolling Committee, and therefore was not presented to the President for his signature. It was thus lost.

A MEMBER. Well, let us hear what it is.

Mr. EASTMAN. It is a joint resolution for the relief of A. P. Fields, late Secretary of the Territory of Wisconsin. It was introduced last Congress, at the express recommendation of Comptroller Whittlesey, to enable him to pass the accounts. There were some informalities in the vouchers, which made it necessary, in his opinion, that a resolution should be passed.

Mr. LETCHER. I should like to hear what amount the resolution proposes to take out of the Treasury.

Mr. EASTMAN. It takes nothing out of the Treasury. I will say further, that the joint resolution authorizes the accounting officers of the Treasury Department to pass certain accounts the vouchers of which are irregular. I will state further, that this matter has been standing for ten years, and during that time the original secretary has removed out of the Territory of Wisconsin, and a suit has been brought against the sureties, and this resolution is merely to enable those sureties, who have been at great trouble and expense to look up the vouchers, to settle the accounts. The joint resolution, I repeat, proposes to take nothing out of the Treasury. The moment it passes, the sureties are prepared to pay the balance into the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. Is the reception of the joint resolution objected to?

No objection was made.

The Clerk then read the joint resolution.

Mr. McMULLIN. I should prefer that the resolution be referred to one of the standing committees of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin will be entitled to the floor if he claims it.

Mr. McMULLIN. I object to the reception of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. It has already been received.

Mr. EASTMAN. I will state, for the information of the House, that the resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, at the last session, who took it up, item by item, and examined them critically. I move the previous question on the passage of the resolution.

The call for the previous question was seconded; and the main question was then ordered to be put.

The joint resolution was then ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and, being read a third time, it was passed.

Mr. ORR. I move that the House do now proceed to the election of a Chaplain.

Mr. EASTMAN. I rise to a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was just passed, and that that motion be laid upon the table.

The question was put, and the latter motion agreed to.

ELECTION OF CHAPLAIN.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. Orr,] that the resolution passed by the Senate, in reference to the election of a Chaplain, has not been acted upon as yet.

Mr. ORR. I move, then, that that resolution be taken up.

The SPEAKER. If not objected to, the resolution will be read.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would ask of the Chair what is the regular order of business under the rules?

The SPEAKER. Calling upon States for petitions.

Mr. JONES. Then I insist that we start right, and adhere to the strict order of business, so that we may see whether our proceedings are obstructed by the rules or by the members.

Mr. ORR. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Tennessee object to the taking up of the resolution?

The SPEAKER. He does object, and insists that we proceed to the consideration of the regular order of business, which is the call upon States for petitions.

Mr. ORR. Is not the proposition I have submitted a privileged question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows of no order of the House, or law of the two Houses, making a Chaplain an officer of the House; and, therefore, cannot decide that the proposition is a privileged one.

Mr. ORR. The election of a Chaplain is a part of the organization of the House.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Is not the election for Chaplain provided for in the joint rules of both Houses?

The SPEAKER. It is not. It is generally provided for by resolution adopted at the beginning of each Congress. Such is the recollection of the Chair.

Mr. STEPHENS. It appertains to the organization of the House, and I think has been held so heretofore.

The SPEAKER. It would do so, were there any law recognizing the Chaplain as an officer of the House.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I would ask the Speaker at what time the resolution adopted by the Senate for the election of Chaplains will be reached in the regular order of business?

The SPEAKER. It is impossible for the Chair to determine at what time it will be reached.

Mr. WENTWORTH. It would be greatly to the relief of members if we disposed of this Chaplain business. [Laughter.] The candidates are multiplying, and those whose names are now before us are getting uneasy. I am anxious to have the matter settled, and therefore ask that the rules be suspended to take up the Senate resolution, so that the rejected applicants may apply for some other office if they do not get this. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. It is not in order, except on Monday, to move that the rules be suspended. Petitions are now in order from the State of Maine.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Then I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there any objection to granting unanimous consent?

Mr. HAMILTON. I object.

The SPEAKER. Petitions are then in order from the State of Maine.

Mr. FULLER presented the petition of Uriah Hanscom, asking for an increase of pension, now on the navy list of invalid pensions; and that the same may be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. Also, the petition of William Pool, of Calais, Maine, asking that an arrears of ten years' pension may be granted to him.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would remind the gentleman from Maine that there is no Committee on Invalid Pensions yet constituted under the rules of the House.

Mr. DUNHAM. I wish to inquire whether it is in order for a member to introduce more than one petition at a time? My reason for asking the question is this: that if members are allowed to present any number of petitions they choose, those of us low on the list, will find a long calendar run up before our turn comes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks members may introduce more than one petition, but they are confined to the introduction of one resolution or one bill.

Mr. FULLER. I see the difficulty suggested by the Chair, and I inquire for information whether it is not in order to introduce petitions before the House is fully organized by the appointment of the committees, and be afterwards referred?

The SPEAKER. It is in order to introduce petitions, but they cannot be referred until the committees are established by the orders of the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. My recollection is, that at a last Congress an order was made to refer petitions, which were presented at an early period of the session, to the committees when they should be constituted. I am aware that there are no committees now, but I presume it is proper for us to say that petitions should be referred when the committees are raised; and if that course is pursued, it will certainly save a great deal of trouble, and prevent us from getting into a difficulty which will grow up if all these petitions are to go to the table, and afterwards be called up and referred by the action of the House. It seems to me that it is unnecessary to make the call if we do nothing with the petitions but put them upon the table.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of this body petitions may be introduced and referred under the rules of the House, when the committees are established, at the Clerk's table, under the general superintendence and inspection of the Speaker. The Chair apprehends little difficulty in giving the petitions their proper direction.

Mr. HOUSTON. The petition is better off in the hands of the members than upon the table.

The SPEAKER. That is a matter for the members to consider, and not for the Speaker.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is any one entitled to the floor, and is there any question before the House?

The SPEAKER. The business before the House is the call upon States for petitions.

Mr. JONES. I wish to make one suggestion to the House. If gentlemen will permit the States to be called for petitions, without presenting them, it will take but two or three minutes to get through with the call, and then the next business in order will be a call upon States for resolutions; and I have no doubt there will be plenty of them ready to be presented.

STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I offer the following resolution in order to complete the organization of the House:

Resolved, That the Speaker be authorized to appoint the standing committees of this House.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

CALL OF STATES FOR PETITIONS.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I ask leave to withdraw from the files of the House the petitions of sundry inhabitants of New Haven, Connecticut, asking for an appropriation by Congress for a custom-house at that place. Also, a petition of sundry inhabitants of Middlesex, Connecticut, asking for an appropriation for a breakwater at Westbrook, in said county.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

Mr. HUGHES. I ask leave to withdraw from the files of the House the papers of Alfred Nelson, and to refer them to the appropriate committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can ask leave to withdraw the papers, but they cannot be referred at this time.

Mr. FLORENCE. I ask leave to withdraw from the files of the House sundry petitions of inhabitants of Philadelphia, praying that Congress will so amend the act of September 28, 1850, as to give to the soldiers, sailors, and marines, that were engaged in the war of 1812, one hundred and sixty acres of land; and that they may be referred, when the committees are appointed, to the Committee on the Public Lands.

If it is in order, Mr. Speaker, I desire to instruct, with the consent of the House, that committee to report at an early day upon that subject. It is a subject upon which great interest is felt in the city and county of Philadelphia, and especially in the district which I have the honor to represent upon the floor of this House. There is a strong feeling existing among my constituents, that injustice has been done by Congress to the soldiers of the war of 1812, who made so great sacrifices in the defence of their country; and they ask that justice be done.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I rise to a question of order. The proposition of the gentleman is debatable, and of course it goes over under the rules.

Mr. FLORENCE. I ask that the petitions may be referred.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will repeat again, for the information of gentlemen present, that it is in order to introduce and refer petitions, without presenting them in open House, by application at the Clerk's desk. They cannot be referred, however, until there are committees appointed.

On motion by Mr. DAWSON, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of David Tate.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I desire to inquire of the Chair whether it be in order to postpone the further calling of petitions until one week from this day, at which time I apprehend the committees of the House will be constituted?

The SPEAKER. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask the unanimous consent of the House for that purpose.

Mr. GROW. I object.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is it not in order to make a motion to that effect?

The SPEAKER. Only by unanimous consent.

On motion by Mr. GROW, leave was granted for the withdrawal, from the files of the House, of the papers in the case of James F. Green.

Mr. GROW moved to refer the papers.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I propose to debate every motion to refer that may be made in reference to those matters.

Mr. GROW. I supposed the matter was left in such a way, that petitions could be referred to committees when they were constituted. If that is not the case, I will withdraw the motion.

On motion by Mr. HOWE, it was Ordered, That leave be granted for the withdrawal, from the files of the House, of the papers in the case of Alexander Stephenson.

On motion by Mr. McMULLIN, it was Ordered, That leave be granted for the withdrawal of the papers in the case of James R. King.

On motion by Mr. LETCHER, it was Ordered, That leave be granted for the withdrawal, from the files of the House, of the following papers:

Petition of sundry citizens of the western judicial district of Virginia, praying an increase of the salary of the judge of the United States for that district;

The petition of James Raynes for arrearages of pension; The petition of the legal representatives of Charles Porterfield, deceased, praying bounty land, commutation pay, and the reimbursement of advances made for the public service.

Mr. L. gave notice, that on to-morrow, or some subsequent day, he would introduce a bill of the following title:

A bill to change the times for holding the district courts of the United States, in the western district of Virginia, and for other purposes.

Mr. AIKEN presented, for the purpose of future reference, a memorial of the Charleston Chamber of Commerce, for an appropriation for a light ship and buoys at Cape Roman;

Also, a memorial from the Charleston Chamber of Commerce, praying further appropriation for the erection of a light on White Point Shoal, Charleston Harbor;

Also, a memorial from the Chamber of Commerce, for an appropriation for deepening the bar of Charleston harbor.

On motion by Mr. HILLYER, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers relating to the claim of Madison Parton. Also, the papers relating to the claim of Lewis Rawlston.

Mr. DOWDELL gave notice of a bill granting land to the State of Alabama, in aid of a railroad from Selma to Gadsden.

Mr. COBB gave notice of a bill to extend the time for payment of duty on railroad iron and for other purposes.

Also, a bill to authorize the school commissioner of fractional township No. 1, of range No. 10 east, in Alabama, to locate one section of land for school purposes.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky, asked leave to introduce a bill granting an indemnity for loss of a vessel during the revolutionary war. This application, he said, has been pending for many years, having passed through one or other of both Houses at almost every session. I propose that these papers, and the testimony to sustain the claim, may be read.

Mr. CLINGMAN. That course would give rise to debate.

Mr. STANTON. Well, I suppose we may as well consume the time of the House in that way as any other.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman insists on reading the papers, the sense of the House must be taken on it.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I propose to debate it if that course is to be taken.

Mr. STANTON. Well, I withdraw the motion.

Mr. DUNHAM asked leave to withdraw certain papers from the files.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana, presented a number of petitions from citizens of Indiana against the employment of Chaplains in both Houses of Congress, and in the Army and Navy of the United States.

Mr. D. said that he desired that they might be laid upon the table for the present, with the view of referring them to the Judiciary Committee, when appointed.

The SPEAKER. They will then lie upon the table.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, asked leave to withdraw from the files the papers in the case of the widow and heirs of Elijah Beebe, deceased, to be presented to the Committee on Indian Affairs, when constituted.

He also gave notice of his intention to introduce the following bills, viz:

A bill for the further improvement of the Rock Island and Des Moines rapids;

A bill providing for a grant of public lands to aid in the construction of a railroad from the city of Galena, in the State of Illinois, by the valley of the Tete de Mort through the State of Iowa, to the Great Bend of the Minnesota river, in Minnesota Territory;

A bill to improve the navigation of Galena river and the harbor of the city of Galena, Illinois;

A bill to complete the improvements of the harbor of Waukegan, Illinois;

A bill to erect a light-house on the western shore of Lake Michigan, at or near Port Clinton, Lake county, Illinois; and

A bill for the relief of Mrs. Helen McKay, widow of the late Colonel Eneas McKay, late Deputy Quartermaster General, United States Army.

Mr. WARREN gave notice of a bill donating a portion of the public lands to aid in the construction of the Mississippi, Ouichita, and Red River Railroad, in the State of Arkansas.

Mr. HENN. I wish to present a memorial and proceedings of a mass convention, held at Fort Madison, Iowa, on the 9th day of September, 1853, asking a grant of public lands to aid in the construction of the "Fort Madison, Keosauqua, and Bloomfield Railroad."

Also, the proceedings of a mass meeting of the citizens of Washington county, Iowa, in favor of a railroad to the Pacific, via the Platte River and Salt Lake.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman from Iowa permit me to make a suggestion to him?

Mr. HENN. Certainly.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Petitions, presented before the committees are appointed, under the decision of the Chair, go to the table, and it will require a motion and a vote of the House to take them up from the table. The gentleman, therefore, by presenting those memorials now, places them in such a position that he will not, perhaps, afterwards be able to dispose of them as he may desire.

The SPEAKER. That is the strict law of the House.

Mr. HENN. I apprehend that the practice of the House has been otherwise.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will remark that, by unanimous consent, petitions may be referred to the various committees when appointed.

Mr. HENN. I understand that the practice has been so to refer them.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the order of the House thus far, by unanimous consent, to be that the petitions presented shall be referred to the committees when appointed.

Mr. HENN. I also give notice that I will to-morrow, or on some future day, introduce bills of the following titles:

A bill to grant a homestead to settlers on the public lands, and to provide for the sale of the same to actual settlers only;

A bill to grant to the State of Iowa, a quantity of the public lands in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State.

I also ask leave to withdraw from the files, and to refer to the Committee on Public Lands, the joint resolutions of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Iowa, asking for grants of public lands to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State;

Also, resolutions asking the passage of a law granting a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of public lands to actual settlers.

No objection was made.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. I desire to introduce a bill to defray the expenses incurred in the difficulties with the Rogue River Indians.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. LANE. Then, sir, since objection is made, I give notice that I will introduce the bill on to-morrow, or on some future day. I ask leave to withdraw certain petitions and memorials which were referred to the Committee on Commerce at the last session of Congress, in order that they may be again presented and referred.

No objection being made, leave was granted.

JOINT COMMITTEE TO WAIT ON THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. OLDS, from the joint committee appointed to wait upon the President of the United States to inform him that a quorum of the two Houses of Congress had assembled, that they had organized and were prepared to receive any communication he might desire to make, reported that said committee had performed its duty, and that the President had answered that he would make a communication to the two Houses this day.

The SPEAKER stated that resolutions were in order from the State of Maine.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I ask leave to introduce the following bills, that they may be referred to the appropriate committees.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I object.

Mr. WASHBURN. My object, Mr. Speaker, was to introduce these bills so that they might be referred to some one of the standing committees when they were appointed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so stated.

Mr. WASHBURN. Is it not in order for me to introduce them, so that they may be referred?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will read the rule bearing on the question for the information of the House.

"The petitions having been presented and disposed of, reports from committees shall be called for and disposed of; in doing which the Speaker shall call upon each standing committee in the order they are named in the 76th and the 104th rules; and when all the standing committees shall have been called on, then it shall be the duty of the Speaker to call for reports from select committees; if the Speaker shall not get through the call upon committees before the House passes to other business, he shall resume the next call where he left off."

There were no committees to report, and hence the call for resolutions. The rule goes on:

"Resolutions shall then be called for in the same order, and disposed of by the same rules which apply to petitions: Provided, That no member shall offer more than one resolution, or one series of resolutions, all relating to the same subject, until all the States and Territories shall have been called."

The introduction of bills, when resolutions are called for, is not in order.

Mr. DEAN. I beg leave to introduce a joint resolution of thanks to Captain Duncan N. Ingraham.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. No notice has been given of that resolution.

The SPEAKER. Notice in this case is required, and if objection be made, the resolution cannot be introduced.

Mr. DUNHAM. I object to its introduction.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I object, for the reason that I deem action on the subject at this time premature.

Mr. DEAN. When States are called, I understand we have the right to offer resolutions and have them read.

The SPEAKER. That is the case in regard to resolutions of the House; but joint resolutions are on the same footing with bills.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I call for the reading of the 114th rule.

The rule was read by the Clerk, as follows:

"114. Every bill shall be introduced on the report of a committee, or by motion for leave. In the latter case, at least one day's notice shall be given of the motion in the House, or by filing memorandum thereof with the Clerk, and having it entered on the Journal; and the motion shall be made, and the bill introduced, if leave is given, when resolutions are called for: such motion, or the bill when introduced, may be committed."

Mr. DEAN. I now give notice that I shall move on the first Monday, that such a motion is allowable, that the rules be suspended for the introduction of the resolution, the title of which has just been read.

The SPEAKER. Resolutions are in order from the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. FLORENCE offered the following resolution:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That two Chaplains be elected, one by the Senate and the other by the House of Representatives, and that they officiate alternately during the present session of Congress.

Mr. FLORENCE. I submit this resolution at this time, believing that it will bring up that subject perfectly in order.

Mr. HAMILTON. It is not in order.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Being still of opinion that there is no authority under the Constitution to employ preachers or Chaplains of any denominations for this Government or this House of Representatives, and believing, further, that it is a burlesque upon the Christian religion to have a Chaplain in this House, I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. HAVEN. Upon that I ask the yeas and nays.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Does not this resolution come under that order of resolutions of which notice must be given?

The SPEAKER. It is a single resolution in reference to the organization of the House, requiring the concurrence of the two bodies, and is not in the nature of a law, and therefore is not required to be read three times. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The House was then divided upon the call for yeas and nays, and they were ordered; one fifth of the House voting in favor thereof.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

A message was here received from the President of the United States, by the hands of SIDNEY WEBSTER, his Private Secretary, transmitting to the House of Representatives his annual message and accompanying documents.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is there any question before the House.

The SPEAKER. There is; and it is this: Is it the unanimous consent of the House, that the President's message be read?

There being no objection, the message was read by the Clerk, as follows:

Fellow-citizens of the Senate and House of Representatives:

The interest with which the people of the Republic anticipate the assembling of Congress, and the fulfillment, on that occasion, of the duty imposed upon a new President, is one of the best evidences of their capacity to realize the hopes of the founders of a political system, at once complex and symmetrical. While the different branches of the Government are, to a certain extent, independent of each other, the duties of all, alike, have direct reference to the source of power. Fortunately, under this system, no man is so high, and none so humble, in the scale of public station, as to escape from the scrutiny, or to be exempt from the responsibility, which all official functions imply.

Upon the justice and intelligence of the masses, in a Government thus organized, is the sole reliance of the Confederacy, and the only security for honest and earnest devotion to its interests against the usurpations and encroachments of power on the one hand, and the assaults of personal ambition on the other.

The interest, of which I have spoken, is inseparable from an inquiring, self-governing community, but stimulated, doubtless, at the present time, by the unsettled condition of our relations with several foreign Powers; by the new obligations resulting from a sudden extension of the field of enterprise; by the spirit with which that field has been entered, and the amazing energy with which its resources for meeting the demands of humanity have been developed.

Although disease, assuming at one time the characteristics of a wide-spread and devastating pestilence, has left its sad traces upon some portions of our country, we have still the most abundant cause for reverent thankfulness to God for an accumulation of signal mercies showered upon us as a nation. It is well that a consciousness of rapid advancement and increasing strength be habitually associated with an abiding sense of dependence upon Him who holds in his hands the destiny of men and of nations.

Recognizing the wisdom of the broad principle of absolute religious toleration proclaimed in our fundamental law, and rejoicing in the benign influence which it has exerted upon our social and political condition, I should shrink from a clear duty, did I fail to express my deepest conviction, that we can place no secure reliance upon any apparent progress, if it be not sustained by national integrity, resting upon the great truths affirmed and illustrated by divine revelation. In the midst of our sorrow for the afflicted and suffering, it has been consoling to see how promptly disaster made true neighbors of districts and cities separated widely from each other, and cheering to watch the strength of that common bond of brotherhood, which unites all hearts, in all parts of this Union, when danger threatens from abroad, or calamity impends over us at home.

Our diplomatic relations with foreign Powers have undergone no essential change since the adjournment of the last Congress. With some of them, questions of a disturbing character are still pending, but there are good reasons to believe that these may all be amicably adjusted.

For some years past, Great Britain has so construed the first article of the convention of the 20th of April, 1818, in regard to the fisheries on the northeastern coast, as to exclude our citizens from some of the fishing grounds, to which they freely resorted for nearly a quarter of a century subsequent to the date of that treaty. The United States have never acquiesced in this construction, but have always claimed for their fishermen all the rights which they had so long enjoyed without molestation. With a view to remove all difficulties on the subject, to extend the rights of our fishermen beyond the limits fixed by the convention of 1818, and to regulate trade between the United States and the British North American provinces, a negotiation has been opened, with a fair prospect of a favorable result. To protect our fishermen in the enjoyment of their rights, and prevent collision between them and British fishermen, I deemed it expedient to station a naval force in that quarter during the fishing season.

Embarrassing questions have also arisen between the two Governments in regard to Central America. Great Britain has proposed to settle them by an amicable arrangement, and our Minister at London is instructed to enter into negotiations on that subject.

A commission for adjusting the claims of our citizens against Great Britain, and those of British subjects against the United States, organized under the convention of the 8th of February last, is now sitting in London for the transaction of business.

It is in many respects desirable that the boundary line between the United States and the British provinces in the northwest, as designated in the convention of the 15th of June, 1846, and especially that part which separates the Territory of Washington from the British possessions on the north, should be traced and marked. I therefore present the subject to your notice.

With France our relations continue on the most friendly footing. The extensive commerce between the United States and that country might, it is conceived, be released from some unnecessary restrictions, to the mutual advantage of both parties. With a view to this object, some progress has been made in negotiating a treaty of commerce and navigation.

Independently of our valuable trade with Spain, we have important political relations with her, growing out of our neighborhood to the Islands of Cuba and Porto Rico. I am happy to announce, that since the last Congress no attempts have been made, by unauthorized expeditions within the United States, against either of those colonies. Should any movement be manifested within our limits, all the means at my command will be vigorously exerted to repress it. Several annoying occurrences have taken place at Havana, or in the vicinity of the Island of Cuba, between our citizens and the Spanish authorities. Considering the proximity of that island to our shores,—lying, as it does, in the track of trade between some of our principal cities,—and the suspicious vigilance with which foreign intercourse, particularly that with the United States, is there guarded, a repetition of such occurrences may well be apprehended. As no diplomatic intercourse is allowed between our Consul at Havana and the Captain-General of Cuba, ready explanations cannot be made, or prompt redress afforded, where injury has resulted. All complaint on the part of our citizens, under the present arrangement, must be, in the first place, presented to this Government, and then referred to Spain. Spain again refers it to her local authorities in Cuba for investigation, and postpones an answer till she has heard from those authorities. To avoid these irritating and vexatious delays, a proposition has been made to provide for a direct appeal for redress to the Captain-General by our Consul, in behalf of our injured fellow-citizens. Hitherto, the Government of Spain has declined to enter into any such arrangement. This course on her part is deeply regretted; for, without some arrangement of this kind, the good understanding between the two countries may be exposed to occasional interruption. Our Minister at Madrid is instructed to renew the proposition, and to press it again upon the consideration of her Catholic Majesty's Government.

For several years Spain has been calling the attention of this Government to a claim for losses, by some of her subjects, in the case of the schooner Amistad. This claim is believed to rest on the obligations imposed by our existing treaty with that country. Its justice was admitted, in our diplomatic correspondence with the Spanish Government, as early as March, 1847; and one of my predecessors, in his annual message of that year, recommended that provision should be made for its payment. In January last it was again submitted to Congress by the Executive. It has received a favorable consideration by committees of both branches, but as yet there has been no final action upon it. I conceive that good faith requires its prompt adjustment, and I present it to your early and favorable consideration.

Martin Koszta, a Hungarian by birth, came to this country in 1851, and declared his intention, in due form of law, to become a citizen of the United States. After remaining here nearly two years, he visited Turkey. While at Smyrna, he was forcibly seized, taken on board an Austrian brig-of-war, then lying in the harbor of that place, and there confined in irons, with the avowed design to take him into the dominions of Austria. Our Consul at Smyrna and Legation at Constantinople interposed for his release, but their efforts were ineffectual. While thus imprisoned, Commander Ingraham, with the United States ship-of-war St. Louis, arrived at Smyrna, and, after inquiring into the circumstances of the case, came to the conclusion that Koszta was entitled to the protection of this Government, and took energetic and prompt measures for his release. Under an arrangement between the agents of the United States and of Austria, he was transferred to the custody of the French Consul-General at Smyrna, there to remain until he should be disposed of by the mutual agreement of the Consuls of the respective Governments at that place. Pursuant to that agreement he has been released, and is now in the United States. The Emperor of Austria has made the conduct of our officers who took part in this transaction a subject of grave complaint. Regarding Koszta as still his subject, and claiming a right to seize him within the limits of the Turkish empire, he has demanded of this Government its consent to the surrender of the prisoner, a disavowal of the acts of its agents, and satisfaction for the alleged outrage. After a careful consideration of the case, I came to the conclusion that Koszta was seized without legal authority at Smyrna; that he was wrongfully detained on board of the Austrian brig-of-war; that, at the time of his seizure, he was clothed with the nationality of the United States; and that the acts of our officers, under the circumstances of the case, were justifiable, and their conduct has been fully approved by me, and a compliance with the several demands of the Emperor of Austria has been declined.

For a more full account of this transaction and my views in regard to it, I refer to the correspondence between the chargé d'affaires of Austria and the Secretary of State, which is herewith transmitted. The principles and policy, therein maintained on the part of the United States, will, whenever a proper occasion occurs, be applied and enforced.

The condition of China, at this time, renders it probable that some important changes will occur in that vast empire, which will lead to a more unrestricted intercourse with it. The Commissioner to that country, who has been recently appointed, is instructed to avail himself of all occasions to open and extend our commercial relations, not only with the empire of China, but with other Asiatic nations.

In 1852, an expedition was sent to Japan, under the command of Commodore Perry, for the purpose of opening commercial intercourse with that Empire. Intelligence has been received of his arrival there, and of his having made known to the Emperor of Japan the object of his visit; but it is not yet ascertained how far the Emperor will be disposed to abandon his restrictive policy, and open that populous country to a commercial intercourse with the United States.

It has been my earnest desire to maintain friendly intercourse with the Governments upon this continent, and to aid them in preserving good understanding among themselves. With Mexico, a dispute has arisen as to the true boundary line between our Territory of New Mexico and the Mexican State of Chihuahua. A former commissioner of the United States, employed in running that line, pursuant to the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, made a serious mistake in determining the initial point on the Rio Grande; but, inasmuch as his decision was clearly a departure from the directions for tracing the boundary contained in that treaty, and was not concurred in by the surveyor appointed on the part of the United States, whose concurrence was necessary to give validity to that decision, this Government is not concluded thereby; but that of Mexico takes a different view of the subject.

There are also other questions of considerable magnitude pending between the two Republics. Our Minister in Mexico has ample instructions to adjust them. Negotiations have been opened, but sufficient progress has not been made therein to enable me to speak of the probable result. Impressed with the importance of maintaining amicable relations with that Republic, and of yielding with liberality to all her just claims, it is reasonable to expect that an arrangement mutually satisfactory to both countries may be concluded, and a lasting friendship between them confirmed and perpetuated.

Congress having provided for a full mission to the States of Central America, a Minister was sent thither in July last. As yet he has had time to visit only one of these States, (Nicaragua,) where he was received in the most friendly manner. It is hoped that his presence and good offices will have a benign effect in composing the dissensions which prevail among them, and in establishing still more intimate and friendly relations between them respectively, and between each of them and the United States.

Considering the vast regions of this continent, and the number of States which would be made accessible by the free navigation of the river Amazon, particular attention has been given to this subject. Brazil, through whose territories it passes into the ocean, has hitherto persisted in a policy so restrictive, in regard to the use of this river, as to obstruct, and nearly exclude, foreign commercial intercourse with the States which lie upon its tributaries and upper branches. Our Minister to that country is instructed to obtain a relaxation of that policy, and to use his efforts to induce the Brazilian Government to open to common use, under proper safeguards, this great natural highway for international trade. Several of the South American States are deeply interested in this attempt to secure the free navigation of the Amazon, and it is reasonable to expect their coöperation in the measure. As the advantages of free commercial intercourse among nations are better understood, more liberal views are generally entertained as to the common rights of all to the free use of those means which nature has provided for international communication. To these more liberal and enlightened views, it is hoped that Brazil will conform her policy, and remove all unnecessary restrictions upon the free use of a river, which traverses so many States and so large a part of the continent. I am happy to inform you that the Republic of Paraguay and the Argentine Confederation have yielded to the liberal policy, still resisted by Brazil, in regard to the navigable rivers within their respective territories. Treaties, embracing this subject among others, have been negotiated with these Governments, which will be submitted to the Senate at the present session.

A new branch of commerce, important to the agricultural interests of the United States, has, within a few years past, been opened with Peru. Notwithstanding the inexhaustible deposits of guano upon the islands of that country, considerable difficulties are experienced in obtaining the requisite supply. Measures have been taken to remove these difficulties, and to secure a more abundant importation of the article. Unfortunately, there has been a serious collision between our citizens, who have resorted to the Chincha Islands for it, and the Peruvian authorities stationed there. Redress for the outrages, committed by the latter, was promptly demanded by our Minister at Lima. This subject is now under consideration, and there is reason to believe that Peru is disposed to offer adequate indemnity to the aggrieved parties.

We are thus not only at peace with all foreign countries, but, in regard to political affairs, are exempt from any cause of serious disquietude in our domestic relations.

The controversies which have agitated the country heretofore, are passing away with the causes which produced them and the passions which they had awakened; or, if any trace of them remains, it may be reasonably hoped that it will only be perceived in the zealous rivalry of all good citizens to testify their respect for the rights of the States, their devotion to the Union, and their common determination that each one of the States, its institutions, its welfare, and its domestic peace shall be held alike secure under the sacred ægis of the Constitution.

This new league of amity and of mutual confidence and support, into which the people of the Republic have entered, happily affords inducement and opportunity for the adoption of a more comprehensive and unembarrassed line of policy and action, as to the great material interests of the country, whether regarded in themselves or in connection with the Powers of the civilized world.

The United States have continued gradually and steadily to expand, through acquisitions of territory, which, how much soever some of them may have been questioned, are now universally seen and admitted to have been wise in policy, just in character, and a great element in the advancement of our country, and, with it, of the human race, in freedom, in prosperity, and in happiness. The thirteen States have grown to be thirty-one, with relations reaching to Europe on the one side, and on the other to the distant realms of Asia.

I am deeply sensible of the immense responsibility which the present magnitude of the Republic, and the diversity and multiplicity of its interests, devolves upon me; the alleviation of which, so far as relates to the immediate conduct of the public business is, first, in my reliance on the wisdom and patriotism of the two Houses of Congress; and, secondly, in the directions afforded me by the principles of public polity, affirmed by our fathers of the epoch of 1798, sanctioned by long experience, and consecrated anew by the overwhelming voice of the people of the United States.

Recurring to these principles, which constitute the organic basis of union, we perceive that, vast as are the functions and the duties of the Federal Government, vested in, or intrusted to, its three great departments—the legislative, executive, and judicial—yet the substantive power, the popular force, and the large capacities for social and material development, exist in the respective States, which, all being of themselves well constituted Republics, as they preceded, so they alone are capable of maintaining and perpetuating the American Union. The Federal Government has its appropriate line of action in the specific and limited powers conferred on it by the Constitution, chiefly as to those things in which the States have a common interest in their relations to one another, and to foreign Governments; while the great mass of interests which belong to cultivated men, the ordinary business of life, the springs of industry, all the diversified personal and domestic affairs of society, rest securely upon the general reserved powers, of the people of the several States. There is the effective democracy of the nation, and there the vital essence of its being and its greatness.

Of the practical consequences which flow from the nature of the Federal Government, the primary one is the duty of administering with integrity and fidelity the high trust reposed in it by the Constitution, especially in the application of the public funds, as drawn by taxation from the people, and appropriated to specific objects by Congress. Happily I have no occasion to suggest any radical changes in the financial policy of the Government. Ours is almost, if not absolutely, the solitary Power of Christendom having a surplus revenue, drawn immediately from imposts on commerce, and therefore measured by the spontaneous enterprise and national prosperity of the country, with such indirect relation to agriculture, manufactures, and the products of the earth and sea, as to violate no constitutional doctrine, and yet vigorously promote the general welfare. Neither as to the sources of the public treasure, nor as to the manner of keeping and managing it, does any grave controversy now prevail, there being a general acquiescence in the wisdom of the present system.

The report of the Secretary of the Treasury will exhibit, in detail, the state of the public finances, and the condition of the various branches of the public service administered by that department of the Government.

The revenue of the country, levied almost insensibly to the tax-payer, goes on from year to year increasing beyond either the interests or the prospective wants of the Government.

At the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1852, there remained in the Treasury a balance of fourteen million six hundred and thirty-two thousand one hundred and thirty-six dollars. The public revenue for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1853, amounted to fifty-eight million nine hundred and thirty-one thousand eight hundred and sixty-five dollars from customs, and to two million four hundred and five thousand seven hundred and eight dollars from public lands and other miscellaneous sources, amounting together to sixty-one million three hundred and thirty-seven thousand five hundred and seventy-four dollars; while the public expenditures for the same period, exclusive of payments on account of the public debt, amounted to forty-three million five hundred and fifty-four thousand two hundred and sixty-two dollars; leaving a balance of thirty-two million four hundred and twenty-five thousand four hundred and forty-seven dollars of receipts above expenditures.

This fact, of increasing surplus in the Treasury, became the subject of anxious consideration at a very early period of my administration, and the path of duty in regard to it seemed to me obvious and clear, namely: first, to apply the surplus revenue to the discharge of the public debt, so far as it could judiciously be done; and secondly, to devise means for the gradual reduction of the revenue to the standard of the public exigencies.

Of these objects, the first has been in the course of accomplishment, in a manner and to a degree highly satisfactory. The amount of the public debt, of all classes, was, on the fourth of March, 1853, sixty-nine million one hundred and ninety thousand and thirty-seven dollars; payments on account of which have been made, since that period, to the amount of twelve million seven hundred and three thousand three hundred and twenty-nine dollars; leaving unpaid, and in the continuous course of liquidation, the sum of fifty-six million four hundred and eighty-six thousand seven hundred and eight dollars. These payments, although made at the market price of the respective classes of stocks, have been effected readily, and to the general advantage of the Treasury, and have, at the same time, proved of signal utility in the relief they have incidentally afforded to the money market and to the industrial and commercial pursuits of the country.

The second of the above-mentioned objects, that of the reduction of the tariff, is of great importance, and the plan suggested by the Secretary of the Treasury, which is to reduce the duties on certain articles, and to add to the free list many articles now taxed, and especially such as enter into manufactures, and are not largely, or at all, produced in the country, is commended to your candid and careful consideration.

You will find in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, also, abundant proof of the entire adequacy of the present fiscal system to meet all the requirements of the public service, and that, while properly administered, it operates to the advantage of the community in ordinary business relations.

I respectfully ask your attention to sundry suggestions of improvements in the settlement of accounts, especially as regards the large sums of outstanding arrears due to the Government, and of other reforms in the administrative action of his Department, which are indicated by the Secretary; as also to the progress made in the construction of marine hospitals, custom-houses, and of a new mint in California and assay office in the city of New York, heretofore provided for by Congress; and also to the eminently successful progress of the Coast Survey, and of the Light-House Board.

Among the objects meriting your attention, will be important recommendations from the Secretaries of War and Navy. I am fully satisfied that the Navy of the United States is not in a condition of strength and efficiency commensurate with the magnitude of our commercial and other interests; and commend to your especial attention the suggestions on this subject, made by the Secretary of the Navy. I respectfully submit that the Army, which, under our system, must always be regarded with the highest interest, as a nucleus around which the volunteer forces of the nation gather in the hour of danger, requires augmentation, or modification, to adapt it to the present extended limits and frontier relations of the country, and the condition of the Indian tribes in the interior of the continent; the necessity of which will appear in the communications of the Secretaries of War and the Interior.

In the administration of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1853, the gross expenditure was seven million nine hundred and eighty-two thousand seven hundred and fifty-six dollars; and the gross receipts during the same period, five million nine hundred and forty-two thousand seven hundred and thirty-four dollars; showing that the current revenue failed to meet the current expenses of the Department by the sum of two million forty-two thousand and thirty-two dollars. The causes which, under the present postal system and laws, led inevitably to this result, are fully explained by the report of the Postmaster General; one great cause being the enormous rates the Department has been compelled to pay for mail service rendered by railroad companies.

The exhibit in the report of the Postmaster General of the income and expenditures by mail steamers will be found peculiarly interesting, and of a character to demand the immediate action of Congress.

Numerous and flagrant frauds upon the Pension Bureau have been brought to light within the last year, and, in some instances, merited punishments inflicted; but, unfortunately, in others, guilty parties have escaped, not through the want of sufficient evidence to warrant a conviction, but in consequence of the provisions of limitation in the existing laws.

From the nature of these claims, the remoteness of the tribunals to pass upon them, and the mode in which the proof is, of necessity, furnished, temptations to crime have been greatly stimulated by the obvious difficulties of detection. The defects in the law upon this subject are so apparent, and so fatal to the ends of justice, that your early action relating to it is most desirable.

During the last fiscal year, nine million eight hundred and nineteen thousand four hundred and eleven acres of the public lands have been surveyed, and ten million three hundred and sixty-three thousand eight hundred and ninety-one acres brought into market. Within the same period, the sales by public purchase and private entry amounted to one million eighty-three thousand four hundred and ninety-five acres; located under military bounty land warrants, six million one hundred and forty-two thousand three hundred and sixty acres; located under other certificates, nine thousand four hundred and twenty-seven acres; ceded to the States as swamp lands, sixteen million six hundred and eighty-four thousand two hundred and fifty-three acres; selected for railroad and other objects, under acts of Congress, one million four hundred and twenty-seven thousand four hundred and fifty-seven acres. Total amount of lands disposed of within the fiscal year, twenty-five million three hundred and forty-six thousand nine hundred and ninety-two acres; which is an increase in quantity sold, and located under land warrants and grants, of twelve million two hundred and thirty-one thousand eight hundred and eighteen acres over the fiscal year immediately preceding. The quantity of land sold during the second and third quarters of 1852, was three hundred and thirty-four thousand four hundred and fifty-one acres. The amount received therefor, was six hundred and twenty-three thousand six hundred and eighty-seven dollars. The quantity sold the second and third quarters of the year 1853, was one million six hundred and nine thousand nine hundred and nineteen acres; and the amount received therefor, two million two hundred and twenty-six thousand eight hundred and seventy-six dollars.

The whole number of land warrants issued under existing laws, prior to the thirtieth of September last, was two hundred and sixty-six thousand and forty-two; of which there were outstanding, at that date, sixty-six thousand nine hundred and forty-seven. The quantity of land required to satisfy these outstanding warrants, is four million seven hundred and seventy-eight thousand one hundred and twenty acres.

Warrants have been issued to 30th of September last, under the act of 11th February, 1847, calling for twelve million eight hundred and seventy-nine thousand two hundred and eighty acres; under acts of September 28, 1850, and March 22, 1852, calling for twelve million five hundred and five thousand three hundred and sixty acres; making a total of twenty-five million three hundred and eighty-four thousand six hundred and forty acres.

It is believed that experience has verified the wisdom and justice of the present system, with regard to the public domain, in most essential particulars.

You will perceive, from the report of the Secretary of the Interior, that opinions, which have often been expressed in relation to the operation of the land system, as not being a source of revenue to the Federal Treasury, were erroneous. The net profits from the sale of the public lands to June 30, 1853, amounted to the sum of fifty-three million two hundred and eighty-nine thousand four hundred and sixty-five dollars.

I recommend the extension of the land system over the Territories of Utah and New Mexico, with such modifications as their peculiarities may require.

Regarding our public domain as chiefly valuable to provide homes for the industrious and enterprising, I am not prepared to recommend any essential change in the land system, except by modifications in favor of the actual settler, and an extension of the preemption principle in certain cases, for reasons, and on grounds, which will be fully developed in the reports to be laid before you.

Congress, representing the proprietors of the territorial domain, and charged especially with power to dispose of territory belonging to the United States, has, for a long course of years, beginning with the administration of Mr. Jefferson, exercised the power to construct roads within the Territories; and there are so many and obvious distinctions between this exercise of power and that of making roads within the States, that the former has never been considered subject to such objections as apply to the latter, and such may now be considered the settled construction of the power of the Federal Government upon the subject.

Numerous applications have been, and no doubt will continue to be, made for grants of land, in aid of the construction of railways. It is not believed to be within the intent and meaning of the Constitution, that the power to dispose of the public domain, should be used otherwise than might be expected from a prudent proprietor, and therefore, that grants of land to aid in the construction of roads should be restricted to cases where it would be for the interest of a proprietor, under like circumstances, thus to contribute to the construction of these works. For the practical operation of such grants thus far, in advancing the interests of the States in which the works are located, and at the same time the substantial interests of all the other States, by enhancing the value and promoting the rapid sale of the public domain, I refer you to the report of the Secretary of the Interior. A careful examination, however, will show that this experience is the result of a just discrimination, and will be far from affording encouragement to a reckless or indiscriminate extension of the principle.

I commend to your favorable consideration the men of genius of our country, who, by their inventions and discoveries in science and art, have contributed largely to the improvements of the age, without, in many instances, securing for themselves anything like an adequate reward. For many interesting details upon this subject I refer you to the appropriate reports, and especially urge upon your early attention the apparently slight, but really important modifications of existing laws therein suggested.

The liberal spirit which has so long marked the action of Congress in relation to the District of Columbia will, I have no doubt, continue to be manifested.

The erection of an asylum for the insane of the District of Columbia, and of the Army and Navy of the United States, has been somewhat retarded, by the great demand for materials and labor during the past summer; but full preparation for the reception of patients, before the return of another winter, is anticipated; and there is the best reason to believe, from the plan and contemplated arrangements which have been devised, with the large experience furnished within the last few years in relation to the nature and treatment of the disease, that it will prove an asylum indeed to this most helpless and afflicted class of sufferers, and stand as a noble monument of wisdom and mercy.

Under the acts of Congress of August 31, 1852, and of March 3, 1853, designed to secure for the cities of Washington and Georgetown an abundant supply of good and wholesome water, it became my duty to examine the report and plans of the engineer who had charge of the surveys under the first act named. The best, if not the only plan, calculated to secure permanently the object sought, was that which contemplates taking the water from the Great Falls of the Potomac, and, consequently, I gave to it my approval.

For the progress and present condition of this important work, and for its demands, so far as appropriations are concerned, I refer you to the report of the Secretary of War.

The present judicial system of the United States has now been in operation for so long a period of time, and has, in its general theory and much of its details, become so familiar to the country, and acquired so entirely the public confidence, that if modified in any respect, it should only be in those particulars which may adapt it to the increased extent, population, and legal business of the United States. In this relation, the organization of the courts is now confessedly inadequate to the duties to be performed by them; in consequence of which, the States of Florida, Wisconsin, Iowa, Texas, and California, and districts of other States, are in effect excluded from the full benefits of the general system, by the functions of the circuit court being devolved on the district judges in all those States, or parts of States.

The spirit of the Constitution and a due regard to justice require that all the States of the Union should be placed on the same footing in regard to the judicial tribunals. I therefore commend to your consideration this important subject, which, in my judgment, demands the speedy action of Congress. I will present to you, if deemed desirable, a plan, which I am prepared to recommend, for the enlargement and modification of the present judicial system.

The act of Congress establishing the Smithsonian Institution provided that the President of the United States, and other persons therein designated, should constitute an "establishment" by that name, and that the members should hold stated and special meetings for the supervision of the affairs of the Institution. The organization not having taken place, it seemed to me proper that it should be effected without delay. This has been done; and an occasion was thereby presented for inspecting the condition of the Institution, and appreciating its successful progress thus far, and its high promise of great and general usefulness.

I have omitted to ask your favorable consideration for the estimates of works of local character in twenty-seven of the thirty-one States, amounting to one million seven hundred and fifty-four thousand five hundred dollars, because, independently of the grounds which have so often been urged against the application of the Federal revenue for works of this character, inequality with consequent injustice is inherent in the nature of the proposition, and because the plan has proved entirely inadequate to the accomplishment of the objects sought.

The subject of internal improvements, claiming alike the interest and good will of all, has, nevertheless, been the basis of much political discussion, and has stood as a deep graven line of division between statesmen of eminent ability and patriotism. The rule of strict construction of all powers delegated by the States to the General Government has arrayed itself, from time to time, against the rapid progress of expenditures from the National Treasury on works of a local character within the States. Memorable as an epoch in the history of this subject is the message of President Jackson, of the 27th of May, 1830, which met the system of internal improvements in its comparative infancy; but so rapid had been its growth, that the projected appropriations in that year for works of this character had risen to the alarming amount of more than one hundred millions of dollars.

In that message the President admitted the difficulty of bringing back the operations of the Government to the construction of the Constitution set up in 1798, and marked it as an admonitory proof of the necessity of guarding that instrument with sleepless vigilance against the authority of precedents which had not the sanction of its most plainly defined powers.

Our Government exists under a written compact between sovereign States, uniting for specific objects, and with specific grants to their general agent. If, then, in the progress of its administration, there have been departures from the terms and intent of the compact, it is, and will ever be, proper to refer back to the fixed standard which our fathers left us, and to make a stern effort to conform our action to it. It would seem that the fact of a principle having been resisted from the first by many of the wisest and most patriotic men of the Republic, and a policy having provoked constant strife without arriving at a conclusion which can be regarded as satisfactory to its most earnest advocates, should suggest the inquiry whether there may not be a plan likely to be crowned by happier results. Without perceiving any sound distinction, or intending to assert any principle as opposed to improvements needed for the protection of internal commerce, which does not equally apply to improvements upon the seaboard for the protection of foreign commerce, I submit to you whether it may not be safely anticipated that, if the policy were once settled against appropriations by the General Government for local improvements for the benefit of commerce, localities requiring expenditures would not, by modes and means clearly legitimate and proper, raise the fund necessary for such constructions as the safety or other interests of their commerce might require.

If that can be regarded as a system, which, in the experience of more than thirty years, has at no time so commanded the public judgment as to give it the character of a settled policy—which, though it has produced some works of conceded importance, has been attended with an expenditure quite disproportionate to their value,—and has resulted in squandering large sums upon objects which have answered no valuable purpose,—the interests of all the States require it to be abandoned, unless hopes may be indulged for the future which find no warrant in the past.

With an anxious desire for the completion of the works which are regarded by all good citizens with sincere interest, I have deemed it my duty to ask at your hands a deliberate reconsideration of the question, with a hope that, animated by a desire to promote the permanent and substantial interests of the country, your wisdom may prove equal to the task of devising and maturing a plan, which, applied to this subject, may promise something better than constant strife, the suspension of the powers of local enterprise, the exciting of vain hopes, and the disappointment of cherished expectations.

In expending the appropriations made by the last Congress, several cases have arisen in relation to works for the improvement of harbors, which involve question as to the right of soil and jurisdiction, and have threatened conflict between the authority of the State and General Governments. The right to construct a breakwater, jetty, or dam, would seem, necessarily, to carry with it the power to protect and preserve such constructions. This can only be effectually done by having jurisdiction over the soil. But no clause of the Constitution is found, on which to rest the claim of the United States to exercise jurisdiction over the soil of a State, except that conferred by the eighth section of the first article of the Constitution. It is, then, submitted, whether, in all cases where constructions are to be erected by the General Government, the right of soil should not first be obtained, and legislative provision be made to cover all such cases.

For the progress made in the construction of roads within the Territories, as provided for in the appropriations of the last Congress, I refer you to the report of the Secretary of War.

There is one subject of a domestic nature, which, from its intrinsic importance, and the many interesting questions of future policy which it involves, cannot fail to receive your early attention. I allude to the means of communication by which different parts of the wide expanse of our country are to be placed in closer connection for purposes both of defense and commercial intercourse, and more especially such as appertain to the communication of those great divisions of the Union which lie on the opposite sides of the Rocky Mountains.

That the Government has not been unmindful of this heretofore, is apparent from the aid it has afforded, through appropriations for mail facilities and other purposes. But the general subject will now present itself under aspects more imposing and more purely national, by reason of the surveys ordered by Congress, and now in the process of completion, for communication by railway across the continent, and wholly within the limits of the United States.

The power to declare war, to raise and support armies, to provide and maintain a navy, and to call forth the militia to execute the laws, suppress insurrections, and repel invasions, was conferred upon Congress, as means to provide for the common defense, and to protect a territory and a population now widespread and vastly multiplied. As incidental to and indispensable for the exercise of this power, it must sometimes be necessary to construct military roads and protect harbors of refuge. To appropriations by Congress for such objects, no sound objection can be raised. Happily for our country, its peaceful policy and rapidly increasing population impose upon us no urgent necessity for preparation, and leave but few trackless deserts between assailable points and a patriotic people ever ready and generally able to protect them. These necessary links, the enterprise and energy of our people are steadily and boldly struggling to supply. All experience affirms that, wherever private enterprise will avail, it is most wise for the General Government to leave to that and individual watchfulness the location and execution of all means of communication.

The surveys before alluded to were designed to ascertain the most practicable and economical route for a railroad from the river Mississippi to the Pacific ocean. Parties are now in the field making explorations, where previous examinations had not supplied sufficient data, and where there was the best reason to hope the object sought might be found. The means and time being both limited, it is not to be expected that all the accurate knowledge desired will be obtained, but it is hoped that much and important information will be added to the stock previously possessed, and that partial, if not full reports of the surveys ordered will be received, in time for transmission to the two Houses of Congress, on or before the first Monday in February next, as required by the act of appropriation. The magnitude of the enterprise contemplated has aroused, and will doubtless continue to excite, a very general interest throughout the country. In its political, its commercial, and its military bearings, it has varied, great, and increasing claims to consideration. The heavy expense, the great delay, and, at times, fatality attending travel by either of the Isthmus routes, have demonstrated the advantage, which would result from interterritorial communication by such safe and rapid means as a railroad would supply.

These difficulties, which have been encountered in a period of peace, would be magnified and still further increased in time of war. But whilst the embarrassments already encountered, and others under new contingencies to be anticipated, may serve strikingly to exhibit the importance of such a work, neither these, nor all considerations combined, can have an appreciable value, when weighed against the obligation strictly to adhere to the Constitution, and faithfully to execute the powers it confers. Within this limit, and to the extent of the interest of the Government involved, it would seem both expedient and proper, if an economical and practicable route shall be found, to aid, by all constitutional means, in the construction of a road which will unite, by speedy transit, the populations of the Pacific and Atlantic States. To guard against misconception, it should be remarked that, although the power to construct or aid in the construction of, a road within the limits of a Territory is not embarrassed by that question of jurisdiction which would arise within the limits of a State, it is nevertheless held to be of doubtful power, and more than doubtful propriety, even within the limits of a Territory, for the General Government to undertake to administer the affairs of a railroad, a canal, or other similar construction, and therefore that its connection with a work of this character should be incidental rather than primary. I will only add, at present, that, fully appreciating the magnitude of the subject, and solicitous that the Atlantic and Pacific shores of the Republic may be bound together by inseparable ties of common interest, as well as of common fealty and attachment to the Union, I shall be disposed, so far as my own action is concerned, to follow the lights of the Constitution, as expounded and illustrated by those whose opinions and expositions constitute the standard of my political faith in regard to the powers of the Federal Government. It is, I trust, not necessary to say, that no grandeur of enterprise, and no present urgent inducement promising popular favor, will lead me to disregard those lights, or to depart from that path, which experience has proved to be safe, and which is now radiant with the glow of prosperity and legitimate constitutional progress. We can afford to wait, but we cannot afford to overlook the ark of our security.

It is no part of my purpose to give prominence to any subject, which may properly be regarded as set at rest by the deliberate judgment of the people. But while the present is bright with promise, and the future full of demand and inducement for the exercise of active intelligence, the past can never be without useful lessons of admonition and instruction. If its dangers serve not as beacons, they will evidently fail to fulfill the object of a wise design. When the grave shall have closed over all who are now endeavoring to meet the obligations of duty, the year 1850 will be recurred to as a period filled with anxious apprehension. A successful war had just terminated. Peace brought with it a vast augmentation of territory. Disturbing questions arose, bearing upon the domestic institutions of one portion of the Confederacy, and involving the constitutional rights of the States. But, notwithstanding differences of opinion and sentiment, which then existed in relation to details, and specific provisions, the acquiescence of distinguished citizens, whose devotion to the Union can never be doubted, has given renewed vigor to our institutions, and restored a sense of repose and security to the public mind throughout the Confederacy. That this repose is to suffer no shock during my official term, if I have power to avert it, those who placed me here may be assured. The wisdom of men, who knew what independence cost,—who had put all at stake upon the issue of the revolutionary struggle,—disposed of the subject to which I refer, in the only way consistent with the union of these States, and with the march of power and prosperity which has made us what we are. It is a significant fact, that from the adoption of the Constitution until the officers and soldiers of the Revolution had passed to their graves, or, through the infirmities of age and wounds, had ceased to participate actively in public affairs, there was not merely a quiet acquiescence in, but a prompt vindication of, the constitutional rights of the States. The reserved powers were scrupulously respected. No statesman put forth the narrow views of casuists to justify interference and agitation, but the spirit of the compact was regarded as sacred in the eye of honor, and indispensable for the great experiment of civil liberty, which, envied by inherent difficulties, was yet borne forward in apparent weakness by a power superior to all obstacles. There is no condemnation, which the voice of freedom will not pronounce upon us, should we prove faithless to this great trust. While men inhabiting different parts of this vast continent can no more be expected to hold the same opinions, or entertain the same sentiments, than every variety of climate or soil can be expected to furnish the same agricultural products, they can unite in a common object and sustain common principles essential to the maintenance of that object. The gallant men of the South and the North could stand together during the struggle of the Revolution; they could stand together in the more trying period which succeeded the clangor of arms. As their united valor was adequate to all the trials of the camp and dangers of the field, so their united wisdom proved equal to the greater task of founding, upon a deep and broad basis, institutions which it has been our privilege to enjoy, and will ever be our most sacred duty to sustain. It is but the feeble expression of a faith strong and universal, to say that their sons, whose blood mingled so often upon the same field, during the war of 1812, and who have more recently borne in triumph the flag of the country upon a foreign soil, will never permit alienation of feeling to weaken the power of their united efforts, nor internal dissensions to paralyze the great arm of freedom, uplifted for the vindication of self-government.

I have thus briefly presented such suggestions as seem to me especially worthy of your consideration. In providing for the present, you can hardly fail to avail yourselves of the light which the experience of the past casts upon the future.

The growth of our population has now brought us, in the destined career of our national history, to a point at which it well behooves us to expand our vision over the vast prospective.

The successive decennial returns of the census, since the adoption of the Constitution, have revealed a law of steady progressive development, which may be stated, in general terms, as a duplication every quarter century. Carried forward, from the point already reached, for only a short period of time as applicable to the existence of a nation, this law of progress, if unchecked, will bring us to almost incredible results. A large allowance for a diminished proportional effect of emigration would not very materially reduce the estimate, while the increased average duration of human life, known to have already resulted from the scientific and hygienic improvements of the past fifty years, will tend to keep up through the next fifty, or perhaps hundred, the same ratio of growth, which has been thus revealed in our past progress; and to the influence of these causes may be added the influx of laboring masses from eastern Asia to the Pacific side of our possessions, together with the probable accession of the populations already existing in other parts of our hemisphere, which within the period in question, will feel, with yearly increasing force, the natural attraction of so vast, powerful, and prosperous a confederation of self-governing Republics, and will seek the privilege of being admitted within its safe and happy bosom, transferring with themselves, by a peaceful and healthy process of incorporation, spacious regions of virgin and exuberant soil, which are destined to swarm with the fast-growing and fast-spreading millions of our race.

These considerations seem fully to justify the presumption, that the law of population above stated, will continue to act with undiminished effect, through at least the next half century; and that thousands of persons who have already arrived at maturity, and are now exercising the rights of freemen, will close their eyes on the spectacle of more than one hundred millions of population embraced within the majestic proportions of the American Union. It is not merely as an interesting topic of speculation that I present these views for your consideration. They have important practical bearings upon all the political duties we are called upon to perform. Heretofore, our system of Government has worked on what may be termed a miniature scale, in comparison with the development which it must thus assume, within a future so near at hand, as scarcely to be beyond the present of the existing generation.

It is evident that a confederation so vast and so varied, both in numbers and in territorial extent, in habits and in interests, could only be kept in national cohesion by the strictest fidelity to the principles of the Constitution, as understood by those who have adhered to the most restricted construction of the powers granted by the people and the States. Interpreted and applied according to those principles, the great compact adapts itself with healthy ease and freedom to an unlimited extension of that benign system of federative self-government, of which it is our glorious and, I trust, immortal charter. Let us, then, with redoubled vigilance, be on our guard against yielding to the temptation of the exercise of doubtful powers, even under the pressure of the motives of conceded temporary advantage and apparent temporary expediency.

The minimum of Federal Government, compatible with the maintenance of national unity and efficient action in our relations with the rest of the world, should afford the rule and measure of construction of our powers under the general clauses of the Constitution. A spirit of strict deference to the sovereign rights and dignity of every State, rather than a disposition to subordinate the States into a provincial relation to the central authority, should characterize all our exercise of the respective powers temporarily vested in us as a sacred trust from the generous confidence of our constituents.

In like manner, as a manifestly indispensable condition of the perpetuation of the Union, and of the realization of that magnificent national future adverted to, does the duty become yearly stronger and clearer upon us, as citizens of the several States, to cultivate a fraternal and affectionate spirit, language, and conduct, in regard to other States, and in relation to the varied interests, institutions, and habits of sentiment and opinion, which may respectively characterize them. Mutual forbearance, respect, and non-interference in our personal action as citizens, and an enlarged exercise of the most liberal principles of comity in the public dealings of State with State, whether in legislation or in the execution of laws, are the means to perpetuate that confidence and fraternity, the decay of which a mere political union, on so vast a scale, could not long survive.

In still another point of view, is an important practical duty suggested by this consideration of the magnitude of dimensions, to which our political system, with its corresponding machinery of government, is so rapidly expanding. With increased vigilance does it require us to cultivate the cardinal virtues of public frugality and official integrity and purity. Public affairs ought to be so conducted that a settled conviction shall pervade the entire Union, that nothing short of the highest tone and standard of public morality marks every part of the administration and legislation of the General Government. Thus will the federal system, whatever expansion time and progress may give it, continue more and more deeply rooted in the love and confidence of the people.

That wise economy, which is as far removed from parsimony as from corrupt and corrupting extravagance—that single regard for the public good, which will frown upon all attempts to approach the Treasury with insidious projects of private interest cloaked under public pretenses,—that sound fiscal administration, which, in the legislative department, guards against the dangerous temptations incident to overflowing revenue, and, in the executive, maintains an unsleeping watchfulness against the tendency of all national expenditure to extravagance,—while they are admitted elementary political duties, may, I trust, be deemed as properly adverted to and urged, in view of the more impressive sense of that necessity, which is directly suggested by the considerations now presented.

Since the adjournment of Congress, the Vice President of the United States has passed from the scenes of earth, without having entered upon the duties of the station to which he had been called by the voice of his countrymen. Having occupied, almost continuously, for more than thirty years, a seat in one or the other of the two Houses of Congress, and having by his singular purity and wisdom, secured unbounded confidence and universal respect, his failing health was watched by the nation with painful solicitude. His loss to the country, under all the circumstances, has been justly regarded as irreparable.

In compliance with the act of Congress of March 2, 1853, the oath of office was administered to him on the 24th of that month, at Ariadne estate, near Matanzas, in the Island of Cuba; but his strength gradually declined, and was hardly sufficient to enable him to return to his home in Alabama, where, on the eighteenth day of April, in the most calm and peaceful way, his long and eminently useful career was terminated.

Entertaining unlimited confidence in your intelligent and patriotic devotion to the public interest, and being conscious of no motives on my part which are not inseparable from the honor and advancement of my country, I hope it may be my privilege to deserve and secure, not only your cordial coöperation in great public measures, but also those relations of mutual confidence and regard, which it is always so desirable to cultivate between members of coördinate branches of the Government.

FRANKLIN PIERCE.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 5, 1853.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs upon the motion to lay the resolution of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLORENCE] upon the table.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will allow that motion to stand as it is until the President's message shall have been disposed of, as that is now before the House.

Mr. FLORENCE. I move then that the message be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that the usual number of copies, with 20,000 extra copies, with the accompanying documents, be printed for the use of the members of the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is the motion I intended to make, but I am willing that the gentleman should make it.

Mr. McNAIR. What is the usual number?

Mr. FLORENCE. Fifteen thousand.

Mr. HOUSTON. The usual number is one for each member of this body.

Mr. FLORENCE. I understand my colleague to ask what is the usual number of extra copies.

Mr. HOUSTON. No, sir.

Mr. FLORENCE. The usual number, as stated by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON,] has been one copy for each member. My proposition is, to print 20,000 extra copies of the message and the accompanying documents for the use of the members of the House.

Mr. ORR. I can give the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McNAIR] the information he desires. The usual number printed of certain documents for the use of the House, the Senate, and the various Departments, is about 1,500. The usual number of the message and accompanying documents heretofore printed has been 15,000 copies; and I do not see the necessity for printing any more than that number now. They are cumbersome documents, and are not generally read. I move to amend the gentleman's motion by striking out 20,000, and inserting 15,000.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina that this is the beginning of a new Administration, and these documents—the President's message and accompanying papers—are intended to develop the policy of that Administration at its commencement. While I know that 15,000 copies were printed at the last session—yet under the circumstances it seems to me that 20,000 are a small number to be asked for upon this occasion. I therefore hope that the gentleman from Pennsylvania will persist in his motion, and that we will order the number asked for to be printed.

Mr. ORR. It is within a few years that the number printed has exceeded 10,000 copies. In my judgment, 15,000 copies are a great abundance.

Mr. PERKINS, of New York. I believe the gentleman from South Carolina is mistaken in supposing that the President's message and documents are not read. If they are printed in pamphlet form and circulated among my constituents, or the constituents of the representatives of the State of New York, I am very certain that they will be generally read.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. The people now are reading much more than formerly. Our country is largely extended, and schools are being multiplied daily; and to say that no more than sixty, eighty, or one hundred persons in each Congressional district, will read those documents, shows an indifference in regard to them among the people, with which I can hardly acquiesce. I believe it would be more compatible for the interests of the country, to print 50,000 extra copies; and I am confident, at least it is so, as far as my own district is concerned, that that number will hardly suffice for those who wish to read these documents. In behalf of my own constituents, I go for 50,000, and if the constituents of other members will not read them, I will be very much obliged, if they will send them to mine.

Mr. PHELPS. It seems to me that this debate upon the motion to print an extra number of copies of the message and accompanying documents is rather premature. By a law passed at the last session of Congress, it is provided that all motions to print extra copies of any bill, report, or other public document, shall be referred to the members of the Committee on Printing in the House where the motion may be made; so that a motion to print an extra number of copies of these documents must necessarily go to the Committee on Printing, and await their report upon it.

Mr. HOUSTON. That has been the language of the joint rule, and the law which has governed us, for several years; but its universal construction has been, that it did not apply to a message from the President of the United States.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Certainly; it has been so decided.

Mr. HOUSTON. All communications from heads of Departments, separate and distinct from those accompanying the President's message now before us, would be subject to the law which the gentleman has read, but it has never been construed as applying to the message of the President of the United States; and I hope, therefore, that the gentleman from Missouri will let this matter take its course.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PHELPS] will refer to the 61st rule, he will find that that rule sustains the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON.]

Mr. PHELPS. I was referring to the act of Congress, and not to any rule. But, sir, I have no desire at all to impede the printing of this document. I desire the number to be printed which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLORENCE] proposes.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. It has been suggested to me that the House will not vote the 50,000 copies, but might vote 30,000. I therefore modify my amendment to the amendment so as to make the number 30,000.

The SPEAKER. The question will be first upon the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WENTWORTH] to the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR,] which is to strike out "15,000," and insert "30,000" in lieu thereof.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I wish to say but one word upon this subject. I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina will prevail. Fifteen thousand is the usual number which has been heretofore printed. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WENTWORTH] says that number will give seventy copies to each member, and that he has a great many more than seventy men in his district who can or will read this document.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I said who were anxious to read it.

Mr. STEPHENS. I tell the gentleman that there are, perhaps, three thousand in my district who are anxious to read it. But will you extend the number to a million? Are we to sit here and print documents for every man who is anxious to read them? Sir, they must get this information from the newspapers of the country. Fifteen thousand copies will give seventy copies to each member. That will be sufficient to supply the schools, newspapers, public libraries, and the various offices in the counties, where people who desire to see these documents can always have access to them.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. With the permission of the gentleman from Georgia I will correct his statement that fifteen thousand copies will give seventy copies to each member. It will give only about forty copies to each member; twenty thousand copies would give sixty or sixty-one to each member.

Mr. STEPHENS. I was arguing against the statement of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WENTWORTH.] I did not make any calculation myself.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman from Illinois is mistaken, then. He may have made the calculation that the 30,000 copies he proposes to print, would give seventy-five or eighty copies to each member; 15,000 would give only about forty-one copies to each member.

Mr. STEPHENS. Well, that is the usual number.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I would ask the gentleman from Georgia, to state the number of copies that was printed at the commencement of the last Administration, when the Whig policy was to be developed.

Mr. STEPHENS. I think it was 15,000.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, the Whig policy was quite as important to the country as the policy of this Administration.

Mr. STEPHENS. I will not detain the House further, but I trust that the House will only order the printing of 15,000 extra copies.

Mr. HIBBARD. I believe that the House is now ready to vote upon this matter, and to dispose of it, and for the purpose of bringing on that vote, I call for the previous question.

The previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

The question was first upon Mr. WENTWORTH's amendment to the amendment.

Mr. LETCHER. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

[Voices from all parts of the Hall. "No, no!" "We'll vote it down!" and "Withdraw it!"]

Mr. LETCHER. Well, I withdraw the call for the present.

The question was then put on the amendment to the amendment; and, on a division, there were—yeas 76; nays 116.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The question was then put upon the amendment of Mr. ORR, to strike out 20,000 copies extra, and insert 15,000; and on a division, there were—yeas 71.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, fifteen only voting in the affirmative, which number was not one fifth of a quorum.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I demand tellers. Tellers were not ordered.

The question was taken on Mr. ORR's proposition, and it was disagreed to.

The question was then taken on the proposition of Mr. FLORENCE, and it was agreed to.

PUBLIC PRINTER.

Mr. HIBBARD. Mr. Speaker, the order just made for the printing of the President's message and accompanying documents will, I think, remind the House of the necessity of proceeding with the organization of the House by the election of a public printer, without whom the law, as I understand, makes no provision for the printing.

Mr. HOUSTON. With the gentleman's permission, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLORENCE] was agreed to; and that that motion do lie upon the table.

The question was taken, and the latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HIBBARD. For the purpose suggested, I offer the following resolution, and I hope the House will act upon it now, and proceed to the election of a public printer. Upon its passage I call for the previous question:

Resolved, That the House do now proceed to the election of a public printer for the House of Representatives for the present Congress.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I rise to a point of order. When the message from the President was received, we were acting on the question of the election of a Chaplain; and I would ask whether it does not now take precedence of any other business?

The SPEAKER. Such is the fact. While the proposition of the gentleman from New Hampshire is a privileged one, yet it must give way to the business indicated by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HIBBARD. I withdraw my resolution.

Mr. HAMILTON. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. FULLER. I submit a motion which takes precedence of that of the gentleman from Maryland; and it is that when this House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Friday next. It is made with a view of giving the Speaker time to form the standing committees. Gentlemen are well aware that time and deliberation are required for that purpose.

A MEMBER. I ask for a division of the House upon that question.

Mr. FULLER. Upon the request of several members I withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon the motion to adjourn.

The question was put and disagreed to, and the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs upon laying the resolution of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLORENCE] upon the table.

Mr. HIBBARD. I rise to a question of order. It is whether the resolution proposed to be offered by me, being a privileged matter, relating to the organization of the House, does not take precedence of the motion submitted by the gentleman from South Carolina?

The SPEAKER. The Chair doubts whether it takes precedence of business immediately before the House, and being acted upon by the House, except by unanimous consent. The House now comes back to the precise point at which the business was arrested by the introduction of the President's message.

The question, then, is upon laying upon the table the following resolution:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That two Chaplains be elected, one by the Senate and the other by the House of Representatives, and that they officiate alternately during the present session of Congress.

And upon that motion, the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question was then put, and there were—yeas, 18; nays 185.

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Bugg, Chastain, Cobb, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dent, Edgerton, Green, Grow, Henn, George W. Jones, McMullin, Nichols, Phelps, William Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, and Wells—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Appleton, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Ball, Banks, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Benton, Bissell, Bliss, Bocoock, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Lewis D. Campbell, Carpenter, Carothers, Caskin, Chamberlain, Chandler, Chase, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Colquitt, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Craig, Crocker, Cullom, Cunningham, Curtis, Cutting, Dawson, Dean, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Disney, Dowdell, Drum, Dunbar, Dunham, Eastman, Edmundson, Elliott, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Everhart, Ewing, Farley, Faulkner, Fenton, Flager, Florence, Franklin, Fuller, Gamble, Goode, Goodrich, Greenwood, Grey, Hamilton, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Haven, Hendricks, Hibbard, Hiestler, Hill, Hillyer, Houston, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Ingersoll, Johnson, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kittredge, Knox, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, Lindley, Lindsay, Lyon, McCulloch, Macdonald, McDougal, McNair, McQueen, Meade, Macy, Matteson, Maurice, Maxwell, May, Mayall, Meacham, Middleswarth, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Milson, Morgan, Noble, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, John Parker, Perkins, Phelps, Pratt, Preston, Pringle, Puryear, P. Perkins, Phillips, Richard, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seymour, Shaw, Shower, Simmons, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, Snodgrass, Stevens, Stratton, Straub, and H. Stephens, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, T. Tweed, Upham, Vail, Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trott, T. Tweed, Upham, Vail, Vansant, Wade, Walbridge, Walsh, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, Wheeler, Witte, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollieffer—185.

So the House refused to lay the resolution on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, its Secretary, informing the House that they had passed a bill entitled, "An act to indemnify the State of Indiana for the failure of title to a township of land granted to said State on her admission into the Union in 1816," in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

CHAPLAINS AGAIN.

The question then recurred on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to amend the resolution by striking out the word "session," and inserting in lieu thereof the word "Congress."

I wish to state briefly the reason why I offer the amendment. At the first session of the last Congress we elected a Chaplain who served us for nine months. At the second session we elected another gentleman. He served for three months, and for that three months' service received the same compensation as the Chaplain for the first session, who served nine months. I think it is right that we should elect a man for the whole Congress, in the same manner that we do every other officer.

Mr. HENN. I move to amend the resolution by adding thereto the following:

Provided, That the compensation of said Chaplains shall be deducted pro rata from the per diem compensation of the members of the Senate and House of Representatives.

And upon that I ask the previous question.

Mr. HOUSTON. Before the Chair puts that question I should like to have the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLORENCE] accept a modification of his resolution, so as to make it embrace the language of the resolution which came from the Senate this morning, which is, that they be taken from different denominations.

The SPEAKER. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is the universal practice here, and I hope it will be carried out now.

Mr. FLORENCE accepted the proposed modification.

The previous question was then seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The SPEAKER. The question first in order is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. HENN.]

The question was taken, and the amendment was not agreed to.

The question then recurring on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HENDRICKS,] it was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The question was then taken upon the resolution, as amended, and it was adopted.

On motion by Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, the House then adjourned till to-morrow, at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 7, 1853.

The Hon. ISAAC P. WALKER, of Wisconsin, and the Hon. A. DIXON, of Kentucky, appeared and took their seats this morning.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

The following message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. V. McKEAN, Chief Clerk:

Mr. PRESIDENT: I am directed to inform the Senate that the House of Representatives have passed a joint resolution for the relief of Alexander P. Field, late Secretary of Wisconsin Territory, and his sureties, in which they ask the concurrence of the Senate.

Also, a concurrent resolution for the appointment of two Chaplains for the first session of the Thirty Third Congress.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT presented the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury, which, on motion by Mr. HUNTER, was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed for the use of the Senate.

Mr. HUNTER. I move that the usual number of extra copies of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury be printed for the use of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. laid before the Senate a letter from the Treasurer of the United States, communicating copies of his accounts for the third and fourth quarters of 1852, and the first and second quarters of 1853, as adjusted by the accounting officers of the Treasury; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table.

Also, the first annual report of the Superintendent of the Public Printing.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, the report, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

ELECTION OF CHAPLAIN.

On the motion of Mr. JONES, of Iowa, the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives was considered and agreed to:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That two Chaplains, of different denominations, be elected, one by the Senate and the other by the House of Representatives, and that they officiate alternately during the present session of Congress.

The Senate proceeded to ballot for a Chaplain on its part, with the following result:

Whole number of votes cast, 39; necessary to a choice, 20; of which—

Rev. Henry Slicer received.....	18
Rev. William Hodges.....	13
Rev. S. Tustin, D. D.....	3
Rev. H. S. Chapin.....	3
Rev. Henry Ward Beecher.....	2

There being no election, the Senate proceeded to a second ballot, with the following result:

Whole number of votes cast, 43; necessary to a choice, 22; of which—

Rev. H. Slicer received.....	21
Rev. William Hodges.....	18
Rev. H. W. Beecher.....	2
Blank.....	1

There still being no choice, the Senate proceeded to a third ballot, with the following result:

Whole number of votes cast, 43; necessary to a choice, 22; of which—

Rev. H. Slicer received.....	23
Rev. W. Hodges.....	19
Rev. S. Tustin, D. D.....	1

The Rev. H. Slicer having received a majority of the votes cast, was declared duly elected.

PETITIONS.

Mr. GWIN presented the petition of C. K. Garrison, President of the Oriental and Pacific Steam Navigation Company, for a mail route between San Francisco and China, via the Sandwich Islands; which was ordered to lie on the table until the standing committees be appointed.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, presented the petition of T. R. Fontleroy, a colonel in the Army of the United States, and other officers, praying for an increase of compensation; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, presented the petition of Pamela Brown, widow of the late Major General Jacob Brown, praying for a pension; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Also, the petition of A. Mothershead, praying for a pension; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Also, the proceedings of a public meeting of citizens of Iowa, asking Congress to make grants of public land in aid of certain railroads in that State; which were ordered to lie on the table.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GWIN, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce the following bills; which were read a first time, and ordered to lie on the table until the standing committees shall have been appointed:

A bill to encourage agriculture, commerce, manufactures, and all other branches of industry, by granting to every man who is the head of a family, and a citizen of the United States, a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of land out of the public domain upon condition of occupancy and cultivation of the same for the period herein specified;

A bill to refund to the State of California the expenses incurred in suppressing Indian aggressions in that State;

A bill to authorize and direct the payment of certain moneys into the treasury of the State of California, which were collected in the ports of said State as revenue upon imports since the ratification of the treaty of peace between the United States and the Republic of Mexico, and prior to the admission of said State into the Union.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. JOHNSON gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to grant to the States of Arkansas, Louisiana, and Missouri the right of way and alternate sections of the public lands, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Shreveport in Louisiana, via Washington, Fort Smith, and Van Buren, in Arkansas, and by Springfield and Independence to St. Joseph's in Missouri.

Mr. SLIDELL gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill granting to the State of Louisiana the right of way, and a donation of public lands, for the purpose of locating and constructing a railroad from Shreveport to the Mississippi river in said State.

Also, a bill granting to the State of Louisiana the right of way, and a donation of public lands, for the purpose of locating and constructing a railroad from Algiers, on the Mississippi river, to the Sabine river in said State.

Mr. BENJAMIN gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill granting to the State of Louisiana the right of way, and a donation of public land for the purpose of constructing a railroad from New Orleans to the State line of Mississippi, in the direction of the town of Jackson.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. BRIGHT gave notice of his intention to offer an amendment to the rules of the Senate, so as to change the number of members of certain standing committees.

ALEXANDER P. FIELD.

Mr. GWIN. At the last session a joint resolution for the relief of Alexander P. Field, late Secretary of Wisconsin Territory, and his sureties, passed the Senate unanimously, on the recommendation of the Comptroller of the Treasury Department. It merely directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to settle the account of Mr. Field. It has been passed by the House this session, and been sent here this morning. I move that the Senate proceed to its consideration at this time.

The motion was agreed to. The resolution was read twice, and considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to settle the accounts of Alexander P. Field, late Secretary of Wisconsin Territory, upon principles of equity and justice; provided, that no credit shall be allowed to him in the settlement, with the exception of twelve different items therein named, amounting to $3,761 06.

Mr. WALKER. There is an error in the bill which it will be important to amend. In one of the items which it proposes to settle, the name reads "Isaiah Newnan;" it should be "Josiah A. Newnan." I move to strike out "Isaiah" and insert "Josiah A."

The amendment was agreed to; the joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, the amendment was concurred in; the joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, and was read a third time and passed.

SICKNESS IN EMIGRANT SHIPS.

On motion by Mr. FISH, the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, submitted by him on the 5th instant:

Resolved, That a select committee of five be appointed to consider the causes and the extent of the sickness and mortality prevailing on board of emigrant ships on the voyage to this country; and whether any, and what, further legislation is needed for the better protection of the health and lives of passengers on board of such vessels.

The resolution was adopted.

On motion by Mr. FISH, it was Ordered, That the select committee be appointed by the President pro tempore.

UNITED STATES JUDICIAL SYSTEM.

The resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. CLAYTON was considered and adopted, as follows:

Resolved, That the President be respectfully requested to present to the Senate the plan referred to in his message to Congress this day, and which he is prepared to recommend, for the enlargement and modification of the present judicial system of the United States."

ELECTION OF PUBLIC PRINTER.

Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin. Mr. President, I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Senate will, on——, proceed to the election of a public printer, to do the public printing for the Thirty Third Congress, in accordance with the eighth section of the act "to provide for executing the public printing, and establishing the prices thereof, and for other purposes," approved August 26th, 1852.

If there be no objection, I ask the Senate to consider the resolution now, so as to fix a day on which to elect a public printer.

Mr. BRIGHT. Let the resolution lie over.

The PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the resolution must go over under the rules.

NORTHERN BOUNDARY OF IOWA.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to furnish to the Senate a copy of the items of expenditure allowed at different times for the survey and marking of the northern boundary line of the State of Iowa, together with any information in the possession of his Department touching the accuracy of said boundary line.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 7, 1853.

The House met pursuant to adjournment at twelve o'clock, m.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The SPEAKER, (Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, temporarily occupying the chair.) The first business in order is the call of the States and Territories for petitions.

Mr. CLINGMAN. If there is no objection, I would move to postpone that matter until Tuesday next.

Mr. CHASTAIN informed the Chair that his colleague, the Hon. JAMES L. SEWARD, of Georgia, was now in attendance, and ready to take the customary oath.

Mr. SEWARD then approached, and the usual oath was administered to him by the Speaker.

Mr. HIBBARD. I propose to submit the resolution which I offered on yesterday, relative to the election of a public printer, which I think pertains to the organization of the House.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order, and it is this: The previous question having been ordered upon a resolution offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLORENCE] yesterday, relative to the election of Chaplains to Congress, that that is the first business in order this morning.

The SPEAKER. That resolution was adopted, and has to go to the Senate before we can proceed with the election. The Chair is of the opinion that the motion made by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. HIBBARD] is a privileged one, and takes precedence, as it pertains to the organization of the House.

Mr. HIBBARD. I now offer the resolution, which I suppose the Clerk has at the desk. I ask him to read it; and upon it I call the previous question.

The resolution was then read, as follows:

Resolved, That the House do now proceed to an election of public printer for the House of Representatives for the present Congress."

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The question then being upon the passage of the resolution, it was taken and decided in the affirmative.

So the resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Nominations are now in order.

Mr. HIBBARD. I nominate for public printer, General Robert Armstrong. Does not the rule require that the election should be viva voce?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It does.

The House then proceeded to execute its order. Messrs. HIBBARD, BOCK, CHANDLER, and STEPHENS, of Georgia, were appointed tellers to count the votes.

The SPEAKER announced that nominations were in order, and the following gentlemen were nominated as candidates:

By Mr. HIBBARD.—General Robert Armstrong, of Washington.

By Mr. GIDDINGS.—Gamaliel Bailey, of Washington.

By Mr. PRESTON.—Joseph Gales, of Washington.

By Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio.—Horace Greeley, of New York.

By Mr. WALSH.—Beverly Tucker, of Washington.

The roll was called by the Clerk, members voting viva voce. The following was the result:

Whole number of votes cast, 219; necessary to a choice, 110; of which—

Robert Armstrong received.....	126
Gales & Seaton.....	64
Beverly Tucker.....	20
Gamaliel Bailey.....	3
Gideon & Co.....	1
H. Greeley.....	1
J. C. Rives.....	1
R. H. Prior.....	1
Joseph Gales.....	1
John T. Towers.....	1

The following is the vote in detail:

For Robert Armstrong.—Messrs. Aiken, W. Allen, J. C. Allen, Ashe, D. J. Bailey, Banks, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bissell, Bliss, Bock, Breckinridge, Bridges, Chamberlain, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingan, Cobb, Colquitt, Craige, Cumming, Curtis, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dent, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Eddy, Edgerston, Elliott, Ellison, Faulkner, Feinton, Florence, Fuller, Gamble, Green, Greenwood, Grow, Hamilton, Andrew J. Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Hughes, Ingersoll, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kuriz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Lilly, Lindsay, Macdonald, McDougal, McMullin, McNair, Mace, Macy, Maxwell, May, Mayall, Smith Miller, Millson, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Olds, Orr, Parker, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Pratt, Richardson, Riddle, Thos. Ritchey, Robbins, Rowe, Ruffin, Seward, Seymour, Shannon, Shaw, Showers, Skelton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Warren, John Wentworth, Westbrook, and Hendrick B. Wright.

For Gales & Seaton.—Messrs. Abercrombie, Ball, Benson, Bugg, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chase, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Cullom, Dick, Dickinson, Etheridge, Everhart, Ewing, Farley, Flagler, Franklin, Goodrich, Grey, Aaron Hanley, Haven, Heister, Hill, Howe, Hunt, Kerr, Knox, Lindley, McCulloch, Matteson, Meacham, Middlesworth, John G. Miller, Morgan, Norton, Mordcai Oliver, Parker, Pennington, Preston, Pringle, Puryear, Reedy, Reese, David Ritchie, Rogers, Russell, Sabine, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, Alexander H. Stephens, John L. Taylor, Tracy, Upham, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Tappan Wentworth, Yates, and Zollcoffer.

For Beverly Tucker.—Messrs. Thomas H. Bayly, Boyce, Brooks, Caskie, Cutting, Eastman, Edmundson, Goode, Letcher, Lyon, Maurice, Andrew Oliver, Peck, Peckham, Powell, Tweed, Walsh, Wells, Wheeler, and Witte.

For Gamaliel Bailey.—Messrs. De Witt, Giddings, and Wade.
For Joseph Gales.—Mr. Chandler.
For Horace Greeley.—Lewis D. Campbell.
For John T. Towers.—Mr. Bennett.
For Gideon & Co.—Mr. Benton.
For John C. Rives.—Mr. English.
For R. H. Prior.—Mr. McQueen.

Before the result was announced, several gentlemen whose votes had not been recorded rose and asked to vote.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to know whether these gentlemen were within the bar when their names were called?

The SPEAKER, (Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, in the chair.) In the opinion of the Chair it makes no difference whether they were within the bar or not. Every member has the right to vote.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to have this matter understood at the beginning of the session.

The result having been announced, as given above, the Speaker, (Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, in the chair,) said: Robert Armstrong having received a majority of all the votes cast, I declare him to be duly elected as public printer for the Thirty-Third Congress.

REPORT ON THE FINANCES.

The SPEAKER announced that the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the state of the finances, was now before the House for such disposition as the House might think proper.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I move that the reading of the report be dispensed with, and that it be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, with the documents accompanying it.

The SPEAKER. The question, then, will be on the adoption of that motion.

Mr. HOUSTON. Does the motion also embrace the printing of the report?

The SPEAKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. CULLOM. I believe it was decided only yesterday, that this reference is out of order, there being no such committee appointed.

The SPEAKER. I do not recollect that such decision was made. The rules of the House have been adopted, and they provide for the appointment of committees. As to the instructions to be given to committees so appointed, it is customary with the House to order select committees at the time of ordering the reference.

Mr. CULLOM. I acquiesce in the decision of the Chair at present; but I dissented from what I understood to be the decision yesterday.

The question was then put, and carried, referring the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury, with the accompanying documents, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

ACCOUNTS OF TREASURER.

The account of the Treasurer was also presented, and the following letter, accompanying it was read:

TREASURY OF THE UNITED STATES, }

December 7, 1853.

To the Hon. LINN BOYD, Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States:

SIR: In pursuance of law, I have the honor to transmit herewith copies of the accounts of the Treasurer of the United States for the third and fourth quarters of 1853, and for the first and second quarters of 1853, as adjusted by the Accounting Officer of the Treasury Department.

SAMUEL CASEY,
Treasurer of United States.

Mr. HOUSTON moved that the account be laid on the table and printed.

The motion was put and carried.

Mr. HOUSTON. My friend from Virginia, in making his motion in reference to the documents just referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, has omitted to provide for the printing of some extra copies, and I now will make that motion. I desire to know, however, from the Chair, whether that motion is to be referred to the Committee on Printing, as to the number of extra copies of the report of the Secretary of the Treasury to be printed?

The SPEAKER, in reply, read the 61st rule of the House, as follows:

"61. A proposition requesting information from the President of the United States, or directing it to be furnished by the head of either of the Executive Departments, or by the Postmaster General, or to print an extra number of any documents or other matter, excepting messages of the President to both Houses at the commencement of each session of Congress, and the reports and documents connected with or referred to in it, shall lie on the table one day for consideration, unless otherwise ordered by the unanimous consent of the House; and all such propositions shall be taken up for consideration in the order they were presented, immediately after reports are called for from select committees; and, when adopted, the Clerk shall cause the same to be delivered."

This being a report and documents referred to in the President's message, it is exempted from the rules requiring all propositions for extra copies to go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HOUSTON. To save time and difficulty about this matter, I move to print the usual number of extra copies of the report, and to refer that motion to the Committee on Printing when it shall be raised.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman from Alabama designate the number of extra copies?

Mr. HOUSTON. I will move to print ten thousand extra copies for the purpose of getting a reference of this matter to the committee. I notice that at the first session of the last Congress, a similar motion to print was made, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. HAVEN. I would like to inquire whether the vote of the House yesterday to print twenty thousand extra copies of the message, with the accompanying documents, did not include this very document? I supposed that it did. If that is the case, the motion of the gentleman from Alabama is unnecessary.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will say to the gentleman from New York, that the report of the Secretary of the Treasury does not accompany the President's message. The reports of all the other heads of Departments accompany the message of the President; but the Secretary of the Treasury makes his report directly to Congress. It does not come here in the way that the reports of the other heads of Departments come here.

Mr. HAVEN. I so understood it; but if that be the case, then it does not come within the operation of the sixty-first rule. The Chair having decided that it came within the sixty-first rule, I thought I must be mistaken. Still, as it is proposed to refer the motion to print extra copies to the Committee on Printing, it is unnecessary to take up time in discussing the matter.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will modify my motion and fix the number at 15,000. That is the number which was named in the resolution of last session, and I now move to refer the motion to print.

The question was then taken on Mr. Houston's motion, and it was agreed to.

So the motion to print extra copies was referred to the Committee on Printing.

SPEAKER'S MESSENGER.

Mr. OLDS: I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That of the number of messengers now allowed by the House, the Speaker be authorized to appoint one to be known as the Speaker's messenger, and that he be allowed the same compensation as the chief messenger in the office of the Secretary of the Senate.

I will say but a single word in reference to that resolution. The President of the Senate, I am informed, not only has a messenger and a page, but is also allowed a clerk, while the Speaker of the House of Representatives, having far more business to transact than the President of the Senate, has neither of these allowed to him—neither a clerk, a messenger, nor a page.

Mr. HOWE. I wish to ask the gentleman from Ohio what compensation he proposes to give this messenger?

Mr. OLDS. Four dollars a day is the compensation allowed. It must be obvious to every gentleman that it is necessary that the Speaker should have a messenger, who should be under his control, and be appointed by him. The resolution does not increase the number of messengers. It only takes one of those now allowed to the House, and gives the Speaker the appointment of and control over him. I ask the previous question on the resolution?

The previous question was not seconded.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I believe that the resolution is now before the House, and now open to amendment.

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. BAYLY. I move to amend, by providing that this House shall hereafter elect its own Librarian.

[Cries of "No!" "No!" "No!"]

Mr. BUNHAM. If the resolution gives rise to debate does it not go over till to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. No; it was introduced by unanimous consent, pending the call for petitions.

Mr. BAYLY. In making the amendment I have, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say only a word or two. Heretofore, I understand, that the Librarian of the House has been an appointee by the Clerk of the House of Representatives. In my opinion the duties of Librarian have no connection with the Clerk whatever. They would appertain quite as well to the office of Postmaster, as to the Clerkship. The truth is, it belongs to neither. We have already a very large collection of documents in the Library of the House; and if there be any officer who ought to be directly under our control more than another, it seems to me it would be the Librarian. He is the man who has to look up the documents for members, and such of them as take any active part in the business of the House have constantly occasion for those documents; and, of course, constant intercourse with that officer. We are the best judges of the man fit for the place. We are the persons who ought to have the direct, not the indirect, control of him. If we have a bad Librarian, as the law now stands, you can only reach him through the Clerk, which, to me, is a rather circuitous process. If he be elected by this House, as the Doorkeeper, Postmaster, and Clerk are, he will then be under our direct control, and if he neglect his duties, if he be found unequal to his trust, by resolution of this House we can turn him out.

Mr. DEAN. I rise to a point of order. The amendment is not germane to the original resolution, and, therefore, not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the point is well taken, and decides that the amendment is not in order to the original resolution.

Mr. ORR. I have no objection to the resolution of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. OLDS.] provided that he will specify a particular sum that the messenger shall receive. The Blue Book is not here, and I do not know what is the amount of the salary of the messenger of the Secretary of the Senate. We may be voting this messenger $1,500 per annum. I move to amend the resolution offered by fixing the compensation at four dollars per day.

Mr. OLDS. I am willing to accept the gentleman's modification.

Mr. DEAN. I think that the House now understands this matter, and for the purpose of bringing it to a vote, I call for the previous question.

Mr. OLDS. With the gentleman's permission, I move to strike out so much of my resolution as says, "is allowed to the messenger of the Secretary of the Senate," and insert therefor the words, "a compensation not exceeding four dollars per day." It is the same compensation that is allowed clerks for committees.

Mr. DEAN. I now renew the call for the previous question.

Mr. BRIDGES. Will the gentleman withdraw his call for one moment?

Mr. DEAN. I will, if the gentleman will renew it.

Mr. BRIDGES. I will renew the call for the previous question. I understand the object the gentleman from Virginia has in view—

The SPEAKER. The Chair would inform the gentleman that the matter to which he refers has been ruled out of order.

Mr. BRIDGES. I did not understand the matter. If that is so, I renew the call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The main question being upon the adoption of the resolution, the House were divided, and there were 107 voting in the affirmative, and 16 in the negative.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. This is an important question, and I call for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, one-fifth of the House not voting in favor thereof.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. OLDS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution just adopted was past, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

CHAPLAIN.

Mr. FLORENCE. Is it not now in order to execute the order of the House made on yesterday upon a resolution I then offered in relation to the election of Chaplain?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is not in order until the House is informed whether or not the Senate have acted upon the resolution, and what disposition they have made of it.

Mr. FLORENCE. Has not that information been given?

The SPEAKER. It has not; and the custom is, where the two Houses agree to elect two Chaplains, that the Senate elect one first, and then inform the House of the person they have elected.

Mr. FLORENCE. I heard this morning that the Senate have elected a Chaplain, and I presumed, if such was the case, that this information had been communicated to the House.

The SPEAKER. The House has no information from the Senate upon the subject.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana, gave notice of his intention to introduce a bill authorizing the surrender to the State of Indiana certain bonds of said State held by the United States, amounting to $210,000.

Also, a bill for the relief of Moses Petit, of Indiana.

Also, a bill surrendering to the State of Iowa $210,000 of the bonds of said State, held by the General Government.

Mr. MAXWELL. I give notice that on to-morrow, or some subsequent day, I shall ask leave to introduce a bill to indemnify the State of Florida for expenses in protecting her frontier citizens against the Seminole Indians.

Also, a bill to grant to the State of Florida alternate sections of the public lands, for a railroad between the waters of the Atlantic and Gulf of Mexico.

Also, a bill to grant to the States of Florida and Alabama alternate sections of public lands to aid in the construction of a railroad from Montgomery, Alabama, to Pensacola, Florida.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to give notice, that I shall ask leave to introduce to-morrow, or on some subsequent day, a bill making the city of Quincy, Illinois, a port of delivery.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I rise to a question of order. Is it in order, under a call upon States for petitions, to give notices of bills?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is not strictly in order. The call is for petitions, and not for notices of bills.

Mr. BAYLY. I do not wish to embarrass my friend from Illinois; but we all know the difficulty of transacting business is doing things out of order. I am not making a point upon him particularly, but I would select him, because he is my friend, and an old member.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I regret that the gentleman has made a point upon me. I think the right place to make a point of order is where the wrong begins.

Mr. BAYLY. I will withdraw my point of order for the present.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky, presented the petition of the heirs of Philip R. Rice, praying for the payment of a vessel impressed into the service of the Colonies during the revolutionary war, and which was lost.

Mr. EWING. I wish to present the resolution which I offered yesterday, with a view to have it referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I object.

Mr. PHILIPS gave notice that on to-morrow, or some subsequent day, he would ask leave to introduce a bill to grant alternate sections of the public land to aid in the construction of a railroad from Mobile to New Orleans.

On motion by Mr. LETCHER, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Daniel Steenrod, of Virginia.

Mr. HESTER presented the petition of citizens of Lancaster county, Pennsylvania, for the establishment of a certain mail route in that county; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, when raised.

Mr. DICK presented the petition of citizens of the city of Erie, Pennsylvania, for the establishment of a United States court in that city.

Mr. DICK said: It will be apparent to every member of the House that, in view of the great and increasing maritime operations on our northern lakes, the establishment of such a court will be of great importance to the citizens of the State. I have the honor to represent, this being the only port in the State of Pennsylvania upon those waters, and there being no other port within one hundred and thirty miles of that point. I therefore present this petition, and ask that it may be referred to the proper committee, when raised.

The order was accordingly entered.

On motion by Mr. ROBBINS, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Eve Mills, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, when appointed.

On motion by Mr. CHANDLER, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Captain Langleite, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, when formed.

Mr. DAWSON presented the petition of one hundred and eight citizens of Washington county, Pennsylvania, asking a grant of one hundred and sixty acres of the public land to the soldiers of the war of 1812, without regard to rank or duration of service; which was referred to the proper committee, when formed.

Mr. LYON presented the petition of Pamela Brown, widow of the late Major General Jacob Brown, deceased, for a half-pay pension; which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, when formed.

Mr. L. also gave notice that on to-morrow, or some subsequent day, he would ask leave to introduce a bill for the establishment of a National Agricultural College and Experimental Farm.

Mr. LATHAM gave notice that on to-morrow, or some subsequent day, he would introduce a bill granting certain privileges to the Trustees of the University of the Pacific, situated in the county of Santa Clara, State of California.

Mr. WALBRIDGE presented the petition of merchants and others, citizens of New York, for the establishment of American mail facilities between the Windward West Indies and the Spanish Main; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, when formed.

Mr. HUGHES presented the petition of R. R. Platt, asking that he may be placed on the pension roll, the same as others in similar cases; which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, when formed.

Mr. DE WITT presented the petition of John A. Frink, for commutation pay and bounty land; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, when formed.

NEW SERIES....No. 2.

Also, the petition of Cephas Chase, for an additional pension; which was referred to the appropriate committee, when formed.

On motion by Mr. DE WITT, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Andrew Smith, for the purpose of again presenting them to the House.

On motion by Mr. MEACHAM, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Rebecca Freeman, for the purpose of presenting them at the Senate.

On motion by Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the petition of Joseph Webb for increase of pension, with the accompanying papers; and that the same be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, when formed.

On motion by Mr. TWEED, it was Ordered, That the petition of William Brown, for an increase of pension, with the papers accompanying thereto, be withdrawn from the files of the House; and that the same be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, when formed.

Mr. CLINGMAN gave notice of his intention on to-morrow, or some subsequent day, to move that so much of the existing rules as provides for calling the States for petitions be abolished.

Also, of a motion to change the rules, so as to provide for calling the States for resolutions instead of petitions.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE gave notice of his intention on to-morrow, or some subsequent day, to introduce a bill, asking a grant of the public land to aid in the construction of a railroad from Girard, Alabama, to Mobile.

The States having now all been called for petitions, the Speaker announced that the next business in order would be the calling of committees for reports; but no committee having as yet been appointed, that order would, for to-day, be dispensed with.

ELECTION OF CHAPLAIN.

The Senate resolution relative to the election of Chaplain was, on motion, taken up and agreed to.

Mr. DEAN. Is not the first business in order now the proposition to proceed to the election of a Chaplain?

The SPEAKER. Not according to the usual custom, until the Senate have elected their Chaplain, and informed the House of his election.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution from the Senate with regard to the election of Chaplains was agreed to, with a view of laying that resolution on the table until we learn from the Senate what disposition they have made of the House resolution.

The question was taken on Mr. HENDRICK's motion; and it was agreed to.

So the vote was reconsidered; and the question recurred upon the adoption of the resolution from the Senate.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I now move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. CHASE. I desire to offer a substitute.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I will hear what it is.

Mr. CHASE. My substitute is as follows:

Resolved, (the Senate concurring,) That the clergy of the several religious denominations in the city of Washington be requested to officiate as Chaplains in both Houses of Congress during the present Congress alternately, and that the usual compensation be equally divided among said clergy so officiating.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The SPEAKER. And the substitute also?

Mr. HENDRICKS. No, sir; my motion was pending, so that the substitute could not be offered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood that the gentleman withdrew his motion to allow the substitute to be offered.

Mr. HENDRICKS. No, sir; I merely wished to hear what it was.

The question was then taken on Mr. HENDRICKS' motion; and it was agreed to.

So the resolution lies upon the table.

INDIANA UNIVERSITY LANDS.

The following bill from the Senate was then taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time by its title, viz:

"An act to indemnify the State of Indiana for the failure of title to a township of land granted to said State on her admission into the Union, in 1816."

The Clerk read the bill, which authorized the Governor of Indiana to select out of the United States lands in said State, subject to private entry, nineteen thousand and forty acres of land in legal subdivisions, to which patent shall issue; provided that the proceeds of said lands, when sold, shall be and forever remain a fund for the use of the Indiana University.

The SPEAKER. If there be no motion to refer the bill, the question will be upon its engrossment.

Mr. DUNHAM. I desire to have that bill put upon its passage now; and I presume that, when I state the facts of the case, not a single member of the House will object to it. This bill, after full explanation, passed the Senate unanimously at the last session. It came to this House, and at the instance of my colleague at that time, Colonel Gorman, it passed the House. But, through inadvertency on the part of the Clerk, it was not laid before the President for his signature, and was thereby lost.

The bill is simply to indemnify the State of Indiana for a part of a section of land granted to her on her admission into the Union, in 1816, for the purposes of her State University, the title to which has failed. It grants her the right, through her Governor, to select an equal amount of refuse lands within the State, now belonging to the United States. It does not give her the right to go outside the State in the selection. I trust the bill will be put upon its passage at once.

Mr. MILLSON. I hope that the practice will not be followed during this session of Congress. And I am very sure that my friend from Indiana will himself see the propriety of allowing all bills to be referred to the proper committee. Let the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole House. Being of the nature of a private bill, it will be speedily reached. Though the bill itself may be a very proper one, and one to which I may have no objection at all, yet, sir, the motion to pass it is not one which ought to be carried; and I was glad to see that there was a resolution introduced the other day by the colleague of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. MACE,] which aimed at this very practice. That resolution was designed to require every bill to be referred to a Committee of the Whole or to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, without any debate at all. I object to this hasty consideration of bills, and not because I object to the bill now introduced by the gentleman from Indiana, of which I know nothing. If we allow this thing to be done to-day, it may be done by other gentlemen in cases of questionable propriety to-morrow. We should have very little excuse for objecting to this course in other cases if we now adopt it at the instance of the gentleman from Indiana. I move to refer this bill to a Committee of the Whole House, or, if gentlemen prefer it, to a Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HENN. I will say, respecting these two bills, that they were passed last session, and signed by the President of the Senate, and by the Speaker of the House of Representatives; but they failed to obtain the signature of the President of the United States, because they were mislaid in the Clerk's office, where they were lodged by the gentleman who presented the bills. They were put away in his desk, and could not be obtained by the committee in order to present them to the President in time for his signature. One of these bills was passed yesterday by this House, Mr. EASTMAN having charge of the bill. The other is the bill now offered, and I can see no objection at all to its passage.

Mr. MILLSON. I move to refer it to a Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. DUNHAM. I am not desirous to be pertinacious; but if this bill be referred, it might lead to dangerous practices. Having passed both Houses of Congress the last session, and, as I am informed, by a unanimous vote, and now having passed the Senate unanimously, I cannot see the necessity of referring it.

Every member who has served in this House knows very well that our Private Calendar becomes encumbered, and that we can only pass bills of a private character on the days when discussion is not allowed. I ask that the bill be now put upon its passage; and to secure that object, I shall call for the previous question, unless some member expresses a desire of speaking to the bill.

Mr. HILLYER. Is there any urgent necessity for the passage of the bill now?

Mr. DUNHAM. There is only one necessity.

The SPEAKER. Discussion is not in order, as the previous question has been called for.

Mr. DUNHAM. I withdraw the call for the previous question.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. How much land do we grant under the provisions of the bill?

Mr. DUNHAM. Nineteen thousand acres, to be taken from the refuse land within the State. Now I will answer the inquiry of the gentleman from the State of Georgia, [Mr. HILLYER,] and very briefly. The institution named is one of which the State feels justly proud, and while this matter is in the precarious condition in which it now is, there is, of course, much anxiety felt about it. If this bill should go upon the Calendar, and by any inadvertence should again fail, the institution must probably soon suspend for want of funds. I call for the previous question.

Mr. ORR. Will the gentleman withdraw the call, while I submit to the House a few words on this matter?

Mr. DUNHAM. I will, if the gentleman will renew it.

Mr. ORR. I was a member at the last session of Congress of the Committee on Public Lands. This bill came before us then, and after examination, was unanimously reported to the House with the recommendation that it be passed. It did pass the House, but was lost in the way suggested by my friend from Iowa, [Mr. HENN.] Though I do not approve of the plan of taking up bills and putting them upon their passage without reference, and out of their order, the House may rest satisfied that there is nothing wrong in the provisions of this bill. It ought to be passed.

Mr. CULLOM. What was the amount of land lost which this bill now proposes to make up?

Mr. DUNHAM. Nineteen thousand acres. I will state, if the gentleman will allow me, the manner in which it was lost. When Indiana was admitted as a State into this Union, Congress intended to grant a certain amount of land for a university within that State; but for nineteen thousand acres of that amount the United States had not at the time a good title, it having been previously granted for another object.

Mr. MILLSON. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman from Indiana does not suppose that by the motion I have submitted, I had the slightest reference to the merits of the bill under consideration. I know the sentiments of that gentleman in regard to the dispatch of the public business well enough to be satisfied that he himself agrees with me, and that he would, in any other than the present case, vote with me. If this bill have merits—and I do not question it—it will be passed. It will be the first bill, perhaps, on the Calendar; and, if my motion prevail, on the private Calendar, and will be reached under the rules of the House every Friday. If this bill have no merits, it ought not to be passed; and if it be a good bill, it is in no danger. I object then to the proposed mode of proceeding at the commencement of this session.

It is well for us to adopt a wholesome practice, and prevent the establishment of a precedent which will be followed and attended with many injurious results. This is the time, I submit, for the House to set itself resolutely against the passage of any bill on the representation of its friends, and before any opportunity has been afforded for investigation of its merits. I know very well, sir, that a good deal of weight is justly due to the fact that this bill passed both Houses of Congress; but I suggest that very many bills passed both Houses of Congress during the last session which ought not, and will not, pass through this Congress. But, however that may be, let us agree now to pass no bill whatever until it shall have gone through the ordinary and necessary forms of legislation—until it shall have been referred to the appropriate committee, and investigated. Let all bills be printed and laid upon the tables of members according to the practice of the House. Let the report be submitted, and let those who may have objections to any bill, have an opportunity of presenting them; but for God's sake let us not now, upon the third day of the session, establish the practice in any case, however strong it may seem to be, of passing a bill on the representation of its friends alone.

I have no doubt, personally, of the correctness of the statement of the gentleman from Indiana. I know he acts in good faith, and I have implicit confidence in his statement. But there may be other cases where we may be called upon to do the same thing, when we have not sufficient knowledge upon the subject. The bill is in no danger, and to pass this bill to-day, without even the printing of it, without its examination by any committee, we shall do that which may be drawn into a precedent; and I trust, sir, the House will see proper to disregard the urgent appeal of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. COBB. I suppose the House is well informed in relation to the subject before them; and as we have many other bills which we desire to present, I think, in order to economise the time of the House, I shall do well in moving the previous question.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will withdraw the previous question until I can make a single inquiry.

Mr. COBB. I will withdraw it, if the gentleman desires it.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was here received from the Senate, at the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, its Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title, with an amendment, viz:

"Joint resolution for the relief of Alexander P. Field, late Secretary of Wisconsin, and sureties."

Also, that the Senate had elected the Rev. Henry Slicer as Chaplain on their part.

INDIANA UNIVERSITY LANDS.

Mr. CULLOM. I simply wish to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Indiana, who is pressing the passage of this resolution in somewhat of hot haste. I am not, like my friend from Indiana, in full recollection of all the facts connected with this matter. I understand that this bill proposes to appropriate lands to the State of Indiana in lieu of lands lost to the University of Indiana, and which were granted to her on her admission into the Union in 1816. I want to inquire of my friend, whether the lands lost to the State University, was not gained by another University in the State, and whether the State of Indiana did not have the full benefit of it?

Mr. DUNHAM. Nominally, those lands have been recovered by what purports to be another institution, but actually, as I understand, no such institution has been in existence for more than thirty years, and never was a State institution, but a private corporation, in which the State has never in any way had any interest, and over which it has never had any control. The intention of Congress was to endow a State institution, entirely under the control of, and belonging to, the State. Congress, the State, and everybody else so understood it, and acted accordingly. The State Legislature took possession of and sold these lands, established a State University, erected buildings, and applied the funds arising from the sale of these and other lands to its permanent endowment. It has now been in successful operation for nearly thirty years, and is at this time one of the most flourishing institutions of the kind in the West.

The corporate University at Vincennes quietly acquiesced in this state of things, and, as everybody supposed, became dissolved and extinct. But within a few years past, this private corporation has been reconstituted, and, by a late decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, declared to be entitled to some nineteen thousand acres of the lands with which the State institution was endowed. This does not leave the latter sufficient funds to sustain itself, and, if some remedy is not provided, it must fail. It was clearly the intention of Congress, by the act admitting Indiana into the Union, and therefore it became a part of the contract upon which she came into the Union, that she should have a grant of two whole townships of land to endow a State institution of learning. The title to one of those townships failed, and she has been deprived of it because Congress, according to the decision of the court, had previously granted it to others. It is, therefore, for this House to say whether the contract, upon which the State came into the Union, shall be maintained by making up this deficiency or not; whether this institution shall now go down for want of the endowment Congress stands pledged to bestow upon it.

Mr. WALSH. I rise to a question of order, and it is this: Has a gentleman a right to make a motion, and then after making his speech, call the previous question, shut off everybody else in the House from speaking, and then continue to talk himself? Does the previous question include him as well as the rest of the House?

The SPEAKER. The previous question is not pending.

Mr. CULLOM. I will not trespass upon the time of the House, but I must say that the explanation of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. DUNHAM,] has fully confirmed me in the conviction that this bill should take the course of other bills. The explanation of my friend has fallen very far short of satisfying me that this thing should not be further investigated in the House. The former action of the Senate and this House will have very little influence upon my course when I come to vote upon this question. Without intending to be understood by my friend from Indiana as being at all hostile to the measure, yet for the purpose of a better understanding of this thing, I am compelled to concur in the sentiments of my friend from the State of Virginia, [Mr. MILLSON,] that this bill ought to be referred to a committee.

Mr. McMULLIN. It seems to me that nothing can be done here, if every gentleman is to occupy the regular time allotted for public business in explanation of his local bill. More time will evidently be consumed in this way than would be by referring bills of this character to the appropriate committee; and, therefore, for the purpose of disposing of this matter, as I cordially concur with the views of my colleague upon my right, [Mr. MILLSON,] I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The question first recurring upon the motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole House, and order it to be printed, it was put, and carried in the affirmative.

So the bill was referred.

ELECTION OF A CHAPLAIN AGAIN.

Mr. FLORENCE. Is it not now in order to move that the House proceed to the election of a Chaplain?

The SPEAKER. That motion is in order.

Mr. FLORENCE. I move, then, that the House do now proceed to the election of a Chaplain, in accordance with the order passed on yesterday.

Mr. HENN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

The question was put, and the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. FLORENCE. I now call up my motion.

The SPEAKER. The message from the Senate announcing the election of a Chaplain will be read.

The message was then read, as inserted above.

The SPEAKER. The message informs the House of the election of a Chaplain upon the part of the Senate, but does not inform us of their concurrence in the House resolution, to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLORENCE] refers.

Mr. FLORENCE. It occurs to me that no further notice of the concurrence of the Senate in the House resolution is necessary. We have evidence that they have elected a Chaplain, and it is reasonable, therefore, to infer that they have concurred in the resolution of the House, which provided for the election of a Chaplain upon their part. I think no further notice is required; and if it be in order, I again move that the House do now proceed to the election of a Chaplain.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. It occurs to me that the House resolution has not been concurred in by the Senate. That resolution declared that Chaplains belonging to different denominations were to be elected by the respective Houses. The message we have received from the Senate informs us of the election of a Chaplain by that body, but it does not inform us to what denomination he belongs; and how are we to elect one of a different denomination until we possess that knowledge?

Mr. FLORENCE. If the gentleman from Virginia will yield me the floor for a moment, I will inform him that the Senate have elected for their Chaplain the Rev. Henry Slicer, a clergyman of the Methodist denomination.

Mr. BAYLY. Will the gentleman inform me to which branch of the Methodists he belongs? That is a point to be considered. The gentleman says, Mr. Slicer belongs to the Methodist denomination. Now, if I am not mistaken, there are two or three different Methodist denominations. Will he inform me to which of these the Chaplain the Senate have elected belongs? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest this difficulty: The resolution adopted by the House changes the custom heretofore pursued for the election of Chaplain. It provides that he shall be elected for the present Congress. Heretofore he has been elected only for a single session. It will, therefore, be of some importance to ascertain definitely whether the Senate have concurred in that resolution, and whether we are to elect a Chaplain for one session or two.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I suppose it is now discretionary with us to elect a Chaplain or not. The Senate have elected theirs, and informed us simply of the fact. It is therefore for us to elect whoever we please, without any reference to the denomination.

The question was taken upon Mr. FLORENCE's motion, and it was agreed to.

The House then proceeded to the execution of its order.

The SPEAKER announced that nominations were in order.

Mr. FLORENCE nominated Rev. Mr. Tustin.

Mr. ENGLISH nominated Rev. John W. Jackson.

Mr. LILLY nominated Rev. C. D. Westbrook.

Mr. BISSELL nominated Rev. T. C. Teasdale.

Mr. INGERSOLL nominated Rev. A. Holmead.

Mr. MACY nominated Rev. George W. Osborn.

Mr. HARRIS, of Alabama, nominated Rev. Wm. H. Milburn.

Mr. MATTESON nominated Rev. Mr. Chapin.

Mr. WALSH nominated Rev. Miss Antoinette Brown.

Mr. FLORENCE. Will the gentlemen be good enough to inform the House what denomination of Christians their nominees belong to?

[Cries of "No!" "No!" and laughter.]

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman wishes to inquire, he may do so.

Mr. FLORENCE. The gentleman whom I nominate is a Presbyterian.

Mr. HENN asked to be, and was excused from voting on the election of Chaplain.

The Chair appointed Mr. ENGLISH, Mr. MATTESON, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. HARRIS, of Alabama, tellers. The Clerk proceeded to call the roll; and the following was the result of the vote, viz:

Whole number of votes cast, 200; necessary to a choice, 101; of which—

Mr. Tustin received.....	58
Mr. Milburn.....	56
Mr. Teasdale.....	33
Mr. Westbrook.....	14
Mr. Holmead.....	14
Mr. Jackson.....	11

Mr. Chapin	5
Mr. Beecher	2
Mr. Hodges	2
Mr. Hosmer	2
Mr. Donnelly	1
Mr. Hutchinson	1
Miss Antoinette Brown	1

The following is the vote in detail:

For Mr. Tustin—Messrs. Ball, Benson, Bocoek, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Bugg, Carpenter, Caruthers, Caskie, Clark, Cox, Cullom, Dawson, De Witt, Dickinson, Disney, Drum, Edgerton, Edmundson, Etheridge, Faulkner, Flagler, Florence, Franklin, Goodrich, Hastings, Hunt, Kerr, Kidwell, Letcher, Lindley, Lindsay, Maxwell, John G. Miller, Millson, Nichols, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Powell, Preston, Puryear, Ready, Riddle, David Ritchie, Robbins, Rogers, Russell, Sage, Sapp, Shaw, Shower, Snodgrass, Straub, John L. Taylor, Trout, Tappan Wentworth, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer.

For Mr. Milburn—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Boyd, Chandler, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clingman, Colquitt, Cook, Corwin, Craig, Curtis, Cutting, Dent, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Haven, Heister, Houston, Knox, Latham, Lyon, McNair, McQueen, Maurice, Middlewarth, Morgan, Norton, Peckham, Phillips, Reese, Ruffin, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Hester L. Stevens, Tweed, Upham, Vail, Walbridge, Elihu B. Washburne, Wheeler, and Yates.

For Mr. Teasdale—Messrs. James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Belcher, Bissell, Bliss, Chase, Chastain, Cobb, Ellison, Farley, Green, Greenwood, Aaron Harlan, Hill, Hillyer, Kittredge, McCulloch, McDougal, McMillin, Morrison, Olds, Orr, Pennington, Phelps, Richardson, Thomas Ritchey, Sabin, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, Thurston, Tracy, Warren, and Wells.

For Mr. Jackson—Messrs. Chamberlain, John G. Davis, Dunham, Eddy, English, Andrew J. Harlan, Hendricks, Johnson, Lane, Mace, and Smith Miller.

For Mr. Chapin—Messrs. Banks, Lewis D. Campbell, Thomas Davis, Matteson, and Israel Washburn.

For Mr. Hodges—Messrs. Crucker and Pringle.

For Mr. Beecher—Messrs. Giddings and Wade.

For Mr. Hosmer—Messrs. Macy and Shannon.

For Mr. Hutchinson—Mr. Appleton.

For Mr. Donnelly—Mr. David Stuart.

For Miss Antoinette Brown—Mr. Walsh.

No candidate having received a majority, there was no election.

Mr. PERKINS, of New York. I wish to inquire of the Chair whether it is in order to vote for Mr. Milburn? We have adopted a resolution that the Chaplains of the two Houses shall belong to different religious denominations, and I understand that Mr. Milburn belongs to the same denomination as the gentleman who has already been elected as Chaplain of the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will inform the gentleman from New York that the Senate have not informed the House of their action upon that resolution. We are, therefore, acting now independently of the Senate.

Mr. RIDDLE. As Doctor Tustin received the highest number of votes on the first ballot, I desire to know if it is in order to offer a resolution declaring him Chaplain?

[Loud cries of "No!" "No!"]
The SPEAKER pro tem. The Chair thinks it would not be in order.

Mr. SAGE. I desire to know if it is in order to limit the voting to the candidates who received the three highest votes on the last call?

[Several MEMBERS. "Oh, no!"]

The SPEAKER pro tem. The Chair has no power to impose any such limitation.

Mr. ROWE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. LILLY. I beg leave to withdraw the name of Mr. Westbrook.

The House then proceeded to a second vote for Chaplain, with the following result:

Whole number of votes given 199; necessary to a choice 100; of which

Mr. Milburn received	116
Mr. Tustin	55
Mr. Teasdale	22
Mr. Holmead	4
Mr. Jackson	1
Miss Antoinette Brown	1

The following is the vote in detail:

For Mr. Milburn—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, Appleton, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Ball, Banks, Barksdale, Barry, Bennett, Benson, Bliss, Boyd, Bridges, Brooks, Lewis D. Campbell, Caskie, Chamberlain, Chandler, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Cook, Corwin, Craig, Crocker, Curtis, Cutting, Thomas Davis, Dean, Dent, Dickinson, Dowdell, Eastman, Eddy, Ellison, Everhart, Ewing, Fenton, Fuller, Gamble, Goode, Goodrich, Green, Grey, Grow, Andrew J. Harlan, Saml. W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Haven, Heister, Hillyer, Houston, Howe, Daniel T. Jones, Keitt, Kittredge, Knox, Lane, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, Lindsay, Lyon, McCulloch, McDougal, McNair, McQueen, Mace, Maurice, May, Middlewarth, Morgan, Noble, Olds, Orr, Packer, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Pratt, Pringle, Reese, Richardson, David Ritchie, Rowe, Ruffin, Sapp, William Smith, William R. For Mr. Holmead—Messrs. Dick, Hamilton, Seymour, and Shower.

For Mr. Jackson—Mr. English.

For Miss Antoinette Brown—Mr. Walsh.

The SPEAKER pro tem. thereupon announced that Mr. Milburn having received a majority of the votes cast was duly elected Chaplain of the House.

On motion by Mr. BRIDGES, the House then adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 8, 1853.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER, Chaplain to the Senate.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I desire to move that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Monday next. I think this is necessary to enable Senators to prepare themselves with reference to the committees, and to make preparations for winter quarters.

The motion was agreed to.

SICKNESS IN EMIGRANT SHIPS.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. appointed Messrs. FISH, SHIELDS, SUMNER, HAMLIN, and BENJAMIN the select committee, under the resolution yesterday adopted, to inquire into the causes of the sickness and mortality on board of emigrant vessels, and report whether any and what further legislation is necessary for the better protection of the lives and health of passengers in such vessels.

DEATH OF THE VICE PRESIDENT.

Mr. HUNTER. Since the adjournment of the last Congress, an event has occurred which it becomes us to notice. The American people have lost a Vice President, and the Senate a Presiding Officer, by the death of WILLIAM R. KING, who departed this life on the 18th of April last, at his home in the State of Alabama. I rise to ask that we may pause for a day at least in our deliberations upon the affairs of life, to devote it to the memory of one who was bound to us by so many personal and official ties. Surely, sir, there are none within the limits of this wide-spread Confederacy, to whom the life and services of WILLIAM R. KING are known, who would not be ready with some offering, either of public respect or personal affection, to bestow upon his tomb. There have been few public men, whose lives have been as long and as active as his, who have made more friends, and none, I am sure, ever left fewer enemies. Nor was his one of those cold and impassive characters which shed their light without heat, but its kindly influences fell with genial and friendly warmth within whatever circle he might move.

It is a happy thing for a country when the lives of its public men may be thrown freely open to the world, and challenge its closest scrutiny, with a consciousness on the part of the friendly critic that there is no blot to be concealed, and no glaring fault which a love of truth forbids him to deny, and his own sense of right scarcely allows him to palliate. Here, at least, is a public man, in whose life there can be found no instance of a mean or equivocating action, none of a departure from the self-imposed restraints of a refined and lofty sense of honor, and none in which either the fear of man or the seductions of ambition tempted him to a deed which could destroy either his own self-respect or the respect of others for him. He trod the difficult and devious paths to political preferment long and successfully, and yet he kept his robes unsoiled by the vile mire which so often pollutes those ways. It is said, that the story of every human life, if rightly told, may convey a useful lesson to those who survive. Of all the public men whom I have known, there are none whose lives teach more impressively the great moral of the strength which public virtue gives than that of Colonel KING. His was an instance in which greatness was achieved without the aid of those brilliant qualities whose rare assemblage the world calls genius, but by what is better far, a sound judgment, a resolute purpose to pursue the right, and a capacity to gather wisdom from experience.

He was no orator, and yet from the force of character he could wield an influence which mere oratory never commanded. He had none of that presumptuous self-confidence which so often misleads ourselves and others, and which, though a dangerous, is still a commanding quality; but he knew how to inspire a people with a just confidence in the soundness of his judgment and the integrity of his purpose, so as to be looked to as a safe depository of trust and power.

Although gentle and kind in his intercourse with others, he could be stern enough when the public interests or his personal honor required it. He was a man, sir, whose whole soul would have sickened under a sense of personal dishonor.

It is not surprising, then, that each step in the political career of such a man should have been crowned with public honors. At the age of twenty-one he was elected to the Legislature of North Carolina, his native State, where he served until he was made Solicitor. In that capacity he acted until he was twenty-five years of age, when he was sent to the House of Representatives of the United States, where he served from 1811 to 1816, when he resigned to go abroad as Secretary of Legation to Mr. Pinckney, our Minister to Russia. Upon his return he emigrated to Alabama, where he was almost immediately sent to their Constitutional Convention.

And at the first session of the first Legislature which assembled afterwards, he was sent to the Senate of the United States from the State of Alabama, where he may be said to have served continuously, until his election to the Vice Presidency, with the exception of two years, when he was Minister to France. Finally, he was elected the Vice President of the United States, by a large majority of the American people. As he ascended step by step to this elevation, his vision seemed to grow with his horizon, and when the occasion came he was always found equal to it; for, to the aid of a sound judgment, he brought, as he grew older, the wisdom of a large experience.

His political career may be said to have been one triumphant march through life, a march in which his step neither faltered nor stumbled, in ascending to that place, which was perhaps the chief object of his aspiration. And yet as if to show that even the most successful of men must sooner or later feel the emptiness of the earthly objects of our usual pursuit, that much-prized honor was to him the Dead Sea fruit which turns to ashes on the lips. It came, but it came too late. The breath of public applause could not revive the flame which flickered in the lamp of life. In vain did the assiduity of relatives and friends surround him with affectionate care. In vain did the aspirations of a whole people ascend to Heaven for his recovery. The balmy influences of neither sea nor sky could revive or restore him. When the public messenger came to clothe him with the forms of office, his chief earthly wish was to see his home once more, and in the midst of familiar scenes to die amongst his friends. His desire was gratified. Life and its busy scenes on this side the grave are now closed on him forever. But its tale yet remains to be told. Not by me, sir, nor at this time. But it will be told in the chronicles of his State hereafter, when it may become a labor of love to some of her sons to write the story of its founders and sages. It will be told in our own political history by whoever may portray the stirring and eventful scenes in which he acted a prominent and useful part. It will be told, too, and perhaps heard, with most interest in the traditions of a family of which he was the ornament and pride.

Mr. President, those to whom our people have been long accustomed to look in times of difficulty and emergency for counsel and opinion, are falling fast around us. It is an anxious thing to feel their loss at a period like this, pregnant with change, and teeming, perhaps, with great and strange events. The men we cannot recall; but let us preserve their memories; let us study their teachings, and it will be well if, in many respects, we shall follow their examples.

I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That from respect to the late WILLIAM R. KING, Vice President of the United States, and President of the Senate, the chair of the President of the Senate be shrouded with black; and, as a further testimony of respect to the memory of the deceased, the members of the Senate will go into mourning by wearing crape on their left arm for thirty days.

Ordered, That the Secretary of the Senate communicate this resolution to the House of Representatives.

Mr. EVERETT. Mr. President: I have been requested to second the motion which has just been made by the Senator from Virginia. I do so with great cheerfulness. It was my good fortune to enjoy the acquaintance of the late Vice President—I hope, even some portion of his friendly regard—for a longer period probably than most of those within the sound of my voice—a period of nearly thirty years. Such being the case, I feel as if I ought not to remain silent at this last moment, when our relations to him as members of this Senate are, by the performance of this day's melancholy duty, about to be closed forever.

There is an ancient maxim, sir, founded at once in justice and right feeling, which bids us "say nothing but what is good of the dead." I can obey this rule, in reference to the late Vice President, without violating the most scrupulous dictates of sincerity. I can say nothing but what is good of him, for I have never seen or heard anything but good of him for thirty years that I have known him personally and by reputation.

It would hardly be expected of me, to attempt to detail the incidents of the private life or the public career of the late Vice President. That duty belongs to others, by whom it has been, or will no doubt be appropriately performed. I regret, particularly on this occasion, the unavoidable absence of our colleagues from Alabama. It is the province of those of us, not connected with him by political associations, especially of those inhabiting remote parts of our common country, to express their cordial concurrence in the affectionate praises, which have been or may be pronounced by his fellow-citizens and neighbors.

Few of the public men of the day had been so intimately associated with the Senate as the late Vice President. I think he had been a member of the body for more years than any person now belonging to it. Besides this, a relation of a different kind had grown up between him and the Senate. The Federal Constitution devolves upon the people, through the medium of the Electoral Colleges, the choice of the presiding officer of this body. But whenever the Senate was called to supply the place temporarily, for a long course of years, and till he ceased to belong to it, it turned spontaneously to him.

He undoubtedly owed this honor to distinguished qualifications for the chair. He possessed, in an eminent degree, that quickness of perception, that promptness of decision, that familiarity with the now somewhat complicated rules of congressional proceedings, and that urbanity of manner, which are required in a presiding officer. Not claiming, although an acute and forcible debater, to rank with his illustrious contemporaries, whom now, alas! we can mention only to deplore—with Calhoun, with Clay, and with Webster, (I name them alphabetically, and who will presume to arrange them on any other principle,) whose unmatched eloquence so often shook the walls of this Senate, the late Vice President possessed the rare and the highly important talent of controlling, with impartiality, the storm of debate, and moderating between mighty spirits, whose ardent conflicts at times seemed to threaten the stability of the Republic.

In fact, sir, he was highly endowed with what Cicero beautifully commends as the boni Senatoris prudentia, the "wisdom of a good Senator;" and in his accurate study and ready application of the rules of parliamentary law, he rendered a service to the country, not perhaps of the most brilliant kind, but assuredly of no secondary importance. There is nothing which more distinguishes the great national race to which we belong, than its aptitude for government by deliberative assemblies; its willingness, while it asserts the largest liberty of parliamentary right, to respect what the Senator from Virginia in another connection has called the self-imposed restrictions of parliamentary order; and I do not think it an exaggeration to say, that there is no trait in their character which has proved more conducive to the dispatch of the public business—to the freedom of debate—to the honor of the country—I will say, even, which has done more to establish and perpetuate constitutional liberty.

The long and faithful senatorial career of the late Vice President received at last its appropriate reward. The people of the United States, having often witnessed the disposition of the Senate to place him at their head, and the dignified and acceptable manner in which he bore himself in that capacity, conferred upon him, a twelvemonth since, that office, which is shown by repeated and recent experience to be above the second, if not actually the first, in their gift—the office which placed him constitutionally and permanently, during its continuance, in the chair of the Senate.

A mysterious dispensation of Providence has nipped these crowning honors in the bud. A disease, for which the perpetual summer and perfumed breezes of the tropics afforded no balm, overtook him at an age when he might, in the course of nature, have reasonably looked forward to still many years of active service. Clothed by a special and remarkable act of Congress, even while under a foreign jurisdiction, with the constitutional qualifications to enter upon the high office to which he had been elected, he returned, not to exercise its functions, but to seek his much-loved home, and there to die.

Thus, sir, he has left us to chase for a little while longer the shadows which he has exchanged for unutterable realities. He has left us, sir, prematurely for everything but his spotless name, and his entrance on the well-earned honors of his unambitious career. And we, Senators, for all the interchange of kindness—for all the intercourse of private life—for all the acts of cooperation in the public service—to which for at least four years the Senate was looking forward in its connection with him—have nothing left to offer to his friends and his memory but the unavailing tribute of this last mournful farewell.

I second the resolutions of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. CASS. Mr. President: Again has death invaded the high places of our land, and taken from us a citizen distinguished by his talents, his worth, and his services, and enjoying the confidence and affection of his countrymen. In the Providence of God, these visitations come to warn us, that none are exempt from the decree, that in life we are in the midst of death, and that he ye also ready is a solemn admonition, announced to us from the cradle to the grave, by the mighty and the lowly, as they successively fall before the great destroyer. The lesson is the more impressive, the higher is the position, and the more eminent the character of him, whose departure we may be called upon to mourn. And when one who occupied the second station in our country, is summoned from the duties of this life to the responsibility of that which is to come, as the loss is a national one, the manifestation of public sympathy, and the acknowledgment of the public grief, should be national also. Our lamented friend, the late Vice President, has been taken from us, full of years indeed, and of honors, but in the midst of his usefulness, and when he was just prepared to enter upon the high career to which he had been called by the American people. Upon this occasion, I desire to do little more than to express those sentiments of affectionate regard, with which an acquaintance of many years had inspired me, leaving to others, who have this day well fulfilled the task, to present those features of his character and services which endeared him to his countrymen in life, and will endear to them his memory, now that the scenes of life are forever closed upon him.

His career was eminently useful and fortunate; and in the whole range of American statesmen there are few, indeed, to whom our youth can better look, when seeking models of imitation and encouragement, than to WILLIAM R. KING.

Firm but courteous, frank and fearless, of high honor and irreproachable morals, he brought a vigorous intellect, and varied and extensive information, to the public counsels; and the ripe fruit of his experience, joined to these endowments, gave conviction to his opinion, and authority to his example. We always heard him with attention, for he elucidated every subject he investigated, and brought to our discussions the stores of his knowledge and experience, with a manner as unassuming as it was captivating. While loving the State in which he so long resided, and which had given him so many proofs of confidence and affection, he loved also our common country, and at home and abroad proved himself the true patriot, the able and faithful citizen. In all the relations of private life he was loved and honored, as well from the amenity of his manner as from the kindness of his heart, and in the social circle he was the very model of the accomplished gentleman. For almost half a century he was in the public service, and was intimately connected with many of the great events which marked that long and stirring period, and he proved himself equal to all the circumstances in which he was placed, sustaining himself with signal ability among men whose renown is written in imperishable characters upon the history of our country.

But better than all this, and above all this, he was a sincere Christian; adding another to the long list of eminent men who have searched the Gospel of Jesus and have found it the will and word of God. In his last illness, when the world and the things of the world were fast fading before him, he found hope and consolation in the promises of the Saviour; and calmly surveying the approach of death, he looked beyond its power to the glorious immortality promised to the believer. The places that knew him will know him no more; but, though dead, his memory is embalmed in the hearts of his countrymen, and there it will live, honored and cherished, long after all those who are now taking part in this tribute to his worth shall have followed him in the journey, where, for a brief space, he has preceded us through the dark valley of the shadow of death.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I can scarcely hope to add anything of value to what has been so well said by others. For the last eight months the mournful event, which is now officially announced to the Senate, has been known, felt, and lamented by us all. In the mean time, we have passed through scenes well calculated to engross our thoughts and divert our attention, if not to obscure the freshness of the first impression, or assuage the keenness of that sorrow which filled every heart. But no matter what the lapse of time or its results, the meeting of the Senate, and the absence of one whom all admired and loved, and delighted to greet and honor, call up associations and reminiscences which impart to the occasion all the effects of a sudden and unexpected bereavement. Those whose happiness it was to be associated with Colonel KING in public duty and private intercourse, are alone capable of realizing the extent of our loss. His example in all the relations of life, public and private, may be safely commended to our children as worthy of imitation. Few men in this country have ever served the public for so long a period of time, and none with a more fervent patriotism or unblemished reputation. For forty-five years he devoted his energies and talents to the performance of arduous public duties—always performing his trust with fidelity and ability, and never failing to command the confidence, admiration, and gratitude of an enlightened constituency. While he held, in succession, numerous official stations, in each of which he maintained and enhanced his previous reputation, yet the Senate was the place of his choice, and the theater of his greatest usefulness. Here he sustained an enviable reputation during a period of thirty years senatorial service, always manifesting his respect for the body by his courtesy and propriety of deportment. Here, where his character was best understood, and his usefulness and virtues most highly appreciated, his loss, as a public man and a private friend, is most painfully felt and deeply lamented.

Mr. CLAYTON. I shall only pay a debt of honor to the spirit of the dead, by offering my humble testimonial in addition to what has been so appropriately and eloquently expressed by others. A quarter of a century has elapsed since I became acquainted with WILLIAM R. KING as a brother Senator on this floor. During the greater part of that long period I was an attentive observer of his course as a public man, and I cannot in justice remain silent when an opportunity is offered of paying a tribute to the memory of one who so honorably deserved it.

That man who, dying, can be said to have passed his days without a stain upon his reputation, has justly earned the honors due to a well-spent life. The Roman poet has immortalized the sentiment—and WILLIAM R. KING may be truly said to have passed from the cradle to the grave without a blot upon his name.

The chief part of his history is written upon the records of this Senate, in which his high character as a legislator and a statesman was firmly established. I would avoid the common places employed on occasions similar to the present, when speaking of such a man. It is not enough to say of him that he performed his duties well as a member of the Senate. He was distinguished by the scrupulous correctness of his conduct. He was remarkable for his quiet and unobtrusive, but active, practical usefulness as a legislator. He was emphatically a business member of the Senate, and, without ostentation, originated and perfected more useful measures than many who filled the public eye by greater display and daily commanded the applause of a listening Senate. He never sought with some of his contemporaries to earn a brilliant reputation by the exhibition of splendid powers of oratory; and, to his honor be it spoken, he never vexed the ear of the Senate with ill-timed, tedious, or unnecessary debate. He preferred to be checked for silence rather than to be tasked for speech. Yet, on all occasions when a great issue was before the country, calling for the exercise of manly firmness, courage, and patriotism, Mr. KING was abreast with those who stood foremost for the safety and the glory of the Republic.

He graced that chair of the Senate longer than any other man that ever occupied it—not continuously, or by virtue merely of repeated elections as our temporary President, but often also at the request of the Presiding Officer. I think he was thus engaged in the performance of the duties of President of the Senate during the greater part of the terms of five Vice Presidents; and at last he reached the second office in the gift of the people—an office excelled in honor only by one other in the world. To preside over such an assembly as the Senate of the United States, and to do that, as he did it, was enough to satisfy the highest aspirations of an honorable and patriotic ambition. In this elevated position he was distinguished (and I may add he was never excelled) for the dignity of his deportment, the impartiality of his decisions, and the promptness and fidelity with which he maintained the order and enforced the rules of this body. I can remember no instance in which he lost sight of what was due to his own self-respect or the rights of his political opponents, by the indulgence of party feelings in the chair. Presiding, as he did, when party spirit raged in torrents of fire, all just men will admit that he could have been no common man who maintained his high character for justice and impartiality at such a period. A little man, at that time, would have shown his littleness by yielding himself up as an instrument of oppression to the minority. But he sought an honest and enduring fame, and he obtained it without the employment of any unworthy means, or the slightest sacrifice of principle. He engaged no hiring press, no mercenary libeler to traduce others, or to trumpet his own fame. He paid respect to the feelings of others, and rigidly exacted the observance of the same respect for himself. Generous as he was brave, his conduct to his opponents suffering under defeat, was always liberal and kind; and, by his inflexible truth, he won the entire confidence of men of all parties in his own unblemished honor.

Others have spoken of his services in other places, but I shall speak of nothing to which I was not a witness. While Mr. KING remained in the Senate, there was still one member of the body who had served with me on this floor during the memorable session of 1829-'30, and during the earlier years of President Jackson's administration. It is melancholy to reflect that nearly all the rest of the Senators of that period have closed their career on earth, and that not one of those who survive remain here with me to-day.

The master spirits of the time were among the Senators of that day. I speak not of the living. But here, then, were Clay, Calhoun, Forsyth, Webster, and Livingston, the learned and laborious Woodbury, the astute Grundy, the witty, sarcastic, and ever-ready Holmes, the classic Robbins, and, among many others justly distinguished, the graceful and accomplished orator of Carolina, Robert Y. Hayne,

*"Whose words had such a melting flow,
And spoke of truth so sweetly well,
They dropped like the serene snow,
And all was brightness where they fell."*

Oh! I could enumerate, and delight to dwell on, the virtues of them all—and then revert to him whose fame we now commemorate, as to one not inferior in integrity and honor to the proudest among them. But these reminiscences are attended by the mournful reflection that our connections with them in this world are ended forever—

*"Around us, each dissevered chain
In sparkling ruin lies,
And earthly hands can ne'er again
Unite those broken ties."*

The resolutions were unanimously adopted.

Mr. HUNTER. As a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned to Monday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 8, 1853.

The House met at 12, m. Prayer by the Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ALEXANDER P. FIELD.

Mr. EASTMAN. A slight clerical amendment was made by the Senate to the joint resolution for the relief of Alexander P. Field, which passed the House a day or two ago. I hope there will be no objection to the taking up of the resolution now, so that the amendment of the Senate may be agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a privileged question. I move that when the House adjourn to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The question was then taken on the amendment of the Senate to strike from the joint resolution the word "Isaiah," and insert in lieu thereof "Josiah A.;" and it was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Petitions are now in order from the State of Maine.

Mr. HIBBARD asked and obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House the petition and papers of Charles M. Howe, for the purpose of reference to one of the standing committees of the House.

On Motion by Mr. MATTESON, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Aaron Stafford be withdrawn from the files of the House, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. MATTESON presented the petition of James S. Abeel, of the Ordnance Department, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which motion was agreed to. On motion of Mr. MURRAY, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Roswell Minard be withdrawn from the files of the House, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

On motion by Mr. GAMBLE, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Dr. Alexander Baird be withdrawn from the files of the House, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. DRUM presented a petition for the establishment of a post route from Marchand to Newman's Mills, in Indiana county, Pennsylvania.

Mr. FLORENCE. I ask leave to withdraw from the files of the House such petitions and papers as make application for appropriations to afford better accommodations for the post office and the courts of the United States in the city of Philadelphia. I presented, at the last session of Congress, the presentment of the grand jury of the courts of the United States; and, if my memory serves me right, there was also a petition presented from the Board of Trade, informing Congress of the bad accommodation for post office and judicial purposes in that city. I move the petitions and papers I have referred to be withdrawn from the files of the House, and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. KURTZ. I ask leave to withdraw the papers of Messrs. Wells and Welsh, for the purpose of reference in the Senate.

No objection being made, leave was granted.

Mr. STRAUB. Is it in order to introduce a resolution at this time?

The SPEAKER. It is not, without the unanimous consent of the House. Petitions only are in order.

Mr. CHANDLER presented the following petitions:

The petition of John F. Dumas, asking Congress to interfere in behalf of his claims upon Spain for spoliation; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations; and

The petition of John F. Dumas, asking compensation for claims upon Spain previous to the cession of Florida; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. McMULLIN. I wish to give notice of my intention, on to-morrow or some future day, to introduce a bill for the purpose of equalizing the pay of members of Congress, so as to reduce the mileage, and so as not to exceed the present pay.

The SPEAKER. The notice will be entered.

Mr. HILLYER. I ask leave of the House to introduce the following resolution, which I hope will be read for information.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is this a call for resolutions?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. JONES. Then I hope the rule will be adhered to.

Mr. HILLYER. I hope the gentleman will permit the resolution to be read, and there will be no difficulty in passing it.

The SPEAKER. The objection is not withdrawn, and the resolution cannot be read.

Mr. CHASTAIN asked the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw from the files of the House the petition and papers of Robert Kirkham, of Georgia, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Also, the papers of Moses Perkins, of Georgia, and that they be referred to the same committee. It was so ordered.

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana, gave notice of an intention to introduce at an early day a bill granting to the State of Louisiana the right of way to a donation of public land, for the purpose of locating and constructing a railroad from Shreveport to the Mississippi river in said State.

Mr. CORWIN asked the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw from the files of the House the papers of the next heirs and legal representatives of William Dickie, a deceased soldier of the revolutionary war, for the purpose of reference to the Committee on Pensions.

It was so ordered.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move to postpone the further calling of States for petitions for two weeks. My reason for making the motion is simply this, that I see no good to be accomplished, particularly by this course. Under the rules every member can file his petitions and give notice of his intention to introduce bills. It does strike me, that this thing of calling the States day after day is a mere consumption of time without accomplishing any good. I ask, therefore, the unanimous consent of the House to submit the motion I have indicated.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I object.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would inquire whether it is in order, when States are called upon for petitions, to give notice of the introduction of bills?

The SPEAKER. It is in order to give notice of an intention to do so. That has been the practice heretofore.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Does it come under the rule which provides for the presentation of petitions?

The SPEAKER. That practice has been universally indulged in, when States were being called upon for petitions.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is it in order to move a reference of petitions to committees at this time?

The SPEAKER. By the unanimous consent of the House, that order has been made.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I shall object to a reference of petitions, for I see nothing to be accomplished in taking up the time of the House in doing that which every member can do by the simple presentation of his petitions, under the rule, at the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman misunderstood the Chair. The petitions yesterday and the day before were referred by general consent to committees which are to be hereafter raised, and they will be found in the hands of such committee.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That system cannot be maintained, if there be objections in future.

Mr. CHRISMAN asked leave to withdraw from the files of the House the petition and papers of Anthony G. Willis and heirs-at-law, asking for pay for the use of a wagon and team pressed into the service of the United States in the war of 1812, and refer them to the Committee on Military Affairs.

It was so ordered.

On motion by Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Captain Simonon, late of the United States Army, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Commerce, when appointed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, gave notice, that on to-morrow, or some subsequent day, he would ask leave to introduce a bill of the following title:

"An act for the relief of the purchasers and locators of swamp and overflowed lands."

Mr. GREENWOOD gave notice that on Monday next, or some subsequent day, he would ask leave to introduce a bill donating a portion of the public lands to aid in the construction of the Western Border Railroad, commencing with the southwest boundary of the State of Missouri, thence in a southern direction by way of Van Buren and Fort Smith, to the southern boundary of the State of Arkansas, near the Red River raft.

On motion by Mr. WELLS, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House, the papers in the case of William Blake, for the purpose of reference.

The States and Territories having now all been called for petitions, the Speaker announced the next business in order to be the calling of States for resolutions, commencing with the State of Pennsylvania.

NEWSPAPERS FOR MEMBERS.

Mr. RIDDLE. An impression seems to exist upon the part of some of the members, that a resolution, passed the first session of the last Congress, authorizes the Clerk to furnish the members of the House with such papers as they may select, within a certain limit. Such an impression has certainly arisen. Now, we always have had those papers furnished us, and the sooner we get them the better. I therefore offer the following resolution, and hope there will be no opposition to its adoption. I send to the Chair the resolution I have prepared, and, upon its adoption, I move the previous question.

The resolution was read by the Clerk, as follows:

Resolved, That during the present Congress, each Representative and Delegate may be furnished with such newspapers and publications as he shall select, not to exceed in amount, per annum, the cost of four daily newspapers.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I ask the gentleman from Delaware, who offered the resolution, so to modify it as to provide the same in amount as the Senate have voted to themselves. I do not know precisely what provision they have made upon the subject, nor do I care what it is; I want the members of the two Houses placed on the same footing in this respect; I therefore hope the gentleman will so modify his resolution as to correspond with theirs.

A MEMBER. I ask the gentleman to make the limit the cost of five daily newspapers.

Mr. RIDDLE. I accept the modification of the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] and so modify my resolution as to provide for the same number of newspapers and publications as is allowed to each Senator.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I hope no modification will be made. I hope we shall not follow in the tracks of the Senate in reference to these matters; but that the members of this House, as the representatives of the people, will restrict themselves in a greater degree, in voting these publications to be furnished at the expense of the Government. Some of the daily papers of this city cost as high as ten dollars per annum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must remind gentlemen that debate is not in order.

The question was then put on the seconding of the demand for the previous question, and carried—ayes 88, noes 43.

The main question was then put and carried.

The question recurred on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that the resolution do lie on the table.

The motion was put and lost.

The question now being on the adoption of the resolution—

Mr. SKELTON demanded the yeas and nays; which were not ordered.

The Clerk again read the resolution.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I think that we had better fix the amount. There are some papers in this city that charge ten dollars per year, and there is one daily paper that charges but three dollars.

The SPEAKER. A discussion is not now in order.

The main question was then put on the adoption of the resolution; which was carried in the affirmative.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I move that the vote by which the resolution was adopted be reconsidered, and that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The question being taken on the latter motion, it was agreed to.

LIBRARIAN OF THE HOUSE.

When the State of Virginia was called—

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, said: I move, sir, that this House do now proceed to elect a Librarian.

Mr. HILLYER. I second that motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not recollect any rule of the House which authorizes such an election.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object to the motion, unless it is in order. I think we have a very good Librarian.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Virginia state the authority under which he proposes this election?

Mr. CLINGMAN. I believe I misunderstood the gentleman from Virginia. Does he propose to elect a Librarian for this House or for Congress?

Mr. BAYLY. A Librarian of the House. The Librarian of Congress is appointed by the President of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is aware of that.

Mr. BAYLY. The Librarian of the House has heretofore been appointed by the Clerk. His appointment by that officer has been pretty much a matter of sufferance. The resolution which I propose to offer on the subject I now send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. DEAN. I rise to a question of order. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is not in order until the question of order has been settled with regard to the introduction of the resolution.

The Clerk then read the resolution, which is as follows:

Resolved, That this House will proceed at one o'clock to elect an officer to be called the Librarian of the House of Representatives, who shall have charge of its books and documents, and shall discharge the same duties and receive the same pay that are now discharged and received by the messenger appointed by the Clerk to act as Librarian: Provided, That said messenger shall be dispensed with, and that the number of messengers hereafter employed by the Clerk shall be one less than are now authorized.

Mr. DEAN. I desire to offer an amendment to that resolution, whenever it comes up for consideration; but I propose to debate it first, and therefore it lies over, I suppose.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I withdraw my objection to the resolution.

Mr. DEAN. I understand that the resolution lies over under the rule.

The SPEAKER. If debate arises, the resolution will lie over as a matter of course. Is there objection to the introduction of the resolution?

Mr. HAMILTON. There is. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the resolution is not in order.

Mr. BAYLY. When will the resolution come up?

The SPEAKER. When the State of Virginia is called for resolutions.

Mr. BAYLY. The State of Virginia was called, and this resolution was offered by one of her members.

Mr. HIBBARD. The resolution is not before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is.

Mr. BAYLY. I demand the previous question.

Mr. DEAN. I had the floor to debate the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the resolution must lie over, as it is proposed to debate it.

Mr. BAYLY. I have obviated that difficulty by calling the previous question.

Mr. DEAN. It was not called when the resolution was first offered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that it is competent for the House to determine the mode of appointing its own officers, or to change that mode. The State of Virginia having been called for resolutions, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] had a right to introduce this resolution.

Mr. BAYLY. I did not surrender the floor, except to allow the point of order to be determined.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understands it, and is not disposed to rule the gentleman out of order. The Chair thinks that is a fair administration of the rules.

Mr. BAYLY. Well, sir, I demand the previous question.

Mr. DEAN. I hope the House will not sustain the previous question. I want to amend the resolution.

Mr. LETCHER. I call the gentleman from New York to order.

The House was divided on the demand for the previous question, and there were 63 in the affirmative.

Mr. BAYLY. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BAYLY, of Virginia, and ORR were appointed.

The question was then taken; and there were—ayes 81, noes 70; so the call for the previous question was seconded.

The question was then put—"Shall the main question be now ordered to be put?" and, on a division, it was so ordered.

Mr. MACDONALD. I move to lay the resolution upon the table; and upon that motion I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The roll was then called; and there were—ayes 94, nays 108; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Willis Allen, Belcher, Bissell, Bliss, Breckinridge, Bridges, Lewis D. Campbell, Churchill, Clark, Cobb, Corwin, Craig, Curtis, Cutting, Dawson, Dean, Dutham, Eastman, Eddy, Edgerton, Filson, English, Etheridge, Fenton, Florence, Fuller, Gable, Giddings, Green, Greenwood, Grow, Hamilton, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Hastings, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hill, Hillyer, Houston, Howe, Hughes, Ingersoll, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lane, Latham, Lindsay, McCulloch, Macdonald, McDougal, McMullin, McNair, Macey, Mayall, Smith Miller, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Packer, Peck, Peckham, B. Perkins, Phelps, Pratt, Richardson, David Ritchie, Thos. Ritchie, Robbins, Rowe, Sapp, Seymour, Shannon, Shower, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hestor L. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Trout, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Wentworth, Westbrook, and Hendrick B. Wright—94.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Appleton, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Benson, Benton, Boveck, Boyce, Brooks, Bugg, Carpenter, Caruthers, Caskie, Chamberlain, Chandler, Chase, Chastain, Chrisman, Clingman, Colquitt, Cook, Cox, Cullom, Cumming, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dent, Dick, Dickinson, Disney, Dowdell, Drum, Edmunds, Edmundson, Everhart, Ewing, Farley, Faulkner, Flagler, Franklin, Goode, Goodrich, Grey, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Haven, Heister, Hunt, George W. Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Knox, Lamb, Letcher, Lindley, McQueen, Matteson, Maurice, Meacham, Middlesworth, John G. Miller, Milson, Morgan, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Parker, Pennington, John L. Perkins, Phillips, Powell, Preston, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, Reese, Ruffin, Russell, Sabitt, Sage, Seward, Shaw, Simmons, Skelton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, Snodgrass, Alexander H. Stephens, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Upham, Wade, Walsh, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Yates, and Zollcoffer—108.

So the resolution was not laid upon the table.

DEATH OF WILLIAM R. KING.

A message was here received from the Senate by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, its Secretary, as follows:

"IN SENATE, December 8, 1853.

Resolved unanimously, That from respect to the late WILLIAM R. KING, Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate, the chair of the President be shrouded with black; and as a further testimony of respect for the memory of the deceased, the members of the Senate will go into mourning by wearing crape on the left arm for thirty days.

Ordered, That the Secretary of the Senate communicate this resolution to the House of Representatives."

The message having been read—

Mr. HARRIS, of Alabama, rose and said:

Mr. SPEAKER: The tidings of the mournful event which the resolution from the Senate is intended to commemorate, have months ago been heralded to every hamlet of our wide-spread Confederacy, and the generous hearts of even distant lands have mingled their regrets with our own, that a wise and virtuous and distinguished man has been stricken from the number of earth's children. Tears have ceased to flow; and hearts the most deeply penetrated by the afflicting visitation of Providence have learned to contemplate it with that spirit of resignation which time ever supplies as a medicine for the sorrows of earth.

But in conformity with a solemn and impressive usage, the Senate, over whose deliberations the distinguished dead so long presided, with such marked ability, pauses from its labors, to consecrate a brief day to the memory of WILLIAM R. KING. And while the sympathizing sons of sister States gather around his bier, I crave the indulgence of the House of Representatives, while, in behalf of the State of Alabama, I offer the tribute of her homage and respect to the memory of her most distinguished citizen.

Recent events, familiar to us all, render unnecessary anything more than a cursory allusion to the political services of WILLIAM R. KING.

He was born on the 7th day of April, 1786, in the State of North Carolina. Coming into being almost contemporaneously with the adoption of our Federal Constitution, his eventful and protracted life covers one of the most remarkable periods in the history of the world. When the dawn of mature manhood first began to open upon him, the great experiment of self-government, whose principles were evolved from our revolutionary struggle, had just fairly emerged from the misty domain of speculation, and assumed the form and semblance of a philosophic truth. Instinct with the spirit of the age, and true, as he proved to be through life, to the principles of the republican school, he connected his fortunes with that party who claimed, as the exponents of their political faith, Jefferson and Madison.

He had no sooner attained his majority than he was elected a member of the Legislature from his native county. He was reelected the ensuing year; but the Legislature, of which he was a member, having conferred upon him the solicitorship of the judicial circuit in which he resided, he resigned his seat in that body. In 1810, so soon as he had attained the age prescribed by the Constitution, he was elected a member of Congress from the Wilmington district, in which body he continued to serve until the year 1816. During this period of American history, there were just ascending from the verge of the political horizon, and rapidly tending towards the zenith, names which were destined to illustrate the greatness of our country, and impress themselves imperishably upon her monumental records. That immortal triumvirate, Calhoun, Clay, and Webster, for whose decease the sable habiliments of a Nation's woe have scarce disappeared, were just then beginning to exhibit the giant proportions of their unmatched intellects, and entrancing their countrymen and the world by the electric power of their resistless eloquence. Randolph and Lowndes were there too—and other great names indelibly secured by the diamond pen of history's muse. Among these stood WILLIAM R. KING, a co-worker and a compeer. Differing somewhat from them all, in many of those great attributes of mind, which dazzle and lead captive the admiring throng; yet in all the elements, which go to make up the useful legislator—in prudence, caution, firmness, wisdom, and patriotism, occupying with them the same proud pedestal; and lending his influence and his voice to the successful vindication of "free trade and sailors' rights."

In 1816, Mr. KING, having been tendered the appointment of Secretary of Legation under Mr. Pinckney, resigned his seat in Congress, and accompanied that distinguished statesman, first to Naples, and afterwards to St. Petersburg. Having returned home, at the expiration of two years, he determined to break from the endearments of his fatherland, and cast his fortunes in the then almost unpeopled wilds of distant Alabama. This land was now to constitute the theater of his after usefulness. God gave him sufficient length of days to see "the wilderness blossom as the rose;" and behold the Territory, which he had adopted as his home, emerge from its chrysalis state, to the full-blown condition of a sovereign party to the Union, and under the nurturing appliances of intellect and industry, attaining a degree of wealth and prosperity commensurate with his own increasing fame.

Soon after Mr. King's arrival in the Territory he was deputed a delegate to the convention, which assembled to organize a State government. To the performance of the delicate and responsible duties of this new position he brought the aid of that matured experience he had gathered in the councils of the Union, and was one of the most active and efficient of those who laid the foundations of our State polity. So soon as the constitution was put in operation he was chosen one of the Senators from that State in the Congress of the United States. From that period, Mr. Speaker, to the time when the voice of all the people of this Union called WILLIAM R. KING to the second office in their gift—a period of more than thirty years, he continued to speak for Alabama upon the floor of the Senate; saving the brief period of two years, during which time he represented this Government at the Court of St. Cloud. In verity, he was to Alabama a true and faithful son, as she was unto him a cherishing mother! Truly, has he filled the measure of a patriot's duty, for his entire life was devoted to his country's service.

As may justly be inferred, from the long and unchecked career of success which distinguished the life of Mr. King, and the respect and confidence he always enjoyed, his popularity was not the result of those factitious aids which give to demagogues and political tricksters an ephemeral existence, but was the natural consequence and well-deserved recompense of his exalted qualities of head and heart. For forty years he brought to his country's use the rich gifts of his patriotism and his wisdom—the glowing energies of his early manhood, and the matured counsels of a wise and honorable old age. Intelligence, honesty, and fidelity distinguished the administration of every public trust confided to his hands. Amidst all the fluctuations of public sentiment and the mutations of party, he pursued the path of duty by the light of principle, and dying, leaves behind him an example of consistency and public virtue upon which the patriot may ponder with pleasure, and from which the mere aspirant for worldly honor may draw an instructive lesson. His life is a beautiful illustration of the truth, that the line of duty is alike the path of safety and the way to honor.

The personal character of Mr. KING was affluent in all those qualities which contribute to the formation of an almost perfect man. To wisdom and patriotism, as a statesman; to love of right, and devotion to principle, he added a temper respectful and courteous to others; a courage unquestioned, and honor intact. No stain blurred the pure ermine of his good name. Conceding to all men, the full measure of what was their due, he was punctilious in the exaction of what was due to himself. Exempt from that acrimony, which party collision too often engenders, and always tolerant of the opinions of others, he was inflexible and unswerving in the maintenance of his own—

"Vir justus, et tenax propositi."

In all those more intimate and tender relations which bound him to his friends, his kindred, and his servants, he was all that friendship could ask, or affection claim, or humanity and kindness enjoin. While in that higher and more solemn relation, which he bore to the Author of us all, he was exact and scrupulous in the discharge of all those duties, enjoined by a regard for the sacred behests of religion;—and in the closing scenes of life's fleeting, final hour, he leaned with humble trust upon the merits of his Savior.

"His life was gentle—and the elements
So mixed in him, that nature might stand up
And say to all the world—'This was a man.'"

In the first month of this year, the Vice President resigned his post of Presiding Officer of the Senate, with the vain hope that a winter residence in Cuba might ameliorate his health. But the balmy breezes of the ocean gem could not relume the waning fire that flickered to its end. Death was demanding its victim, and the dying patriot felt that he must needs obey the summons. He hastened home from Cuba to spend his last hours among the friends who watched with such intense solicitude his gradual decline. Like the imprisoned monarch whose life went out on the storm-rocked island of the sea, he did not wish to sleep upon a foreign strand, but rather on the banks of the Alabama, "in the bosom of the people he had loved so well," and served so faithfully. In the midst of that people he died—beneath that sod he takes his final rest. But a fragrance shall still cling around his memory, exhaled from the clustering virtues which beautified his character. Calmly he confronted the icy monster; and with Christian dignity, resigned him to his fate. "Be silent," said he, to the anxious friends around him, "let me die quietly." Silence prevailed, and quietly his noble spirit passed to the land of shadows.

"He sat, as sets the morning star, which goes
Not down behind the darkened west, nor hides
Obscured amidst the tempests of the sky;
But melts away, into the light of Heaven."

How fruitful, Mr. Speaker, in admonition to us, who were associated with Mr. KING in the direction of this great Government, and who now survive him, are the circumstances which give such melancholy prominence to the closing hours of his life. Upon the full tide of an almost popular acclaim, he had been just elevated to one of the most exalted stations of the earth. But along with the flattering consciousness of popular confidence and merited promotion, came the stunning sense that life's decaying energies were sinking to the grave. While the joyous gratulations of an admiring people were welling up from the depths of the nation's heart, and falling with thrilling accents upon the ear of gratified ambition, there was mingling with them, another voice from the spirit land, whose tones were heard above the loud tumult of popular applause, and calling to the failing statesman—

"Child of the dust, come away!"

The garlands had been thrust upon the victim, only that it might prove a more fitting sacrifice for the altar, which already smoked for its immolation. What a humiliating mockery of earth's aspirations, which end in nothingness—of its evanescent honors, which vanish at the touch! and how strikingly suggestive of the solemn reflection that

"The paths of glory lead but to the grave."

Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That from an unfeigned respect to the late WILLIAM R. KING, Vice President of the United States, and President of the Senate, the Speaker's chair be shrouded in black during the present session of Congress; and, as a further testimony of respect for the memory of the deceased, the members and officers of this House will go into mourning, and wear black crape on the left arm for thirty days.

Resolved, As a further mark of respect, that this House do now adjourn.

Mr. CHANDLER rose, and said—

Mr. SPEAKER: The spectacle presented in this House, at the present moment, is replete with instruction and encouragement.

The Representatives of a great nation pause, in the midst of the initiation of legislative business, to express respect for a citizen who owed his elevation less to those striking qualities that are sure to excite public interest and insure popular favor, than to those gentle virtues which are so slow to secure general appreciation.

The Congress of the United States, in paying the tribute of gratitude to the departed functionary, declares that it commemorates the virtue by which he achieved elevation, and thus it connects purity of social life with the honors of official distinction.

The Representatives from the State of Alabama have requested me to take a part in the discharge of the melancholy duties in which this House is now engaged. It is an honor to be called to do honor to the memory of the good; and patriotism finds a grateful exercise in recalling the obligations under which the nation rests to those who have done service to her in places of distinction.

I should have promptly declined the service, if I did not believe that my colleagues, the Representatives of Pennsylvania on this floor, shared in the sentiments of respect for the dead which I entertain, but which I shall so feebly express; and while they and their constituents, and mine, judge according to their various political creeds, of the public measures which are connected with the name and services of the deceased, they have looked through the mist with which party hostility and party partiality alike invest their objects, and have done honor to the purity of motive and the consistency of patriotism, in which those measures were proposed or advocated.

I do not suppose that, in the tribute which we are now paying to the memory of a distinguished Statesman, we are acquitting ourselves as the Representatives of the people of the indebtedness of the country for services through years of unremitted devotion. Sir, while the nation shall enjoy the prosperity with which she is now blessed, she will feel and confess her obligations to those whose talents, virtues, and devotion procured the blessing. And should adverse circumstances overtake us, we should then recall the lessons of wisdom and patriotism which the lives and services of our good men impart; and while we should lament the consequences of a neglect of their examples and precepts, we should do honor to virtues which we had ceased to imitate, and venerate the patriotism which we had forgotten to follow.

The gentlemen who have preceded me, have given to the House a sketch of the public services of the late Vice President KING. It is an instructive lesson—one that we should “teach diligently unto our children.” One that at the present time comes with peculiar pertinancy, and seems to illustrate the nature of our institutions, and to encourage the growth of quiet, unobtrusive virtues, by showing the ability of the people to appreciate, and their willingness to reward them. The history of our country shows that consummate statesmanship may be combined with the possession and professional exercise of military skill. The halls of legislation and the Bureaus of the Departments have been the arenas of noble and successful efforts of those who came from the activity of the camp to take part in peaceful forensic contests, or to discharge the duties of ministerial office. And we have seen the accomplished warrior lay aside his military trappings, and assume the garb and discharge the duties of the first office of our nation.

But while these things show the versatility of genius and the wonderful adaptation of mental powers, they lead sometimes to the apprehension that the people, who seemed so struck with the services of the military man, would overlook the unobtrusive qualities of the civilian, and forget that patriotism has its services and its sacrifices in the halls of legislation and the walks of diplomacy; and that the qualifications for lofty place were to be manifested in the silent, laborious, unpretending privacy of the closet, as well as in the more stirring and striking duties of military life.

The official life of Mr. KING redeems the people of the United States from imputations of a false estimate by a false standard of the services of their public functionaries, and it shows how much confidence may be placed in their judgment of the capability of men to discharge distinguished trusts.

The manners of Mr. KING were unobtrusive, retiring, gentle. No appearance, no act of his could be regarded as challenging attention. He moved among his fellow-men with manifestations of constant respect for their rights and their positions; and among his fellow-legislators he was distinguished for that constant deference to others which is the characteristic of excessive modesty and available talents. Abroad, sir, in Europe, he presented himself with no demands, as a man, upon the consideration of others, and no claim to distinction, in the free use of his ample means. But as the representative of a nation of freemen, he claimed the regard which his representative character challenged, and he maintained social hospitalities with the profusion which his ample means warranted, and his generous patriotism suggested.

Mr. KING, sir, was a party man. Few men, Mr. Speaker, attain political distinction in a country like ours without party attachments and party feelings. And none will more readily pardon Mr. KING for his efforts for party measures than those who, differing from him in politics, know by the purity of their own motives how to do justice to the sincerity of those by which he was influenced; and this the more readily, because the courteous bearing of that distinguished man deprived his opposition of all appearance of bitterness, drew from the defeat of his opponents, when their defeat ensued, the sting of mortified self-esteem, or imparted to his own discomfort the ease of gentlemanly submission.

Sir, from the quiet walks of life, that seemed at first to promise little eminence, Mr. KING rose to the second office in this great Republic, attaining that position, too, in the midst of all his country's greatness, in the midst of all her amplitude of extent, and in the midst of all her profusion of means; more than that, sir, in the midst of all her munificence of men.

Though absent, sir, absent to die, far from the immediate seat of his duties, yet the memory of his excellence and purity, sustained him in the affection and respect of his brethren of the Senate Chamber who seemed to feel it a pleasure as well as a duty to testify to him their full appreciation of his conciliatory habits, his sagacity as a statesman, and his justice as their Presiding Officer.

The announcement to-day of the death of Mr. Vice President KING comes to us, sir, with no surprise. The nation has already in some form manifested its regard for a faithful public servant. The announcement brings no monition of the brevity of human enjoyment and the uncertainty of human life. He had lived nearly to man's appointed time and beyond man's common lot, and had enjoyed much more than ordinary honors. It comes not now, sir, to startle us into any manifestation of special sorrow. Months have passed since he breathed forth his gentle spirit to God who gave it, and the poignant grief which his death caused even in his limited family circle has given place to the silent sorrow that occupies itself in a mournful, placid recollection of the virtues of the dead.

We listen, sir, to-day to the formal announcement of the demise of Mr. KING, that we may, by public demonstration, show to the world our respect for the high office which he vacated by his death, and our appreciation of the beautiful, moral qualities and statesman like abilities by which he illustrated all offices in his life.

The addresses on this occasion, and the adoption of the resolutions which are now on the table, can add nothing to the future happiness of the dead—cannot augment the fame which his social virtues and his public career have earned. But, sir, they tell the world that a Republic can be grateful to those who have done her service, and that republicans can appreciate those gentle qualities which give dignity and honor to a statesman's life and insure peace and consolation to a Christian's death.

Mr. LATHAM said—

Mr. SPEAKER: Gratitude for the kindness of a friend, as well as reverence for the greatness of a man, prompt me to unite my stranger voice with yours in this mournful requiem for the departed. And if an apology be needed, that thus early I claim your attention, let it be enough to say that, from the lips now cold and fixed, and the voice now hushed in death, came first the encouraging words of counsel and incentive, the gentle tones of sympathy and feeling, that have placed me, to-day, among you. I could leave to the gentlemen who have preceded me, and to the quiet meditation of my own heart, the retrospect of his irreproachable life, and the rehearsal of the noble principles that he so long and firmly advocated, were it not that over every mountain and valley, every plain and ravine of California, are scattered thick the adopted homes of Alabamians, who, while the memories of their childhood are fresh, or the graves of their fathers green, can never fail, with you, to remember the life of the statesman with exultation, or forget to mourn the death of the good man with sympathetic expression. How natural, then, that I should turn your attention to a few pages in the history of a man, who has filled every place, but one, to which the ambition of an American citizen may aspire, and has filled all with distinguished credit to himself and honor to the country.

WILLIAM RUFUS KING was a noble specimen of an American statesman and gentleman. The intimate friend of John C. Calhoun, and the cotemporary of Webster, Clay, Cass, and Benton, he maintained a proud position in the Senate of the United States, by his strong, practical good sense, his experience and wisdom as a legislator, the acknowledged rectitude of his intentions, and that uniform urbanity of manner which marked, not so much the man of conventional breeding, as the true gentleman at heart. He was no sophist to himself, and hence it was that he was truthful and sincere to all the world. His course in the Senate was considerate and dignified. He never yielded to the impulse of the moment; but made his tongue wait upon his judgment. He never knew what it was to speak, act, or legislate by indirection. He was frank and loyal to his colleagues, as he was devoted to his own State, and sincerely attached to the Union. Is it a wonder, then, that the Senate listened to every word which fell from his lips; that his voice was potential whenever it pleaded the cause of his country?

It is said that during a primary meeting held by one of the factions into which the first French National Convention was divided, one of the men who afterwards played a most conspicuous part in history, spoke but a few words, and these without emphasis. Yet such was the conviction he produced, that his views were instantly adopted. He possessed the genius of character; he believed what he said, and produced conviction in others. It is this peculiar “genius of character” which gave force and direction to Mr. KING's speeches in the United States Senate, and produced that deference to his avowed opinions and principles which none of his colleagues shared in a more eminent degree. In all that belonged to him individually, Mr. KING was the very type of an American gentleman. Free from artifice and disguise, his every thought and instinct was chivalric. Not to adventitious circumstances, not to the chances of birth or fortune, not to the society into which he was thrown, was he indebted either for the distinction to which he rose in public life, or to the grace which adorned his private character. He never borrowed thoughts or sentiments from others. His mind and heart were of American growth, while his eminent virtues served to illustrate our national character. As Americans, we recognize no standard of greatness which is not based on moral excellence, such as preëminently distinguished the early founders of our institutions and laws; and in this respect few of the great men whose names have passed into our history, can boast of a nearer approach to those great exemplars, than he whose irreparable loss we now mourn in common with the whole country. During his long and eventful life, of which a very large portion was spent in the public service, there is not an act which can be referred to but to his honor—not a suspicion that could mar the purity and luster of his escutcheon. Mr. KING became a member of the Senate in 1819, when the State of Alabama was admitted into the Union, and enjoyed the honor of representing her, with but one intermission, ever since. He was a member of that body when he was nominated for the Vice Presidency, and its presiding officer. The respect of his colleagues had already assigned him the place to which he was subsequently called by the almost unanimous voice of the people. He was from principle and conviction a State's Rights man; but he did not love the Union less because he loved Alabama more. While he was serving his own State with fidelity and honor, he was not remiss in his duties to the whole American Confederacy. Like his illustrious prototype, John C. Calhoun, he battled for the rights of his State, in order to secure that harmony between Federal and State power, which is of the essence of the Union, and without which, it is impossible to preserve our system of self-government. In the memorable session of 1849-'50, Mr. KING voted for nearly all the compromise measures as an act of devotion to the National Union, without surrendering a single cardinal point of the political faith which had guided him through life, and had secured to him the affection and attachment of the citizens of his own State. The most important event in his political history, was when he represented the United States in the Court of France during a most interesting and exciting period. It was well known that the Governments of England and France, severally and jointly, opposed the annexation of Texas to the American Union, and that similar instructions had been given by these Governments to their respective Ministers in Washington and Texas. These instructions were, no doubt, intended to be used with diplomatic effect; neither party seeming at the time willing to proceed to extremities. Mr. KING, true to his American character, and to the generous instincts of his nature, did not plunge into the labyrinth of European diplomacy. He had nothing to disguise, nothing to withhold, nothing to ask for that was not just; and with the straight-forwardness and dignity which ought always to characterize an American Minister abroad, at once demanded of the King himself a frank avowal of his intentions. Louis Philippe might have been prepared to evade the artful approaches of a Talleyrand or a Richelieu; but he had no means of refusing to answer a plain question, honestly proposed by a foreign Minister, whose official rank did not add the weight of a feather to the volume of his private character. Mr. KING received the desired reply as to the final course the French Government meant to adopt should Texas be annexed, and became at once satisfied that our relations with France would not be disturbed by the event. The King's reply was reported to Mr. Calhoun, then Secretary of State, and the annexation was accomplished, without even a protest from any European Power. Subsequently, when the diplomatic correspondence was published, Mr. Guizot, then the French Premier, attempted to raise a question of veracity between himself and Mr. KING, in regard to the reply given by Louis Philippe to our representative in Paris. But such was the character for honesty and truth he had established for himself during his short residence in the French capital, and such the suspicions with which Mr. Guizot's acts were viewed by the French public, that there was not a single French paper which dared to doubt the word of our Minister; and the aspersion was only translated from an English paper, and published in the French Government journal. The object was merely to justify the policy of France as against England; but our Minister's straightforward course put an end to even that subterfuge. He demanded, as a gentleman, that the King should respect the assurance given him in regard to Texas; and the King did respect it, and Mr. Guizot furnished a copy of it in writing to Mr. KING. Thus did not only our Government, but the person of our Minister, achieve a signal triumph over the sinuous course of European politics and statesmen.

Pending this controversy, it is said, Mr. Guizot attempted to assuage Mr. KING, by assuring him that "he had often been told that he (Guizot) lied." To which Mr. KING modestly replied, that "he had never been told so." French appreciation of sarcasm had no difficulty in discovering the true meaning of Mr. KING's caustic reply. I cannot but allude to his kind and noble disposition to bring forward, and advance the fortunes of young men, struggling up in life. I have myself been the recipient of his kindness in this respect. In all such relations he never assumed the position of patron and client. It was not his position, but his heart which determined the place occupied by his friends, and his exalted character looked to no return of favors. After his election to the Vice Presidency, when lingering under a painful and mortal disease, in a foreign country, his thoughts naturally reverted to his own beloved Alabama. Once more he wished to behold the sun of his country—once more he desired to breathe the invigorating air of home. Friend and kindred had followed him abroad; but he yearned for a wider circle of hearts beating in unison with his own. The American people had taken a deep interest in his recovery. They had a pride in seeing him occupy the position to which their suffrages had raised him. They had an abiding confidence in his integrity as a statesman, and a warm sympathy for his bodily sufferings. With breathless anxiety did the people receive the tidings of the progress of his illness, and each note of sorrow, which traveled with the velocity of light, found a painful echo in the public breast. To the people of his country did the old statesman and patriot return, to draw his last breath. Once more he trod the soil of his home; once more his eyes gladdened with the sight of his native land, free, prosperous, and happy; once more his heart beat with rapturous delight at the future prospect and greatness of this glorious Union. The strife and clamor of ruthless partisans had subsided; the olive leaf of peace had once more spread her blessings over twenty-five millions of contented beings; and as his dying lips murmured a blessing on them all, his pure soul was wafted to that unknown land, which, in the midst of the busy scenes of his life, his Christian heart always looked to as his last and surest resting-place.

"Lives of great men all remind us
We can make our lives sublime;
And departing, leave behind us
Footprints on the sands of time.

"Footprints that perhaps another,
Sailing o'er life's solemn sea—
A forlorn and shipwrecked brother—
Seeing, shall take heart again.

"Let us, then, be up and doing,
With a heart for any fate;
Still achieving, still pursuing,
Learn to labor and to wait."

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio, said:

Mr. SPEAKER, Death has so often invaded this House during the six years which I have been a member, that whenever a new Congress commences, I am strongly impressed with the conviction that some of our body, during their term of service, must pay the debt of nature, and end their lives in the public service. The Senate, though only numbering sixty-two members, rarely passes a session without being called upon to pay the usual funeral honors to some one or more of its members. Even the Executive mansion is not unfrequently invaded by the King of Terrors; and men in public station are everywhere constantly reminded, that for life, and all their earthly blessings, they are dependent upon Him "in whose hands our breath is, and whose are all our ways."

The official announcement of the death of the Hon. WILLIAM R. KING, late Vice President of the United States, and the well-deserved eulogies this day pronounced upon his character, bring freshly to our recollection the manly form and gentlemanly bearing of that distinguished man, and his long and eminent public service.

With the incidents of his private life and history I am not so familiar as to speak advisedly; but his personal friends upon this floor have clearly presented them for our consideration. I had the pleasure to know him for many years, as a public man; and to meet him often in the social circles of this city. And though we differed widely in our opinions upon some of the most important political questions that have lately agitated the country, I always found him mingling moderation with firmness, and a proper respect for the opinions of those who differed with him. A just and high sense of honor seemed to me to mark his public and private career; and I cheerfully express these views of the distinguished man, whose death we now commemorate, because I hold that no differences of opinion in politics should ever make us forget that we are all Americans; that we are all under the protection of the same Constitution and laws, and must share alike the benefits or evils that may result from our public actions. A higher motive should always check a too great asperity of political feeling, and inculcate a wise moderation and proper toleration towards those who differ with us. For, after all, the exertions of the wisest and the best men amongst us are but transient; they are vain and futile, unless sanctioned and approved by the great Author of all good. Mr. KING appeared to me possessed, in a high degree, of a wise moderation, and of a tolerant spirit; and his long experience in public life made him eminently useful. He seemed to me to combine, in a very high degree, the strictest integrity and purest honor, with what the great poet so admirably portrays—

"With all good grace to grace a gentleman."

Mr. ASHE rose and said:

Mr. SPEAKER: Having the honor to represent the county in which WILLIAM R. KING was born, and the larger portion of the district which first returned him as a member of this House—having enjoyed, in a manner grateful to my recollection, his friendship and confidence, and being at present the representative of a numerous and highly respectable kindred he left with us, I feel it a solemn duty that I should not allow the present occasion to pass without adding my humble but heartfelt testimonial to the truthfulness of the richly-deserved and high commendations which have been bestowed on him by the honorable gentlemen who have preceded me. After the indulgence of obsequial griefs, which are a fit tribute to departed worth, the soul thirsts to immortalize, to assimilate to itself the noble and virtuous endowments of deceased friends. Hence we have, as the remains of a venerable antiquity, the most magnificent Egyptian pyramids, splendid Grecian mausoleums, Roman sepulchres of extensive dimensions; but these were designed to portray the outward rather than the inward man. As ancillary to the same end various expedients and devices were adopted to perpetuate, to rescue from the destruction of time the personal appearance, after the soul had taken its flight. Vain imaginings! Empty conceits! The recorded reminiscence of a good work, of a charitable deed, of a benevolent thought are worth more than a "Pelion upon Ossa" of such monuments. Posterity is grateful, and if it can be benefited by any single incident of a man's life, the character of the benefactor will be remembered and appreciated. And if his deeds of goodness should fill a volume, posterity will never weary in "turning the leaf to read it," and to acknowledge its gratitude to the author. And such a prized volume have we afforded us by the life of WILLIAM R. KING; a contemplation of which fills our hearts with gratitude, and inspires us to rejoice, that, as one among us he lived, and to sorrow, that "he is no more."

I believe it was Philip of Macedon who gratefully sacrificed to the gods that a son had been born to him in time to derive instructions from the great philosopher, Aristotle. If such was the veneration of a barbarian warrior for a heathen philosopher, how much more grateful should we feel, both as statesmen and citizens, that our lots should have been cast in the same horoscope with that of Clay, Calhoun, and KING; in the history of each of whom, "there is a philosophy teaching by example," well-fitted to steer our frail bark down its wayward course, clear of the dangerous rocks and shoals, which are prone to wreck it. These distinguished compatriots, who, for nearly half a century, commanded the admiration of the American world, though widely differing one from another in peculiarities of character, yet each, in his life, left us a legacy which, the more we read, the more we will appreciate.

The two former "having gathered together their earthly harvest," previous to the adjournment of the last Congress, have received from their admiring friends that tribute of respect which we are now called upon to render to the last. While we do not claim for our distinguished friend either the thrilling eloquence of Clay, or the philosophical discrimination of Calhoun, yet, in the various positions which it was his fortune to fill, we find developed the true elements of moral and intellectual greatness.

"Perhaps one of the highest encomiums ever pronounced on a man in public life," said the late John Quincy Adams, "is that of a historian, eminent for his profound acquaintance with mankind, who, in painting a great character by a single line, says: 'He was just equal to all the duties of the highest offices which he attained, and never above them. There are, in some men, qualities which dazzle and consume to little or no valuable purpose. These seldom belong to the great benefactors of mankind.'" Such were not the qualities of Colonel KING; but in all the relations of life, in every position he attained, he was fully equal to their responsibilities, and discharged their varied duties with fidelity and ability.

Colonel KING was born in Samson county, in my State, April, 1786. His father, William King, was a gentleman of fortune and character. During the revolutionary war, he rendered important services to his country's cause, both by personal service and the generous use of his fortune. After the conclusion of the war, he was a member of the Convention which was called to adopt the Federal Constitution, and was repeatedly elected a delegate to the General Assembly from his county. His situation in life enabled him to bestow on his children all the advantages of education, which our country at that time afforded.

Colonel KING was sent at an early age to the University of North Carolina, located at Chapel Hill, which institution he left in his seventeenth year, bearing with him the happy consolation of having commanded the respect of his professors, the love and esteem of his associates. He studied law with William Duffy, an eminent jurist, residing in the town of Fayetteville, where he formed friendships which he preserved with affection to the day of his death. On being admitted to the bar, he settled in his native county, from which he was returned the following year as a member of the Legislature. By this body he was elected Solicitor for the Wilmington judicial district, in which situation he continued for two years. He was then again returned to the Legislature for the years 1808-9. In the year 1810 he was elected to the Congress of the United States, being the Twelfth Congress. This was a most important crisis in our national affairs. France, dominant in Europe, England, mistress of the ocean, our neutrality was grossly disregarded by each of these supercilious Powers. To our menacing protests France ultimately yielded respect. England continued her career of haughty insolence. War or national degradation was inevitable.

True Republicans avoided not the issue, but met it boldly. Colonel King acted with them with his whole soul; and, though one of the youngest members of the Congress, he was distinguished for the firm and fervid earnestness with which he supported the illustrious Madison in his patriotic efforts to sustain the honor of our country. He continued a member of Congress until after the conclusion of the war, when he accepted a diplomatic position abroad, associated with that scholar and statesman, William Pinckney. On his return from Europe, he changed his residence from North Carolina to Alabama, carrying with him the cordial respect and good wishes of all—the enmity of no one. Alabama was then a Territory, but on the eve of organizing a State government, and as soon as it was done, she, although Colonel King was then absent from the State, honored him with one of her first Senatorial appointments in the Congress of the United States—a most flattering mark of confidence, which confidence he enjoyed in the amplest manner during the remainder of his long and eventful life. It is unnecessary for me to read further from the volume of his life. His subsequent career has already been detailed by able and experienced friends. What is the lesson which posterity can learn from this volume? It is useful! It is significant! Let the honor, let the happiness of our country, as with him, be our ruling aspiration; but in its advocacy, let us so attempt, as he did, our conduct; so dispense the charities of life that we can command for ourselves the love of friends; the admiration of opponents. While such is the brilliant picture of his public career, his private life, his frank and confiding disposition, his uniform courtesy and kindness, the single-hearted devotedness of his friendship, his love of right, his hatred of wrong, his bold and chivalric temper present a character worthy of our study and emulation.

"A combination and a form indeed,
Where every god did seem to set his seal,
To give the world assurance of a man."

Mr. BENTON said:

Mr. SPEAKER: The relation in which I have stood to the eminent deceased, whose loss we all deplore, must plead my excuse for a departure from the ancient practice, which limited the number of tribute offerers, on an occasion like the present, to the mover and seconder of the resolutions which express the sense of the House at the death of a fellow member.

Natives of the same State, and nearly of the same age, we emigrated when young to, what was then, the Far West; and by the favor of our adopted States, were both returned, and nearly at the same time, to occupy seats on the floor of the American Senate. Commencing—he in 1819, I in 1820—we remained for thirty years, (with the exception of the brief interval in which he represented his country at a foreign court,) members of the same body—intimately associated in all the current business of that body, and in all the amenities of social and private life.

But my knowledge of him goes beyond thirty years—goes back to forty—and not then to the beginning of his congressional service—when I first saw him on this floor. And I mention this first time of seeing him, and in what place, to do honor to the public man who could so long retain the confidence of his constituents; and to their honor for the steadiness of their support; and to the credit of our institutions, to which such stability between constituent and representative promises a duration, not to be measured by the brief lives of those Republics whose people were given up to fickleness and versatility.

These circumstances plead my excuse for departing from a custom which limited the number of those who should have the privilege of expressing, in the presence of the national representation, their own, and the general feeling, at the demise of a brother member.

The members who have preceded me have stated, and well stated, the illustrious career of the deceased—tracing his course through a long graduation, always rising, of public honors—from the General Assembly of his native State, to the second office of his country—the Vice Presidency of this great Republic.

To me it only belongs to join my voice to theirs, and to the voices of all who knew him, in celebrating the integrity and purity of his life—the decorum of his manners—his assiduous and punctual attention to every duty—and the ability and intelligence which he brought to the discussion of the national affairs during his long service of thirty years.

Faithful to his adopted State, he exhibited, when duty to her permitted, the beautiful trait of filial affection to the honored State of his birth—a State which has so many claims upon her children, (besides that of having first given them the vital air,) for their constant and grateful remembrance—wherever they may go.

As friend, as associate, as native of the same State with the late Vice President KING, I appear on this occasion, and feel it to be, in me,—his senior in age,—a providential privilege to assist in doing honor to his memory in the presence of the national representation.

Mr. PHILIPS said:

Mr. SPEAKER: I cannot permit this occasion to pass by, without paying tribute to the memory of the deceased.

It is not, sir, to contribute to a mere ceremony, or to conform to any public expectation, that I now occupy the floor. My feelings are far too deep for such lip-service demonstration.

It was my fortune, Mr. Speaker, to have enjoyed the full confidence and friendship of WILLIAM R. KING, for the whole period of my residence in the State which I have now the honor to represent. I early learned to appreciate his high qualities; and time, which tests all things, served but to confirm my judgment. I may now safely say of him dead, what, with equal confidence, I may have said were he now living, that the Republic never produced a man of more exalted integrity, or of a higher chivalry of character.

I visited Washington for the first time a few years ago, and though it has been said, (with what truth I cannot assert,) that corruption here stalks at noon day, it was with just pride as an Alabamian, that I learned from all quarters and all parties, that through his long service in the public councils of upwards of a quarter century, he had not only preserved his reputation intact, but freed, even from the breath of suspicion.

It was this purity of character, joined to the high qualities of a remarkably well-balanced mind, that enabled him to enjoy, for so long a period, the confidence of the people of his own State, and of the whole Confederacy.

He has filled the highest offices, and discharged the weightiest duties, with honor to himself, and advantage to his country; well, therefore, may we conclude, in the language of the Presidential message, that the death of such a man is an irreparable loss to the country.

A great man has fallen, and it is fit we mourn him! Dying, as he lived, with a full knowledge of the past, and a just appreciation of the future, may I not indulge in the hope, that the light of his example may long continue to illuminate the path of the future Representatives of the State which holds his remains and cherishes his memory.

The question was taken, and the resolutions were unanimously adopted.

The House then adjourned till Monday next.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, December 12, 1853.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER, Chaplain to the Senate.

The Hon. JARED W. WILLIAMS, of New Hampshire, and Hon. JAMES C. JONES, of Tennessee, appeared in their seats this morning.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. WELLER (in consequence of the absence of Mr. NORRIS) presented the credentials of the Hon. JARED W. WILLIAMS, appointed by the Governor of New Hampshire, a Senator from that State to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of the Hon. CHARLES GORDON ATHERTON; which were read; and the oath of office having been administered to Mr. WILLIAMS, he took his seat in the Senate.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the report of the Secretary of War, transmitting, in pursuance of the act of Congress of May 1st, 1820, a statement of the appropriations applicable to the service of the War Department for the fiscal year 1852-3; the amounts drawn from the Treasury during the same period; the balances remaining on hand on the 1st of July, 1853, and such appropriations as have been carried to the surplus fund; which, on motion by Mr. GWIN, was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

PETITION.

The PRESIDENT. I ask leave to present the petition of the Iron Mountain Railroad Company of the State of Missouri, asking the right of way through certain public lands reserved for military purposes.

Mr. GWIN. I move that the petition be ordered to lie on the table until the committees be formed.

The motion was agreed to.

APPOINTMENT OF STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. BRIGHT. I suggest that we should save time by proceeding with the formation of the standing committees, and then we can refer the papers before the President. In pursuance of the notice which I gave on Wednesday last, I now offer the following amendment to the 34th rule of the Senate:

Resolved, That the 34th rule of the Senate be amended, so as to read as follows, viz:

34. The following standing committees, to consist of the number of members opposite to each, shall be appointed at the commencement of each session, with leave to report by bill or otherwise:

- A Committee on Foreign Relations, of six members.
- A Committee on Finance, of six members.
- A Committee on Commerce, of six members.
- A Committee on Manufactures, of five members.
- A Committee on Agriculture, of five members.
- A Committee on Military Affairs, of six members.
- A Committee on the Militia, of five members.
- A Committee on Naval Affairs, of six members.
- A Committee on Public Lands, of six members.
- A Committee on Private Land Claims, of five members.
- A Committee on Indian Affairs, of six members.
- A Committee on Claims, of six members.
- A Committee on Revolutionary Claims, of five members.
- A Committee on the Judiciary, of six members.
- A Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, of six members.
- A Committee on Roads and Canals, of six members.
- A Committee on Pensions, of five members.
- A Committee on the District of Columbia, of five members.
- A Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, of six members.

A Committee on Retrenchment, to consist of five members, whose duty it shall be to take into consideration the expenditures of the Government, in the several departments thereof, and to inquire whether any, and if any, what retrenchment can be made without injury to the public service, and to report thereupon, together with such propositions relative thereto as to them shall seem expedient.

A Committee on Territories, to consist of six members.
A Committee of three members, whose duty it shall be to audit and control the contingent expenses of the Senate, and to whom shall be referred all resolutions directing the payment of money out of the contingent fund of the Senate, or creating a charge on the same.

A Committee on Public Buildings, to consist of six members, who shall have power also to act jointly with the same committee of the House of Representatives.

A Committee on Printing, to consist of three members, to whom shall be referred every question on the printing of documents, reports, or other matter transmitted by either of the executive departments, and all memorials, petitions, accompanying documents, together with all other matter, the printing of which shall be moved, excepting bills originating in Congress, resolutions offered by any Senator, communications from the Legislatures, or conventions lawfully called by the respective States, and motions to print by order of the standing committees of the Senate; and excepting, also, messages and other communications from the President of the United States, and such reports and communications from the heads of Departments, as may be made to Congress or to the Senate in obedience to law, or in answer to calls from the Senate; and it shall be the duty of such Committee on Printing to report in every case in one day or sooner if practicable.

And a committee, consisting of three members, whose duty it shall be to examine all bills, amendments, resolutions, or motions before they go out of possession of the Senate, and shall deliver the same to the Secretary of the Senate, who shall enter upon the Journals that the same have been correctly engrossed.

Mr. BRIGHT. The only change proposed by this amendment to the 34th rule is, that fourteen committees are enlarged to six members each.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRIGHT. I now move to suspend so much of the 35th rule as requires that the standing committees shall be chosen by ballot, so that the list which I hold in my hand may be received and acted upon.

There being no objection, the rule was suspended, and Mr. BRIGHT offered the following list of committees for the present session; which was agreed to.

On Foreign Relations—Messrs. Mason, (chairman,) Douglas, Slidell, Clayton, Weller, and Everett.

On Finance—Messrs. Hunter, (chairman,) Bright, Gwin, Pearce, Norris, and Badger.

Mr. SLIDELL presented the petition of Francis B. Ogden, United States Consul at Bristol, England, praying to be remunerated for expenses of removing from Manchester to Bristol, under an order from the Department of State; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented several petitions of officers of the Army, praying an increase of compensation; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the proceedings of a meeting of the soldiers of the war of 1812, held in the city of Philadelphia, praying that one hundred and sixty acres of bounty land may be granted to each soldier who served during that war; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, the petition of Michael Hennessey, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a petition of citizens of Dana and Iowa counties, Wisconsin, praying for the establishment of a mail route from Ridgway, in Iowa, to Primrose, in Dana County; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. WELLER. I beg leave to present the memorial of Messrs. Warren and others, intelligent and enterprising citizens of California, praying for the endowment, by the General Government, of an Agricultural College, in the State of California, upon a permanent basis, with ample means to sustain the necessary professors of the several branches of science. I move that this memorial be referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, relative to the manner of paying Senators; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Also, a communication from the State Department, transmitting a copy of the laws passed by the Legislature of the Territory of Oregon, at its last session; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Mr. President, several memorials of the Legislature of the State of Iowa, were presented at the last session of Congress. I ask that they may now be taken from the files of the Senate, and referred to the same committees, to which they were referred at the last session, and that they be printed for the use of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. SEWARD gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to aid the State of New York in the construction of a ship canal around the Falls of Niagara.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to bring into market the lands heretofore reserved from sale in Iowa, near Forts Crawford and Atkinson; and also the lands reserved for Indian farms near Fort Atkinson, in Iowa.

Mr. FISH gave notice of his intention to introduce a bill to reimburse the Common Council of the city of New York, for expenditures made for the first regiment of New York volunteers.

Mr. SHIELDS gave notice of his intention to introduce a bill to authorize the State of Illinois to select the residue of the lands to which she is entitled, under the act of March 2, 1827.

Mr. WELLER gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill authorizing the Postmaster General to contract for the transportation of the United States mail from San Francisco, in California, to Shanghai, in China.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce bills of the following titles:

A bill to provide for the unpaid claims of the officers and soldiers of the Virginia State and Continental lines of the revolutionary army;

A bill to provide for the payment of such creditors of the late Republic of Texas, as are comprehended in the act of September 9, 1850.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CHASE, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to grant to the State of Ohio, the unsold and unappropriated public lands remaining in that State; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SLIDELL, in accordance with previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce the following bills; which were read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

A bill granting to the State of Louisiana the right of way, and a donation of public lands, for the purpose of locating and constructing a railroad from Shreveport to the Mississippi river, in said State.

Also, a bill granting to the State of Louisiana the right of way, and a donation of public lands, for the purpose of locating and constructing a railroad from Algiers, on the Mississippi river, to the Sabine river in said State.

Mr. BENJAMIN, according to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill granting to the State of Louisiana the right of way, and a donation of public land for the purpose of constructing a railroad from New Orleans to the State line of Mississippi, in the direction of the town of Jackson; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BRIGHT asked and obtained the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a bill to provide for the surrender of certain bonds of the State of Indiana held by the United States; which was read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, asked and obtained unanimous consent to introduce a bill making a grant of land to the State of Iowa to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, a joint resolution for the relief of George R. C. Floyd, late Secretary of Wisconsin Territory, and sureties; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

REMOVAL OF GREENE C. BRONSON.

The PRESIDENT. I have received a communication transmitting certain resolutions adopted at a meeting of merchants, of the city of New York, held at the Merchants' Exchange, on the 30th of October last. I have examined the proceedings, and they seem to be in the nature of a remonstrance against the removal of Greene C. Bronson from the office of Collector of the Port of New York. What disposition will the Senate make of them?

Mr. SEWARD. I move that they lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

CLAYTON-BULWER TREATY.

Mr. CASS. I desire to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President be requested to inform the Senate whether any communication has been received from the British Government, or any correspondence taken place with it, on any subject growing out of the treaty of Washington, of July 4, 1850, since the message of the President of January 4, 1853, made in answer to a call of the Senate of December 30, 1852; and if there has been any such communication or correspondence, he is requested, if compatible with the public interest, to transmit copies of the same to the Senate.

As this is a mere resolution of inquiry, I suppose there will be no objection to its consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. CLAYTON offered the following amendment:

And also copies of all instructions to our Ministers in England, and of all correspondence in relation thereto.

The amendment was agreed to; and the resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

ELECTION OF PRINTER TO THE SENATE.

On motion by Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin, the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, submitted by him on the 7th instant:

Resolved, That the Senate will, on —, proceed to the election of a public printer, to do the public printing for the Thirty-Third Congress, in accordance with the eighth section of the act "to provide for executing the public printing, and establishing the prices thereof, and for other purposes," approved August 26th, 1852.

At the suggestion of Mr. BRIGHT, the resolution was amended by striking out the word "on" and the blank, and inserting the word "forthwith."

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

The Senate accordingly proceeded to ballot for public printer, with the following result:

Whole number of votes cast 44; necessary to a choice 23; of which

Beverly Tucker received.....	26
Robert Armstrong	17
Gales & Seaton	1

Beverly Tucker having received a majority of the votes cast, was declared duly elected.

ADDRESSES ON THE DEATH OF THE VICE PRESIDENT.

Mr. ADAMS submitted the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing cause to be published and bound in pamphlet form, in such manner as may seem to them appropriate, for the use of the Senate, ten thousand copies of the addresses made by the members of the Senate and members of the House of Representatives, together with so much of the message of the President of the United States, as relates to the death of the Hon. William R. King, late Vice President of the United States.

COMMITTEE ON REVENUE FRAUDS.

Mr. JAMES submitted the following resolutions which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Select Committee appointed by the Senate, at the first session of the Thirty-Second Congress, to investigate the mode and manner of the importation of merchandise into the United States, with the view of ascertaining whether any and what frauds have been committed against the revenue laws, be permitted to make their report at the present session of Congress.

PORT OF ENTRY IN MICHIGAN CITY.

The following resolution, submitted by Mr.

PETTIT on the 6th instant, was considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a port of entry at Michigan City, in the State of Indiana; and also of making an appropriation to continue the improvement of the harbor at that place."

REPORT ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

On motion by Mr. WALKER, it was Ordered, That fifteen hundred extra copies of the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs be printed for the use of the Senate.

REVISION OF REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a joint resolution, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury, to pay the expenses of codifying and revising the revenue laws, of the introduction of which I have not given previous notice.

No objection was made, and the joint resolution was read a first time.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask for the second reading and consideration of the resolution at this time, for the following reason:

On the 23d day of February last, I think, a resolution was reported from the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to codify the revenue laws—the rules and regulations for collecting the revenue—which was adopted by the Senate. An amendment was made by the Senate to the civil and diplomatic appropriation bill, making an appropriation of $10,000 for the purpose of defraying the expense of that codification. I went to the House of Representatives, and, I believe, was rejected by the House. On the recommendation of the Committee of Conference, however, it was adopted, and should have become a law; but owing to the confusion and haste incident to the closing of the session, it failed to be enrolled. There was, therefore, a positive resolution of the Senate, directing the Secretary of the Treasury to codify the revenue laws; and an appropriation had been passed by both branches of Congress under that resolution, directing the Secretary to appoint a commission. The commission has been at work for the last three or four months, and the Secretary is now without the means of paying the expenses; I therefore ask that the resolution may be passed at this time.

The resolution was read a second time, and considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay out of the Treasury, for defraying the expense of revising and codifying the revenue laws, ten thousand dollars.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

SENATE ELECTIONS.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I desire to give notice that I shall to-morrow, or on some early day, introduce a resolution providing that all elections by the Senate shall be viva voce, instead of by ballot. When I vote on the question of the election of public printer, or any other matter, I want my constituents to know how I am voting. An election has been made here to-day which I think is anything but complimentary to the Democratic organization. I make no reflection upon those who have voted as they saw fit; but when I vote, I want my constituents in Iowa to know how I vote. I want it to go abroad and be known that to-day I voted for Robert Armstrong for public printer.

RAILROAD IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate take up, with the view to its reference to the Committee on the Public Lands, the following bill introduced by me on the second day of this session:

A BILL to make a donation of the public lands to the State of California for the purpose of constructing a railroad and telegraphic line from the city of San Francisco to the Colorado river, or southeastern boundary of said State, with a branch passing through the valley of the Sacramento river to the boundary line between said State and the Territory of Oregon.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, for the purpose of constructing a railroad and telegraphic line from the city of San Francisco to the southeastern boundary of the State of California, with a branch of said railroad and telegraphic line passing through the valley of the Sacramento river to the Oregon Territory, or the northeastern boundary of California, at such point of termination as may be designated by the Legislature of said State, a quantity of land equal to the alternate sections for the width of forty miles on each side of said railroad and branch, to be selected from the sections which shall be designated on the public surveys of said lands by odd numbers, is hereby set apart, appropriated, and granted to the State of California, to aid in the construction of said railroad and branch thereof, and telegraphic lines, in the manner, and subject to the terms, conditions, and restrictions hereinafter mentioned: Provided, That the terminus of said railroad and telegraphic line on the southeastern boundary of California shall lie on the line of direction of the route of any railroad that may be located to connect the Mississippi river with the Pacific ocean; and that no more or greater distance of the railroad herein provided for shall be located than may be constructed in a line which, from necessity, would be common or unavoidable to any railroad that might be constructed from the middle or southern portion of the Mississippi valley, until the location of such railroad be determined upon and will intersect the eastern or southeastern boundary of California, when the location of said railroad from San Francisco in that direction shall be completed to the said point of intersection.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That in all cases where the United States may have disposed of any lands herein designated for selection by said State, or where, from any cause, the United States shall be unable to convey a title to the same, the deficiency may be made up by selections to be made, under the authority of the Legislature of the State of California, from any unoccupied and unappropriated lands belonging to the United States within that State, or from any such land as may have been occupied, with the consent of the occupant, and which shall be nearest to said railroads and telegraphic lines, respectively, within said State; and that for the purpose of facilitating the said selections, and the construction of the said works, the President of the United States shall cause the public lands, for the width on each side of said railroads and telegraphic lines as stated in the first section of this act, to be surveyed and marked in advance of the same as the work progresses.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the grant of land made by this act shall be on the condition that the State of California commence the said railroads and telegraphic lines within one year succeeding the first session of the Legislature thereof after the date of this act, and complete the same within ten years thereafter; and that, when completed, all troops, seamen, arms, munitions of war, military and naval stores, and funds, and other property whatsoever belonging to the United States, and all persons in the employment of the United States, being on official business, shall at all times be conveyed and transported, with their baggage, on and over said railroads free of any charge or expense to them or to the Government; and also, all telegraphic dispatches within that State on Government business; but, should cases of emergency arise in the public service, requiring an extraordinary quantity or amount of transportation, so as to affect the interest, income, or profits of said railroads, to such a degree as to operate oppressively, or to prevent the reception of the costs and expenses of the said railroads, to be judged of by the President of the United States, he shall determine the amount of compensation which shall be just and reasonable for such extraordinary service; and should the same be deemed inadequate by the State of California, or those acting under its authority, the matter shall be submitted to Congress for a final determination. And the United States mail shall at all times be transported on said railroads, under the direction of the Post Office Department, at such rate of compensation as Congress may by law provide.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That the rates of charge for the conveyance of passengers and transportation of goods, wares, and merchandise, and all kinds of freight, on the said railroads, shall be such that, with a careful and economical management of the same, the net income or profits thereon may not be reduced below the rate of eight per cent. per annum upon the amount of the costs and expenses of the said railroads; and that Congress may by law, at any time hereafter, fix, alter, and regulate the aforesaid rates of charge, so as to limit or restrict the same to any rate above that specified in this section that may be deemed proper.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That the said road shall be constructed throughout in a thorough, substantial, workmanlike manner, with all necessary drains, culverts, bridges, viaducts, crossings, turnouts, sidings, stations, watering places, and all other appurtenances, including the complete equipment of locomotives, of sufficient speed and capacity, commodious and comfortable passenger cars, and freight cars, adapted to the business to be done; and the obligation hereby imposed upon the State of California shall so cover, in detail, all of these provisions, as to secure the construction, maintenance, and equipment of roads at all times equal, in both respects, to a road of the first class, when thoroughly organized for business; and shall also provide for the constant supervision of a sufficient number of competent, skillful engineers; the gauge of said roads to be uniform throughout, and the rails of the best quality, weighing not less than sixty-four pounds to the yard.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That the lands hereby granted to said State of California shall be subject to the disposal of the Legislature thereof for the purposes specified in this act; and should the aforesaid railroads, or branch, not be completed within the ten years, as limited in this act, the said State shall be bound to pay to the United States the net amount which may have been received from the sales of any part of said lands by the said State, and the title to remain valid in the purchasers under said sales, and the title to the residue of such land remaining unsold shall reinvest in or revert to the United States, and be held as other public land, in the same manner as if this act had never passed.

The provisions of the bill are familiar to the members of this body who served in the last Congress. It differs in some respects from the form of the bills granting donations from the public lands for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads in the several States, which, after elaborate discussion, passed the Senate by a large majority. It differs in the quantity of land asked for, which I will be able, I hope, to satisfy the Senate and country is not exorbitant. It also differs in not raising the price of the alternate sections reserved to the Government to two dollars and fifty cents per acre. My object in leaving out this feature of bills that have met with the approval of the Senate, will be explained by reference to the homestead bill introduced by me, and which, before I take my seat, I shall ask to be referred to the Committee on Public Lands. The policy I intend to advocate on this floor is to grant alternate sections of the public lands to the States in which they lie, to aid such roads as, with proper restrictions, they may charter, and open the whole of the residue of the public domain to actual settlers, citizens of the United States, or having signified their intention to become such; who, after three years' occupation, shall have a fee-simple title to a quarter section for each settler, being the head of a family. My reasons for favoring the policy of thus disposing of the public domain I will explain more at large when these measures are acted on by the Committee on Public Lands and reported back to the Senate.

This bill, Mr. President, is intended to be the basis of the great railroad from the Pacific to the Mississippi. The point of commencement is San Francisco, the great center of commerce, wealth, and population on our Pacific coast, running thence to the southeastern boundary of the State, there to meet such route as may be determined upon by Congress, passing through the territories of the United States to the States on the Mississippi river. From this main track the bill provides for a branch, running north to the Oregon line, or to the northeastern boundary of the State. The object of establishing this branch is to connect with the route, if one should be discovered practicable, passing the Sierra Nevada at Noble's pass, and running east through the South pass to the waters of the Missouri river, or to connect at the Oregon line with the route surveyed by Governor Stevens, if it should be discovered practicable. My object in framing this bill, Mr. President, is to afford a connection with any route that may cross the continent to the Pacific ocean.

The quantity of land asked for is large, but the proposition is not new to the Senate. The distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] reported, from the Committee on the Territories, during the last Congress, a bill granting the same amount of land to California, to enable that State to construct the portion of the great national railroad located within its borders. That bill was matured in the Committee on the Territories, of which I was at the time a member, after the most elaborate examination of the subject, and the committee were unanimously of opinion that the quantity of land asked for in this bill should be granted to California to enable that State to complete its portion of this great work.

During the last Congress I introduced a bill embodying, as this does, the main features of the one I have referred to as emanating from the Committee on Territories. It was elaborately discussed during that session, but not finally acted upon. I bring the measure forward at the commencement of the session, with an earnest hope that it will be acted upon at an early day.

I confine my efforts, Mr. President, in favor of this measure, to the boundaries of my own State. The bill avoids all constitutional difficulties in the construction of this great national highway. It asks for a grant of the public domain to the State to aid in its construction. The President, in his annual message, favors this policy. Congress has heretofore adopted it in several of the States, to wit: Illinois, Mississippi, Alabama, Missouri, and Arkansas. The policy of thus disposing of a portion of the public domain in these States, has been eminently successful, and it will prove to be so in all the States and Territories, if a wise precaution governs our legislation, making the grant to such works as will undoubtedly develop the resources of the country. I know this bill will meet with opposition, from the quantity of land that it proposes to donate to the State of California.

I anticipated this difficulty, and am prepared to meet it. I have documents before me which I will read to the Senate, in order that they may thus reach the Committee on Public Lands, to aid them in their deliberations on this bill, which show the vast difficulties that must be overcome in California in the construction of this great national highway. I have, during the past summer, traveled over a great portion of the route in California, and can corroborate the statements I will now read to the Senate:

DEPÔT CAMP, POSE CR., August 30, 1853.

DEAR SIR: During our short interview on the Dry Creek, (where, unfortunately, I was too unwell to talk to you as much as I wished,) you requested me to write to you before you left for Washington, to give you such information as I could concerning our railroad. As I have an opportunity of sending to Fort Miller to-morrow, and may not have another, I write now, earlier than I intended.

After we left you we came direct to this creek, where we made our depôt camp, (there being no grass on Kern river,) and after remaining two or three days for astronomical observations, I left with a small surveying party for Walker's Pass, and thence followed along the backbone of the Sierra Nevada to the southward, examining every depression on the ridge till I came to the Tejon. I then went through the Cañada de los Uras, entered the basin to the northeast of the Sierra, crossed the plains to the eastern end of the Tejon pass, (wagon road,) and went through this pass, thus again getting into the Tejon, by which I mean the portion of the valley nearly inclosed by the hills. Afterwards I went some twenty-five miles to the westward, examined the Cañada de San Arminio, and finally reached here last night, having been absent twenty days.

I have had a very satisfactory trip, as I have obtained a thorough knowledge of the mountains from Walker's Pass on the north to the coast range. I am satisfied that there is no pass or depression on the mountains that has not been examined, and now I am prepared to go to work, understandingly, surveying. I am, however, much disappointed in the mountains themselves, as they are much higher and steeper than I expected to find them. It is difficult, in merely riding over a mountain, to judge correctly of the altitude gained, and the slope; and what appears a fine gently ascending valley, may, upon calculation, prove to be an ascent of three hundred or four hundred feet to the mile. The Tejon Pass, for instance, which you ascended, has its summit about four thousand five hundred feet above Kern Lake, and nearly all this ascent is to be gained in ten miles, or must be reduced by tunneling. The Cañada de los Uras is the lowest point of the sierra, and is three thousand one hundred feet above this place. These numbers are approximations from rough calculations.

We shall move camp at once from here to the Tejon, and I shall then commence surveying with a level, compass, and chain, through the Tejon Pass, the Cañada, &c., and you may rest assured that I shall not leave these mountains till I have data from which to make a report, based upon numbers and calculations which no one can dispute.

From what I have said, you will see that the difficulty of crossing the mountains is greater than we supposed. The extent of the difficulty, I am not, at present, able to state; and will not be till I have made a survey. As to the practicability of crossing, I have no doubt, and am inclined to think, the best point will be one of the passes leading into the Tejon. I conceive Walker's Pass to be almost out of the question; and if it were as good as the others, to be badly situated.

Truly and respectfully yours,

R. S. WILLIAMSON,
Lieut. U. S. Topographical Engineers.

Hon. WM. M. GWIN,

DEPÔT CAMP, CALIFORNIA, (on Pose Creek,) }
August 23, 1853. }

MAJOR: Since our arrival, and on the way here, I have had something of an opportunity of obtaining considerable information which is both new and interesting to me; and hoping it may be so to others, I will give it for what it is worth. I find that the character of the great Tulare Valley is very different from what most people have generally supposed. Although I had seen both ends of it several years ago, I had formed a wrong opinion of its value and advantages. At the southern extremity, I saw a very pretty, arable spot, and had formed the idea that it was much larger in extent than is really the case, and that there were other and similar locations. But to be more particular, I will begin at the northern extremity and come south, describing it as I go.

On the eastern side.—The valley, by the way of the wagon road, from the San Joaquin river to the Tejon pass, is about one hundred and ninety-seven miles in length, say in a straight line one hundred and fifty miles, and on an average, about fifty miles in width, or in area seven thousand five hundred square miles. From the San Joaquin to King's river, it is a dry and arid plain. On King's river there is a narrow bottom, averaging about half a mile wide by twenty-five long; twelve and one-third square miles. From King's river to the first of Four Creeks is a dry plain. Here is one of the most beautiful and fertile spots in California. In extent it is about twenty-five miles by ten, and about one half of it is at present susceptible of cultivation, the other half will require a great expenditure of labor in draining to make a portion of it inhabitable—say two hundred square miles in all. From the Four Creeks to Tula river is a dry, arid plain, little or no arable land on it. Tula to Kern, a dry plain, little or no arable land on it. Kern river there is a barren plain. On Kern river there may possibly be twenty square miles of inhabitable land. From Kern river to Tejon pass, a sand plain. At this point there may possibly be one hundred and fifty miles of tolerably good land though in some portions it is very handsome, and the soil of most excellent quality. Through the whole length of this valley runs a tula marsh, which expands in some places into lakes. These lakes are, during most of the time, connected by a sluggish stream of water, and bordered by marshes of tula, but during very dry seasons, these canals or channels are dry, and the lakes are nearly or quite so. A Mr. Anderson tells me he crossed the valley from east to west, to about the middle, in 1844, and found the whole valley dry, with no water from mountain to mountain. The average distance from the Sierra Nevada, on the east to this marsh, is about twice as great as the distance from the marsh to the coast range of mountains on the west. As there are no streams making down from the coast range into this marsh, except in very wet weather, the whole of that portion west of the Tula lakes is worthless in the extreme.

The proportion, then, of this immense valley which can possibly be looked upon as inhabitable is small indeed—in all not more than three hundred and seventy-five square miles, or one twentieth part. With the exception of the places above-mentioned, there is little or no timber throughout the length and breadth of the whole valley. The Indians throughout this valley (and the same may be said of those in all this part of California) appear to have no particular name for any of their lakes, rivers, plains, or mountains, but call that one, or that portion of either occupied by them, after the name of the particular tribe or rancheria living there. The names thus derived of those portions of the above-mentioned Great Tula marsh, where it expands into lakes, are, commencing at the north, Tache, Cho-tache, Cho-lam, Tu-lum-ne or Kern, and Tu-lá-ris (commonly called Buena Vista) lakes. Kern river, near where it expands into Kern lake, is called, by the Indians, Posin-cu-la; higher up, the La-ha-lan; and in the mountains, Chi ma-wee-yá. Pose creek is called How-che, or Haugh-che. It is a great pity that the Indian names of the different natural features of the country could not be preserved, instead of replacing them by those of pseudo discoverers, who take this means of gratifying a prurient desire for fame, at a great expenditure of good taste, common sense, and common justice. In a few years more these Indian names will be all that remains of a once powerful but rapidly decreasing people, victims of cruelty, injustice, and the various diseases which follow in the wake of civilization. The Indians that live in this valley, reside, for the most part of the time, along the base of the mountains. They have no permanent residences down in the plains, on account of the great annoyance which they experience from the mosquitoes, ants, and other insects. They come down, however, at the proper seasons to fish and gather the roots of the tula, wild rice, and grass seeds, for food. Upon these, together with the acorns of the mountains, and a little game which they contrive to kill, they manage to eke out a most miserable existence; but, when very hard off for food, they are compelled to resort to theft. They have the reputation of being most accomplished thieves; but I know, from the best authority, that a great deal of the credit they have obtained for this kind of rascality is justly due to a class of Americans stopping on the Four creeks, King's river, and at some other points as far north as Stockton—particularly as to the stealing of horses, mules, and cattle. Among those to whom the most credit should be given, are two men, partners in business, (contact business deponent saith not), by the name of Dick Boat-rights and J. S. Hawkins. These two men live on the Merced river, below Snelling's rancho. They make, as do many others of the same stamp, a periodical visit to the vicinity of the Tejon pass, bring down a few goods, and a quantity of liquors, and always go back with a number of horses and mules which they say they have purchased from the Indians, but that some one has stolen them, is shown by the fact of none having been visited with the brand of the owner. However, after they get further north, they manage to get an iron, which serves the purpose of a vent; a piece of common hoop iron can be very easily bent so as to answer the purpose desired.

Before I proceed any further, I am going to ask myself several questions. What is the necessity or use of Fort Miller as a garrison post? What are the objects to be accomplished by having troops there? As they are at present located, can those objects be accomplished? If not, what more advantageous location can be selected? I say I ask myself these questions, because I have formed my own ideas upon the different points, or rather have presumed that such and such was the case.

I would say that as to actual necessity, there is none; and their only use is, to act as a sort of nucleus for about a hundred lazy, shiftless vagabonds, who constitute "Mug-ginsville," or "Millerstown." The Indians in that vicinity—and I am surprised at their paucity—are very peaceable—in fact they are too much diseased to be otherwise; and (were they not, the white men more than equal the Indians in numbers, men, women, and children.)

Some of the objects to be accomplished are, I presume, to protect the Indians from the white man's abuse, and the whites from the Indians' retaliation, commonly called outrages or depredations. To prevent the Indians from the mountains from stealing from the inhabitants on the plains, or from any other section of country, or to keep peace amongst the different tribes or Rancherias.

As to the possibility of accomplishing these objects, I, of course, cannot say; but I can say that they are not accomplished, nor do I think it possible for the troops at Fort Miller to accomplish them. I will explain: There is no business carried on in California more successfully than that of horse stealing by Indians and white horse thieves in this section of country, and no section, so long as it is occupied by those whose business it should be to check it as much as possible, presents more advantages for the business.

The Indian thieves live along the east side of the coast range, from the Cajon pass up as far as the Tejon pass, and along the east side of the Sierra Nevada as far north as the head waters of the Merced and Tuolumne rivers. These Indians are all connected together; but the largest and worst band live just north of the head waters of Kern river, and in the vicinity of a large lake, probably the one put down on Fremont's map (Fremont never was there, though a portion of his party was) as Owens's lake. They are called the Sey-pan-te-se tribe, and in the Indian language the Mez-tene-os, (or bad Indians.) Now imagine yourself in Tejon pass, to the north you have the great Tula and San Joaquin valleys, to the east the eastern slope of the Sierra Nevada, to the south the eastern slope of the coast range, and to the southwest and west, the passes of San Francisco and Walker's pass, leading to Los Angeles, and Santa Barbara respectively. (This last pass is named after an Indian chief, called Wal-ke-ra, and by Americans perverted into Walker's; and is the Walker's pass of the coast range, not of the Sierra Nevada. He is from the river Severn, and the most expert horse-thief in all California. He is a Eutaw chief, speaks Spanish, and has a large band with him; and several of the Rancheros, amongst whom is Williams, pay him tribute or black mail.) From this point you can go with wagons in each of the directions mentioned, except to Santa Barbara. Bear in mind the fact, that the mountain Indians are those who steal and commit all the depredations, (though those in the plains may be cognizant of the act,) and also that they live on the east side of the mountain range. They go to the southern country, steal animals, run them out of the Cajon or San Francisco passes, bring them north, run some of them into the Tula valley, through the Tejon pass, dispose of them to traders, (many of whom are deserters from the army,) and take the rest on north and cache them near the head waters of the Merced and Tuolumne rivers, and then at their leisure dispose of them to these or other Americans and Californians. A large proportion of the animals stolen are killed for food, or used by the Indians as saddle animals. Among these horse thieves are a great many Indians who were brought up on the missions; they speak the Spanish language, and are commonly great rascals. Now, the nearest practicable way to get at any of these Indians, starting from Fort Miller, is to go by this point: fifty miles from the Tejon pass. (It is said, with what truth I know not, that horses are stolen from the north, and taken to the south by the same routes.) In fact, for all movements against these Indians living between the Cajon pass on the south, and Carson valley on the north, the Tejon, or Walker's pass, (though I think the former by far the preferable location,) appears to be the two best points from which to start; and as the great sand plain on the east, and the coast range on the west, necessarily force all travelers by land between the above-mentioned limits, to go by this point it is most admirably adapted for all the purposes of a frontier post. There is an amount of good land sufficient for raising a supply of grain, or supporting a number of animals adequate for all practicable purposes. The distance from San Pedro, to Los Angeles, is twenty-seven miles, and from Los Angeles, to the Tejon pass, but eighty-five, and all but a few miles a most excellent and level wagon road, with plenty of grass, water, and wood: it being at an elevation of several hundred feet above the valley, the wind blowing fresh most of the year, and no marshes in the vicinity, nothing should prevent it from being one of the most healthy spots in the healthiest country in the world. From what I have already said, you can readily imagine what would be my answer to the last question. Another idea has struck me very forcibly, this point—the Tejon pass—is right in the midst of the very Indians who go to Jurupa, (a post garrisoned by fifteen or twenty soldiers, and within rifle shot of a settlement of five hundred stalwart, two-fisted Mormons,) and steal animals almost every moon. Thus, then, stands the case: The Indians which the troops stationed at Fort Miller will hereafter have to watch over, live to their east and south, and those under the charge of those stationed at Jurupa, come from their north. How would it work to bring those from the former place one hundred and seventy-five miles south, and those from the latter place one hundred and twenty-five miles north, where they would be joined in one body, and furnished with supplies from San Pedro by wagons, one hundred and twelve miles, or from Santa Barbara by pack mules, about eighty-five miles, or from Memphis, by railroad, distance unknown? Each would then be in the very best position to accomplish the objects most necessary, and to perform the duties which will hereafter devolve upon them.

Between Walker's pass and the Tejon pass, and about thirty miles distant from each, there is plenty of pine timber for building purposes; and although it is in the mountains, is accessible. I am thoroughly convinced, that could the General form his ideas from actual observation, he would agree with me in most of the views I have advanced above; and I have not the slightest doubt but that the posts of Fort Miller and Jurupa will be broken up within a year from this time.

Lieutenant Williamson is getting along remarkably well with his survey. He has completed his reconnaissance of all that portion of the Sierra Nevada from the head of Kern river to the coast range, and a most thorough one he has made. Walker's pass is of no account at all. He will proceed, as soon as the wagons arrive from Fort Miller with the subsistence stores, (and what detains them I cannot contrive for they are now due six days,) to run several lines of levels through the different passes in the vicinity of the Tejon. Nothing as yet has been heard from Beal. The body of the man who strayed from Lieutenant McLean's party, was found on the plains between Kern river and the Tejon. The weather is quite warm, varying from 95° to 105° at mid day, and in the cool shade, and from 45° to 60° at sunrise in the morning. Although the difference of temperature during twelve hours has been as great as 50°, yet this great change is hardly felt. It has been raining for the last ten days, or a fortnight, over in the basin or plain beyond the mountains, some days quite hard. We had considerable of a shower here on the 17th instant, lasting about three hours, and wetting the ground an inch or more in depth. Please excuse my prolixity and freedom of speech; and should the communication contain any ideas you may consider worthy of attention, you can make what use of them you may think proper.

I remain, very truly and respectfully,
GEORGE STONEMAN,
First Lieut. Dragons.
Major O. Cross, Quartermaster U. S. Army.

I have, in addition to these interesting statements, notes of Mr. Aubrey's expedition from the Tejon pass to the Rio del Norte, at Albuquerque, which I will read to the Senate:

NOTES BY F. X. AUBREY.

TEJON PASS, July 10th, 1853.—As the country between this point and San Francisco is well known, I have kept no minutes of my journey thus far. We crossed the Sierra Nevada at the Tejon pass, which is about the thirty-fifth parallel of latitude, and about fifty miles south of Walker's pass. From this point, we will travel east until we reach the Rio Grande, at Albuquerque, New Mexico. It is well to remark that, unfortunately, there is no one with us who knows anything of the country through which we must pass, and we could not obtain any information in regard to it. My party consists of eighteen men—twelve Americans and six Mexicans. Messrs. Tully, of Santa Fé, and Adair, of Independence, have joined us for a pleasure trip. We use pack animals entirely, having neither wagon nor carriage.

July 11.—Left the pass, and made twelve miles east, over a level, gravelly, and sandy soil, and found a spring of good water.

July 12.—Traveled twenty miles eastward. The country similar to that of yesterday; we met with no timber, but found several springs of fresh water; there is timber in the mountains, about the Tejon pass, but none on the eastern side of them.

July 13.—Traveled to-day thirty-five miles east, and struck the Mohave river, where we found plenty of good water. This river sometimes disappears in its course, whilst at others it contains as much as two feet of water. There is a little cottonwood timber upon its banks, and canebreaks in great abundance. The cane is not of the large species.

The Mohave takes its rise in the San Bernardino mountains, which lie to the south of us, and after pursuing a northern course to a point a little north of our present camp, turn suddenly east, and soon south of east, to empty into the great Colorado. Found good grass for our animals.

Made twenty miles back along the Mohave, and found water, timber, and grass abundant.

July 15.—Continued along the river about eighteen miles further in a direction nearly east; then leaving the Mohave to our right, we traveled fifteen miles northeast. Met with abundance of grass, a little timber, and a few miles of fertile land, along the river. There is no water in the bed of the stream, but it may be had by digging a few feet. Found wild cane from time to time. Encamped without water, grass, or wood.

July 16.—Still pursuing a northeastern course. We traveled to-day thirty-five miles, over a level, gravelly soil. We have deviated from our due east course, in order to avoid a region of sand hills that lie to our right, and directly between us and the great Colorado. The weather is very hot, and no rain has fallen since we left the pass. So far we have met with neither Indians nor game of any kind. We obtained a little water about half way in our day's journey, but saw no timber or grass.

July 17.—Made thirty-three miles, northeast, over a level, gravelly country; about half way, obtained a little very bad water. No grass or timber in sight during the day; but at night we obtained good water, grass, and wild cane. Prairie mountains lie on both sides of the trail.

July 18.—Traveled twenty miles, still northeast, over a level country. Saw but little good land, and no timber. After traveling about five miles, we found good spring water, but encamped without any.

July 19.—Course still northeast; distance, thirty-two miles, country level, soil inferior; grass and water, but no timber.

July 20.—Made twenty miles northeast, over a level, gravelly country, and obtained good spring water and grass. Saw no timber.

July 21.—Were detained in camp all day, by the sickness of one of the men.

July 22.—Traveled twenty miles east southeast, most of the distance through a little cañon, where we found grass, water, and cane in abundance, and struck the great Colorado of the west. The river, at this place, is over three hundred yards in width, and has from ten to fifteen feet water in the channel. Its banks are entirely destitute of timber and grass; in fact, no vegetation is met with except a small shrub called chamezo by the Mexicans, and I believe artemisia by botanists. We were very fortunate in striking the river at a point where there are neither cañons nor mountains; although the country appears very rough and mountainous, both to the north and south of us. To the north, the rocks are black and irregular, and seem to be volcanic; whilst the cliffs to the south are of red sandstone. The banks, at the crossing, are low, rocky, and unchanging, and the current exceedingly rapid.

We followed the river up for five miles, and selected a crossing where it is some two hundred yards wide and twenty or twenty-five feet deep. We succeeded in finding a little drift wood, of which we made a raft. Four men took charge of it, and it was carried some three miles with the current before it could be landed. The heights were covered with Indians, in readiness to shoot us down. I started down with four men to follow the raft, and protect the men who were upon it, having ordered the camp to move down in haste. Having unloaded the raft upon the eastern bank, the men recrossed the river, and we selected a camp opposite the place where the baggage was deposited, and during the night kept up a constant fire with our rifles across the river, and in this manner protected it from the Indians.

The animals were taken to the crossing I at first selected to swim the river. I took them up with three men on the west bank, and four men received them on the opposite side. This detained us half a day; and altogether, we were detained five days from crossing the river.

The drift-wood of which we constructed our little raft, appeared to have been cut by beavers. These animals must be exceedingly abundant, as they destroyed, during the first night, the ropes with which our raft was bound to gether, and carried off the timber. The loss of the ropes was a great inconvenience to us. We set a guard afterwards, at night, over our second raft, to protect it from a similar fate.

The river showed signs of having been some fifteen feet higher than when we crossed it. It is here a grand and magnificent stream—swift, like the Mississippi, and, apparently, as well adapted to navigation.

The place of our crossing is well suited to bridging, or ferrage by steam, or otherwise.

We saw no water fowl about the river, and only a few antelope and black-tailed deer. East of the river we encountered a great many rattlesnakes of an uncommonly large size. They seem to be a new species, as their tails are covered, for some six inches from the point, with alternate white and black rings of hair or bristles, about a quarter of an inch long.

According to my observations, the Colorado of the west is set down upon the maps greatly to the east—perhaps as much as one hundred and fifty miles.

The Indians were constantly in sight, and watching our movements. They could not be induced to approach us; but assured us, across the river, that they were Mohaves.

On one occasion, while at rest for a few minutes in a deep gulley, about a mile from the crossing on the west side of the river, a Mexican mule-boy discovered something glistering upon the ground, which, on examination, proved to be gold. We at once commenced washing sand in our tin-cups, and in every one discovered particles of gold. This gold was discovered in a dark, coarse sand, and a black, heavy sand was found in the cup after washing away the gravel. The sandy soil was so compact, that we could not dig it up with our fingers. The Indians being still on the heights near us, and our party being separated by the river, the danger was so great that we could not remain longer at this spot. I intended to return again, but the Indians became so numerous that it was impossible to do so. This gulley is on the right bank of the river, and the head of it is in a very rough and rugged mountain.

July 27.—We washed sand on the east side of the river, and found gold in greater abundance than on any previous occasion. I myself washed a tin cup full of yellow clay, and found about twenty five cents' worth of pure metal. The Mexican boy, on washing a frying-pan full of coarse sand, found from forty to fifty particles of pure gold, some of which were as large as the head of a pin. We took the clay and sand from the top of the ground without digging. The appearance of the country also indicates gold; made no further examination, as our animals had subsisted for five days upon the chamezo, without a blade of grass, and our provisions had been damaged in the Colorado, which must cause us to travel several days without anything to eat.

To-day we made ten miles east. The country is without wood, water, or grass.

July 28.—Two of our men being sick, we were compelled to return to the river on their account. Struck it some fifteen miles below the crossing, and found that from near that point it makes a considerable bend towards the east. The country here does not indicate gold, nor could we find any on washing the sands.

July 29.—The condition of our sick men obliged us to remain in camp all day. Our animals were in a starving condition, as there is not a particle of grass on or near the river.

July 30.—Left the river and traveled fifteen miles east and five miles northeast. A sick Mexican was so much disabled that we were compelled to make for a mountain north of us which indicated water; but we found neither water, timber, nor grass.

July 31.—Traveled eight miles northeast, and struck a large stream, but much smaller than the Colorado, coming from the east southeast, and running north northwest. This stream may be what the Mexicans designate as the Rio Grande de los Apaches, and what the Americans have recently called the Little Red River.

One of my Mexicans followed this stream a few miles, and says that it empties into the Colorado seven or eight miles below camp, and that there is below us a valley of good soil and grass in abundance. Where we struck this stream there is neither timber nor grass.

In the evening we traveled five miles south, to avoid mountains, and as many east. The country was level, but without grass or timber.

The mountains, or, perhaps more properly, hills, that we have thus far met with, are nothing more than elevations of various forms and dimensions, dispersed in a detached and irregular manner over a vast and otherwise uninterrupted plateau. Hence I have constantly termed the country level, and very properly, as it may be traversed in all directions among the solitary and detached elevations or mountains without the necessity of crossing them.

August 1.—Traveled twenty miles east, and found a spring of good water. The grass was abundant, and cedar trees were seen on the highlands. The country is level and the soil inferior.

August 2.—Made ten miles east, crossing a mountain or ridge where we found a fine pass, grass and timber, (cedar and piñon) abundant.

August 3.—Traveled twenty miles south of east, over a country somewhat broken; timber and grass abundant. Indians were in numbers all day, shooting arrows every moment. They wounded some of our mules, and my famous mare Dolly, who has so often rescued me from danger by her speed and capacity of endurance.

August 4.—We moved ten miles south to avoid mountains, and struck a valley which we left a few days since, and which extends to the Colorado. The mountains which we left are covered with timber. Grass and water are found in plenty.

The Indians commenced firing on us at sunrise, and continued until we reached camp. Arrows passed through the clothes of several of the men, and three passed through my own clothes, and I was slightly wounded by two others in different places. An arrow passed through the collar of Dick Williams. We killed several of the Indians, and wounded more. Peter Prudon accidentally shot himself in the right knee.

August 5.—Traveled ten miles southeast in a valley; no water; grass and timber in abundance on all the mountains.

August 6.—Continued ten miles southeast in the same valley in which we traveled yesterday; found no water, but good grass and plenty of timber on and below the mountains. As our sick men are unable to travel, we are suffering for water, having been nearly three days without any, and indications are not now favorable. Indians still around us.

August 7.—Traveled ten miles southeast, half the distance in the same valley, and then went to a mountain and found good water, grass, and timber. All the mountains in this country are covered with cedar, pine, and piñon. The grass is good in all the prairies, but none of them have any water. The soil is sandy, and full of particles of mica. Indians are numerous, and continue to fire upon us.

August 8.—Made fifteen miles east, southeast, crossing a little chain of mountains, where we found a level pass and timber; grass and water in abundance. Crossed a stream running from northeast to the southwest, which I think goes to the Colorado. After crossing the mountains we passed through a fine valley with an abundance of good spring water and timber near it. The Indians attacked the camp several times last night, but without success, and continued fighting us during the day, but with less boldness and resolution.

August 9.—After proceeding eight miles east, we found ourselves surrounded by cañons, apparently from one to four thousand feet deep—at least we sometimes could not see the bottom. We were compelled to return to the same camp. The country is high and level, and well supplied with timber, grass, and water.

August 10.—Moved ten miles southeast over a somewhat broken country. Crossed a stream of good water (with timber along its course) which is evidently a tributary of the Gila. The country indicates gold in abundance. We crossed a little chain of mountains, where we found a great quantity of silver ore, in flint rocks.

August 11.—Traveled southeast over a country a little broken, but well supplied with water, grass, and timber. Indications of gold still exist.

August 12.—Made fifteen miles southeast, crossing the bed of a large stream now dry, with plenty of timber along it. Struck the valley which we left some five or six days ago, having crossed a few days ago the head waters of a stream which passes through it.

This valley will be of the utmost importance in the making of a wagon or railroad.

To-day, for the first time on this trip, we ate a dinner of mule meat. It was a new dish to most of our men, and made some of them sick. To me it was an old acquaintance, and I feel well. It only served to remind me of hard times on other journeys. The quality of the meat depends on the appetite of the man. Several of us are now on foot.

August 13.—Marched twenty miles east, leaving to our right the great valley so often mentioned, and which extends to the Colorado. Passed through a little valley between two mountains, where we found timber, grass, and water in abundance. The soil was excellent.

We here met Indians, who professed to be very friendly, with papers of recommendation from the commanding officer of Fort Yuma, on the Gila trail.

August 14.—We left early, and after traveling five miles in an eastern direction, stopped to breakfast near an Indian camp of Garroteros. They professed friendship, but, having no faith in their professions, I selected a camp on the top of a small hill, which would give us an advantage in case of a fight. All went on well until our mules were saddled and we were ready to start, when, at a given signal, some forty or fifty Indians, apparently unarmed, and accompanied by their squaws, children, and babies (tied to boards) in their arms, very suddenly charged upon us and attempted to destroy the whole party with clubs and rocks. The signal of attack was the taking of my hand in fare well by a chief, which he held with all his strength. So soon as these first Indians commenced the fight, about two hundred more rushed from behind a hill and brush, and charged upon us with clubs, bows, and arrows. I thought, for a few minutes, that our party must necessarily be destroyed; but some of us having disengaged ourselves, we shot them down so fast with our Colt's revolvers, that we soon produced confusion among them and put them to flight. We owe our lives to these fire-arms, the best that were ever invented, and now brought, by successive improvements, to a state of perfection.

Mr. Hendrey, an American, and Francisco Guzman, a New Mexican, greatly distinguished themselves.

Twelve of us, just two thirds of the party, were severely wounded. I, among the rest, was wounded in six places. Abner Adair, I fear, is dangerously injured. It was a very great satisfaction to me to find that none of my men were killed, nor any of the animals lost. We bled very much from our numerous wounds; but the blood and bodies of the Indians covered the ground for many yards around us. We killed over twenty-five, and wounded more. The bows and arrows that we captured and destroyed would have more than filled a large wagon.

Before the attack commenced, the squaws kept the clubs, which were from eighteen to twenty-four inches long, concealed in deer skins about their children. When put to flight, they threw their babies down into a deep, brushy gulley near at hand, by which many of them must have been killed. This is the first time I ever met with a war party of Indians accompanied by their wives and children. The presence of the latter was evidently to remove from our minds all suspicion of foul play on their part. I was never before in so perilous a condition with a party in all my life. On this occasion, which will be the last, I imprudently gave my right hand, in parting, to the Indian chief. The left must answer for leave-taking hereafter.

We have thus far had so much ill-luck to encounter that our arrival at our destination must be much delayed. First, our men fell sick, then our provisions were damaged in the Colorado; latterly a man shot himself through the knee; our mules' feet, for want of shoes, are worn out; and to crown all, to-day, two-thirds of the party are badly wounded, and all have barely escaped with their lives. We are now subsisting entirely on mule meat, and do not get as much of that as we want. We are without salt and pepper, and in their absence it requires a stout stomach to digest our fare. But nobody complains; and the possibility of not doing what we have set out to do has never entered the minds of my party.

We traveled five miles this afternoon, with the Indians at our heels shooting arrows at us every moment.

August 15.—Traveled ten miles east, among mountains, where we found water, grass, and timber in abundance. Indians around us all day shooting arrows. I omitted, in the proper place, to say that I brought away from the mountains we passed through on the 10th, a little black sand, less than a cup full, and found in it, on washing, twelve or fifteen particles of pure gold.

August 16.—Made ten miles east, and found no water; plenty of grass and timber seen on the mountains north of us. Indians still numerous and troublesome. To-day met with copper in very great quantities. A vein of the pure native metal, about an inch and a half in diameter, was seen sticking out from a rock, which must have worn away by time and left the copper exposed. I think there is gold in the ore, but am not certain.

Our condition at present is bad enough. I have eight wounds upon me, five of which cause me much suffering; and at the same time my mule having given out, I have to walk the whole distance. Thirteen of us are now wounded, and one is sick, so that we have only four men in good health. We are unable to travel faster on account of Adair's condition.

Our canteens, &c., having been broken or destroyed in our fight with the Indians, we cannot carry water enough for more than half a day. This loss caused us to suffer more than can be imagined. Our animals were broken down by this traveling, which could not be avoided. We would come across abundance of water every day if we could march some twenty-five or thirty miles, but our condition is such that it requires three days to make that small distance. In addition to all this, we are now on half rations of horse meat; and I have the misfortune to know that it is the flesh of my inestimable mare Dolly, who has so often by her speed saved me from death at the hands of Indians. Being wounded some days ago by the Garroteros, she gave out, and we are now subsisting upon her flesh.

August 17.—Moved to-day about ten miles east, over a country rather rough. Suffering much for want of water. In crossing mountains, we have to select the highest places instead of the regular passes, as when caught in cañons or gulches, we are not strong enough to fight the Indians. To-day, from the top of a little mountain, I saw the great valley, so often mentioned, extending to the Colorado, not over twenty miles south of us, and it now seems to turn more to the east. I intend to make for it. I entertain fears that Adair and Baskerville are in danger from their wounds; all the others are getting better.

August 18.—Moved only five miles south of east. Found water, grass, and some timber.

August 19.—Went five miles to-day in the same direction as yesterday, and came to the great valley that extends to the Colorado. Encamped on a creek of good water and grass; Adair being sometimes unable to travel, we were waiting on him. Indians around us shooting arrows. We never return their fire without being certain of our shots.

August 20.—Traveled twenty miles east over a level, gravelly country; crossed a creek; found good grass; no timber in sight.

August 21.—Moved ten miles east over a level, gravelly country, and struck a large stream, which is, no doubt, a branch of the Gila. The mountains to the north of us are very rough, and without timber.

There is no grass on this stream, which is thirty yards wide, with three feet of water in the channel. Its course is from north to south.

August 22.—Made ten miles south east to a mountain. Country level, and without grass or timber.

August 23.—Moved about the same distance and in the same direction, over a low gravelly country. Struck a stream of good water, but without grass or timber.

August 24.—Went about eight miles north east, and encamped in the mountains, where we met with Apaches Tontos. No timber seen to-day.

August 25.—Crossed the mountains where the Apaches Tontos live; found water, timber, and grass in abundance. Traveled fifteen miles north east from the top of this mountain, from which we saw the Sierra Blanca Mountains, which are near the Pueblo of Zuñi.

Saw a prairie extending from the east end of the Garrotero mountain to the upper end of the Sierra Blanca. I saw this prairie when we were at the east end of the Garrotero mountain, but we were not in a condition to examine it; fifty miles is nothing with good animals; but ours were broken down, and our wounded men were unable to travel over ten miles a day. But I saw the country sufficiently well to convince me that there will be no obstacle whatever to the making of a rail or wagon road. The mountains which we crossed to-day are impracticable for either. I should like to return to the east end of the Garrotero mountain, and pursue the route I indicate; but it is utterly impossible to do so, as we are now living on berries and herbs. We would rejoice to have mule meat; but we have so few animals, and so many wounded men, that it would be unsafe to kill any more. I have the good fortune of having true men with me, otherwise it would be uncertain that the party could get through; but I have confidence in my men, and I feel positively certain that we will make the trip.

It will take us some ten or twelve days to reach Zuñi, where we expect to procure provisions. I shall travel near the mountains, as heretofore, on account of the certainty and facility of getting water; but shall remain in sight of the prairie extending from the Garrotero to the Sierra Blanca mountain.

August 26.—Moved ten miles east north east, most of the way along a creek, where we found grass in plenty, and some timber. The Apaches Tontos are numerous and troublesome.

August 27.—Made fifteen miles east, crossing two streams, which are branches of the Gila. We met Indians to-day, who, I think, are not Apaches Tontos, as they do not speak any Spanish, and refuse to answer our questions. We obtained from them over fifteen hundred dollars worth of gold for a few old articles of clothing. The Indians use gold bullets for their guns. They are of different sizes, and each Indian has a pouch of them. We saw an Indian load his gun with one large and three small gold bullets to shoot a rabbit. They proposed exchanging them for lead; but I preferred trading other articles. Whether the Indians made these balls themselves, or whether they were obtained by the murder of miners in California or Sonora, I am unable to say.

August 28.—Traveled ten miles east over a good country met with more Indians, and traded for some horse meat, by giving articles of clothing in exchange. We traded also for a few hundred dollars' worth of gold. To-day a mule broke down, and an Indian gave me for it a lump of gold weighing a pound and a half, less one ounce.

The Indians are so numerous, they would destroy the party if we allowed them the least chance. But we are very vigilant, and select camps on elevated places, consequently we are unable to make any examinations for gold in the sands of the country. The Indians call themselves Belenios.

August 29.—Traveled some twenty miles in an eastern direction; the country quite level, and the land good, with plenty of grass and water.

August 30.—Traveled to-day about fifteen miles east, over a country a little broken. Water and grass abundant.

August 31.—Moved about twelve miles north of east, over a country similar to that of yesterday. Found water, grass, and pine timber.

September 1.—Traveled fifteen miles over a country a little broken, and well supplied with water, grass, and timber.

The soil was good.

September 2.—Traveled the same distance northeast to the Sierra Blanca. Followed Indian trails all day, and found grass, water, and pine timber in great abundance; and most of the soil is of a superior quality.

September 3.—Pursuing the same course, we traveled some fifteen miles among the same mountains. To-day we passed through valleys of good soil, and we found the pine timber in greater abundance than yesterday. The trees are generally from two and a half to five feet in diameter, and over two hundred feet high. We have seen timber enough to-day to make a railroad from the Eastern States to the Pacific. The passes through this mountain are level, and can be traveled by wagons without any difficulty whatever.

September 4.—Made twenty-five miles northeast, crossing the Colorado Chiquito after traveling about two miles. The land is level and good, and water and wood are plenty.

September 5.—Made twenty miles east northeast, and got out of the mountains after traveling five miles; struck the prairie, where we found good soil, grass, and water.

September 6.—Continuing northeast over a good and level country for twenty-five miles, we reached the Indian town or pueblo of Zuñi, where we met with a hospitable and civilized population, from whom we obtained an abundance of good provisions, over which we greatly rejoiced.

We have subsisted for a month on mule and horse-flesh, and for the most of that time, on half or quarter rations. But as I have reached this place with all my men, I feel satisfied. I shall take no notes of the country from this town to Albuquerque on the Rio Grande, as a level and much-traveled wagon road exists between the two places, and is familiar to the people of New Mexico. It has been described by others, and is well known to present no difficulties to the construction of a railroad.

September 10.—At Albuquerque, New Mexico. Before laying aside my pencil, for the use of which I have no fancy, I shall set down a few ideas that are now prominent in my recollection.

I set out, in the first place, upon this journey, simply to gratify my own curiosity, as to the practicability of one of the much-talked-of routes for the contemplated Atlantic and Pacific railroad. Having previously traveled the southern or Gila route, I felt anxious to compare it with the Albuquerque or middle route. Although I conceive the former to be every way practicable, I now give it as my opinion that the latter is equally so, whilst it has the additional advantage of being more central and serviceable to the Union. I believe the route I traveled is far enough south to be certainly free from the danger of obstruction by snows in winter. The route, in all its length, may be said to pass over a high plateau, or generally level country, for the most part thickly studded with prairie mountains, or detached elevations, seldom so linked together as to deserve to be called a chain of mountains. Numerous mountains were at all times in sight; but being for the most part isolated peaks, a detour of a few miles would always supersede the necessity of crossing them. To the south of our route from the Great Colorado to Zuñi, the country was more level than on the north, and for the greater part of the distance a valley extends nearly due east and west to the Colorado. The existence of so many mountains along the way must be considered, in reference to a railroad, as a very fortunate circumstance instead of a disadvantage, as it is the mountains alone which furnish the timber and never failing water. The plains are the only deserts and barren spots, if they are to be called so after the fashion of the day, which exist in all that vast region of country which lies between the Gila on the south and the British Possessions on the north, and the Rio Grande on the east, and the Sierra Nevada of California on the west. The plateau, or table lands, must furnish the track upon which the road is to be laid; but the mountains adjacent must furnish the timber, and the water for the use of men and animals employed in its construction, and for the use of the depots afterwards. It is well for the country over which I passed that these mountains exist, as without them it would be in reality one vast and repulsive desert. It would be a disadvantage for a railroad to have to cross them, as, although not difficult to cross, it would much increase the expense. But I saw nothing that rendered it at all probable that they would have to be crossed. On the contrary, I am satisfied that a railroad may be run almost mathematically direct from Zuñi to the Colorado, and from thence to the Tejon pass in California. The section from the pass to San Francisco should leave the Tulare lake to the west, and should pass through the coast range of mountains, say in the neighborhood of San Juan, and thence to San Francisco, and by a branch to Stockton.

The west side of Tulare lake is unfit for a road on account of its miry nature. The section of the route from Zuñi to Albuquerque is plain sailing. That from Albuquerque to Independence, or St. Louis, or Memphis, is equally plain, by two or three well-known passes through the Sandia mountains, which lie east of the Rio Grande.

Certain slight deviations from the track which I pursued would improve the route. For instance, it would be better to leave my trail to the north, at a point say one hundred and eighty miles east of the Sierra Nevada, and intersect it again some fifteen miles west of the Colorado. On the east side of the Colorado the road should pursue a directly eastern course for seventy-five miles, and thence take an east southeast course for nearly two hundred miles, at the foot and on the south side of the mountains inhabited by the Garrotero Indians. Thence northeast for fifteen miles in a prairie between those mountains and a range of mountains, which seem to extend to the Gila. From this point the road should run easterly to the Colorado Chiquito river, and thence northeast to Zuñi. The distance from the east end of the Garrotero mountain to Zuñi is about two hundred miles. This route, as I indicate it, will pass at all times in sight of my trail, and through as practicable a country as any railroad route of the same distance in the United States.

The proposed route by the Sangre de Cristo, north of Taos, I take, if practicable at all, to be very objectionable, on account of the vast elevations the road must ascend to, and the large quantities of snow which fall and remain there so long during the winter months. This route has, also, the additional disadvantage of crossing two rivers, the Grand and the Green, either of which would be as costly to bridge as the Colorado.

A route has been somewhat spoken of just north of the Gila, with the view of having the route wholly on American ground. That, I am satisfied, is altogether out of the question, on account of mountains alone, if no other objection existed. The Gila route proper, passing in part through Sonora, is objectionable on several accounts besides its situation. In the first place, there is no timber upon the plains, nor upon the volcanic mountains that lie along the way. A considerable part of the route, too, lies over a country destitute of vegetation, which, when dry, is a white powder, resembling flour, in which the feet of men and animals sink several inches. This same clay, when wet, is the most treacherous of quagmires. Some parts of the road are also very sandy. Don Ambrosio Arniño, who took sheep to California last year, lost as many as eleven hundred among the sand hills west of the Colorado, by sinking in the sand, and being run over by those behind. Another serious objection to the Gila route is the great desert which lies west of the Colorado, and has an extent of one hundred miles without wood or water.

I have no interest in recommending one of these routes more than another. I took sheep and wagons to California last year by the Gila route, and I am about to return that way to California again with sheep. Upon the route which I have just traveled, I encountered many hardships and dangers, and met with serious pecuniary loss; yet I say it is the best for a railroad, and would be excellent for ordinary traveling but for the Indians. A large portion of the trail over which I passed—some say two hundred and fifty miles west from the Rio Grande—is, for the most part, admirably adapted to farming and stock raising.

Mr. Aubrey has forwarded to me, with these notes, an interesting diagram of his route, which I shall present to the Senate to be referred to the Committee on Public Lands with this bill.

I have also received from Lieutenant Hamilton and Major Andrews, of the United States Army, notes of their explorations from San Diego to the mouth of the Gila river, and for some distance up the Colorado, with a diagram of their route, which I also present to the Senate:

Legend to accompany map of routes from San Diego to the mouth of the Gila.

It is believed that the San Diego and the mouth of the Gila are on the same parallel of latitude. The initial monument is taken thirteen miles south of the San Diego, which varies little from the truth. The distance between the initial monument and the mouth of the Gila is assumed to be one hundred and forty-one miles, which I think I remember aright. In the Indian names I adopt the Spanish sound of the vowels and the English sound of the consonants, except where they have been so long used as to render them Mexican, in which case I adopt the Mexican orthography. Carriage roads now in use are marked thus: Proposed routes of railroads, thus: (a red line.) Summit of mountain ranges --- (red dots.) Indian villages, thus (a pyramid.) Paths, thus: Old unusual trails or water unknown, thus:

Commencing at San Diego, a road would run to the rancho of Tijuán along the level nearly of the sea—distance twenty-three miles, or nineteen three fourths as marked, from New San Diego. Hence, with but slight ascent and good road, we reach the spring of San Pedro y San Pablo, which is on the hill at a distance of fifteen miles from Tijuán. This eminence will be easily gained, or could be avoided altogether by going through Carrizita rancho and the Baja California road as indicated. Hence to Tecate is only a regular rise of water. Plenty of water at La Punta, Tijuán Creek, all the way to the last point of leaving it, spring of San Pedro and San Pablo, Carrizita, and through eight miles of Tecate Valley to San José, on Cartouch's rancho. Tecate is forty-three three fourths miles from New San Diego. And the house is in Baja, California, by a few yards. There is plenty of wood in Tijuán Creek—cotton-wood and willow. Oak in abundance in all the other valleys as far as Jacum. From Tecate through you pass into other valleys, yet the ridges between them are hardly perceptible. At San José, four miles further, plenty of wood and water; at Valentine's rancho, three miles further, plenty of wood and water. At Milcuatui, four miles further, plenty of wood and water. This Milcuatui is a beautiful valley, long, well timbered on the edges, excellent pasture in the center, in form of a crescent, and has a pass out of it in a direct line to San Diego, now used by the Government express from the Gila. The pass is called Struck's Pass, from the first mail rider who went through it. This route I consider, from the reports I have had of it from express men, as less practicable by far, than the indicated route. The creek, as seen in the map, starting near the summit runs past Santiago, and Juan Pedro's rancho, and exhausts itself in Milcuatui valley. From first, water in Milcuatui valley to the summit between Deseret and Sea is twelve miles—to said summit by road traveled, sixty-seven miles. Thus far all is of easy ascent. An easy descent for ten miles to Jacum valley now takes place; the ground supplying wood and water. Total distance, by present wagon road, seventy and one half miles from New San Diego. To reach the desert, it is now necessary to descend, and for this purpose the present express route appears best calculated. At first sight it would require a stationary engine for an inclined plane of say four hundred feet; but the other advantages of this route being so weighty would justify a thorough examination of all the passes in this vicinity for the purpose of avoiding said plane. Don Santiago Arguella, a gentleman who will soon be in your city, informed me that a gentle slope can be found down to the desert on the eastern side. If this exists, I will insure an easy approach to the summit. I believe this to be from twenty-five to thirty miles south of Jacum, and near a place called among the Indians and old Californians "El Matadero," where a battle was once fought between the settlers and Indians, and which is common property between the Mountain Indians of this side and the Cocopas of the Colorado.

After arriving on the plain of the desert no inconveniences are found; and the whole distance, from the mouth of the Gila to San Diego, would not exceed one hundred and sixty-five miles—the air-rhumb being one hundred and forty-one miles.

No difficulties are to be met with in the Vallecitos route, except that, by this route, it will be about one hundred and sixty miles from Camp Yuma to San José del Valle, or Warner rancho, and from thence forty-five miles to San Luis Rey—a point considered in some of the speculations on the road. This route is in every way practicable, as well as a route from San Luis to San Diego, and from San Luis to Los Angeles.

Again, arriving at San José del Valle, an excellent route lies direct through Temecula to Los Angeles. On this I have been as far as Temecula; and, I am told, the rest of the route is equally good. In fact, I believe a good route can be obtained in either of the passes mentioned; and, I might add, that an ascent from the desert can be made by the Coyotes, via Juan Bautistas, Buena Vista rancho, and thence to Temecula.

At the request of Lieutenant Hamilton, I have added to the map above described that of the country between Jacum pass and Colorado river. The whole distance is a level, or so nearly so as to rise and fall imperceptibly. Hardly any grading would be required for a railroad, and that little only where some dry arroyo of, say ten feet wide, occurs. To reach Colorado river at a suitable crossing place, I think it would be necessary, after passing either north or south of Pilot Mountain, to bear northeast to the point marked on the map. From this crossing is also the most favorable direction for gaining the valley of the Gila, which would be reached over the level desert fifteen miles east of the Colorado. The soil of this country is barren, save in the bottoms, where a growth of mesquit occurs. Near the Colorado the cotton-wood and willow mingle with mesquit. There is no building stone, after leaving Jacum, until reaching a point eighty miles up the Gila. The chief advantages of this line are its directness and level ground. The Colorado is navigable for steamers of good power, and five feet draught to Lighthouse Rock, about two hundred and ten miles, by the stream, from its mouth. The current in summer is three and a quarter miles an hour, and during the June flood six and a quarter miles an hour. I have sounded from the mouth to Lighthouse Rock, and never found less than six feet six inches water. These soundings were taken below the Gila in March, 1852, and above the Gila in October, 1852, both months of low water.

Respectfully submitted, GEO. P. ANDREWS.

Brevet Major U. S. Army.

I will here observe, Mr. President, that I have so worded this bill, that if it is ascertained that the only practicable route of the great national railroad should be by the Gila river, the State of California can provide for the appropriation of the land granted for the construction of a road passing down the valleys of the coast range of mountains to San Diego, and thence to the mouth of the Gila. I have applied to the Secretary of War for orders to Lieutenant Williamson, who has charge of the exploring party on the Pacific coast, to extend his explorations, pursuing the course of the coast range of mountains, and the valley of the Sacramento river, to Noble's Pass, through the Sierra Nevada mountains, and to give that pass a thorough examination. The Secretary has expressed his willingness to grant my request, provided Congress would make the necessary appropriation, which, I hope, will be done at an early day.

Mr. President, I am an ardent advocate of the great Pacific railroad. I believe it is the duty of the General Government to contribute liberally in land and money to aid in the construction of this work. The national railroad is a national necessity. Without it, we cannot preserve the integrity of the Union, in time of war. There are members of this body who have constitutional scruples in using the national treasure in aiding in the construction of this great work; I have none. I look to the obligations of the Constitution as well as its restrictions. Among the powers conferred by the Constitution upon Congress we find prominent the obligation to provide for the "common defense" of the country. This great national highway is absolutely necessary to defend the Pacific coast of the United States in time of war. Without it, we shall be severed from the rest of the Union; with it, this Government is impregnable and can defy all the nations of the earth.

The bill was then referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

THE HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, I move that the bill offered by me a few days ago, commonly known as the homestead bill, now lying on the Secretary's table, be taken up with a view to its reference to the Committee on Public Lands.

A BILL to encourage agriculture, commerce, manufactures, and all other branches of industry, by granting to every man, who is the head of a family, and a citizen of the United States, a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of land out of the public domain, upon condition of occupancy and cultivation of the same for the period herein specified.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That any person, who is the head of a family, and a citizen of the United States, shall, from and after the passage of this act, be entitled to enter, free of cost, one quarter-section of vacant and unappropriated public lands, except the mineral lands, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, or a quantity equal thereto, to be located in a body, in conformity with the legal subdivisions of the public lands, and after the same shall have been surveyed.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the person applying for the benefit of this act shall, upon application to the register of the land office in which he or she is about to make such entry, make affidavit before the said register that he or she is the head of a family; and upon making the affidavit as above required, and filing the affidavit with the register, he or she shall thereupon be permitted to enter the quantity of land already specified: Provided, however, That no certificate shall be given, or patent issued therefor, until the expiration of three years from the date of such entry; and if, at the expiration of such time, the person making such entry, or if he be dead his widow, or in case of her death his heirs or devisee, or in case of a widow making such entry her heirs or devisee, in case of her death, shall prove, by two credible witnesses, that he, she, or they have continued to reside upon and cultivate said land, and still reside upon the same, and have not alienated the same, or any part thereof; then, in such case, he, she, or they shall be entitled to a patent, as in other cases provided for by law: And provided further, In case of the death of both father and mother, leaving an infant child or children under fourteen years of age, the right and the fee shall inure to the benefit of said infant child or children, and the executor, administrator, or guardian may, at any time within two years after the death of the surviving parent, in accordance with the laws of the State in which said children, for the time being have their domicile, sell said land for the benefit of said infants, but for no other purpose; and the purchaser shall acquire the absolute title by the purchase, and be entitled to a patent from the United States.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the register of the land office shall note all such applications on the tract-books and plats of his office, and keep a register of all such entries, and make return thereof to the General Land Office, together with the proof upon which they have been founded.

Sec. 4. And be it further enacted, That all land acquired under the provisions of this act, shall in no event become liable to the satisfaction of any debt or debts contracted prior to the issuing the patent therefor.

Sec. 5. And be it further enacted, That if, at any time after filing the affidavit as required in the second section of this act, and before the expiration of the three years aforesaid, it shall be proven, after due notice to the settler, to the satisfaction of the register of the land office, that the person having filed such affidavit shall have actually changed his or her residence, or abandoned the said entry for more than six months at any one time, then, and in that event, the land so entered shall revert back to the Government, and be disposed of as other public lands are now by law.

Sec. 6. And be it further enacted, That any individual, not a citizen of the United States, but at the time of making such application for the benefit of this act, shall have filed a declaration of intention as required by the naturalization laws of the United States, and shall become a citizen, shall be placed upon an equal footing with the native born citizen of the United States.

Sec. 7. And be it further enacted, That no individual shall be permitted to make more than one entry under the provisions of this act; and that the Commissioner of the General Land Office is hereby required to prepare and issue such rules and regulations consistent with this act, as shall be necessary and proper to carry its provisions into effect; and that the registers and receivers of the several land offices shall be entitled to receive the same compensation for any lands entered under the provisions of this act, that they are now entitled to receive when the same quantity of land is entered with money, one half to be paid by the person making the application at the time of so doing, and the other half on the issue of the certificate by the person to whom it may be issued: Provided, however, That all persons entering land under the provisions of this act, shall, as near as may be practicable, in making such entries, be confined to each alternate quarter section: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to impair or interfere, in any manner whatever, with existing preemption rights.

This bill differs in many material points from the one which passed the House of Representatives during the last Congress. It gives the right of settlement upon the unsurveyed as well as the surveyed public lands. This is indispensable to give the inhabitants of the new States and Territories the full benefits of this measure. Many years must elapse before the lands in those States and Territories will be surveyed, and without this important feature in the bill, it would be useless in those sections of the Union. It also excludes the mineral lands from its operation. It limits the time of occupation and cultivation to secure the title to the settler to three instead of five years. Every member of the Senate from the new States will see the importance of perfecting the titles to land under this act at the expiration of three years after its occupation and settlement. It also gives a quarter-section of land, not only to every citizen of the United States settling on the public lands, but to all persons who have declared their intention to become citizens at the date of their settlement. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

COLLECTIONS FROM IMPORTS.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, some days ago I introduced a bill providing for the payment to the State of California of all moneys collected from imports within the borders of said State, from the date of the treaty of peace with Mexico up to the date of its admission into the Union. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of that bill, that I may have it referred to the Committee on Finance.

A BILL to authorize and direct the payment of certain moneys into the treasury of the State of California, which were collected in the ports of said State as a revenue upon imports, since the ratification of the treaty of peace between the United States and the Republic of Mexico, and prior to the admission of said State into the Union.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That it is hereby made the duty of the President of the United States, to cause to be paid into the treasury of the State of California, all the moneys collected in the ports now embraced within the limits of said State, from the thirtieth of May, one thousand eight hundred and forty-eight, to the day on which the Collector appointed under the act entitled "An act to extend the revenue laws of the United States over the territory and waters of Upper California, and to create a collection district therein," approved March three, eighteen hundred and forty-nine, entered upon the duties of his office: Provided, That all such moneys so to be paid to the State of California, shall be exclusive of all sums that have been judged to have been properly expended by virtue of "An act entitled, 'An act for the relief of Brevet Brigadier General Bennett Riley, and to enable him to settle his accounts with the United States,'" approved February 5th, 1853.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That it is hereby made the duty of the President of the United States to cause to be paid into the treasury of the State of California, all moneys collected as a revenue upon imports in the ports now embraced within the limits of said State, from the day on which the collector appointed under the act aforesaid, approved third March, eighteen hundred and forty-nine, entered upon the duties of his office, to the day on which the State of California was admitted into the Union: Provided, That all such moneys so directed to be paid over shall be exclusive of all amounts properly disbursed in collecting the same.

Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That it is hereby made the duty of the President of the United States to cause to be paid into the treasury of the State of California, all moneys collected in the ports now embraced within the limits of said State, as hospital and light dues, and which moneys were so collected prior to the day on which said State was admitted into the Union.

A flagrant wrong has been perpetrated on the people of California by the refusal of Congress to pay over this fund to the State. The sacred principle which we fought for in the revolutionary war, that there shall be no taxation without representation, has been violated in withholding this money from the State. I hope that this just reproach upon the Government may be wiped out by the passage of this bill at an early day. I move its reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

EXPENSE OF SUPPRESSING INDIAN HOSTILITIES.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill which I offered some days ago, to refund to California the expenses incurred by that State in suppressing Indian hostilities within its borders, that it may be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A BILL to refund to the State of California the expenses incurred in suppressing Indian aggressions in that State.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they hereby are directed to examine the accounts and vouchers, and to audit and settle the claims of the State of California upon the United States, for advances made and expenses necessarily incurred by that State in the suppression of Indian hostilities, aggressions, and depredation upon the persons and property of its citizens.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the amount so found to have been actually paid by the State of California for the purposes aforesaid, be, and the same hereby is, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be refunded or paid to the said State.

The early passage of this measure is of the greatest importance to the State of California. We are now burdened with an enormous State debt, and our citizens are subjected to oppressive taxation to sustain the State government. It is clearly the duty of the United States to assume the payment of this Indian war debt. It was created to defend our citizens from being massacred by the Indian tribes within our borders. Every similar debt contracted by other States has been assumed by the General Government. The vouchers upon which this claim on the National Government is based will be laid before Congress at an early day, which will show in detail the whole expenditure by the State authorities in the prosecution of these Indian wars; and as it is of the utmost importance to the credit of the State that the determination of Congress in regard to this debt should be known at an early day, it is hoped that immediate legislation will follow upon the presentation of these vouchers. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 12, 1853.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER, Chaplain of the Senate. The Journal of Thursday was read and approved.

QUALIFICATION OF MEMBERS.

Mr. BARKSDALE announced that his colleagues from the State of Mississippi, Messrs. SINGLETON and WRIGHT, were present, and desired to be qualified.

Mr. GROW. I ask leave to introduce a bill "for the encouragement of agriculture," of which previous notice has been given, for the purpose of reference.

[Cries of "Object!"]

LIBRARIAN OF THE HOUSE.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the question on the adoption of the following resolution, introduced on Thursday by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. BAYLY:]

"Resolved, That this House will proceed at one o'clock to elect an officer to be called the Librarian of the House of Representatives, who shall have charge of its books and documents, and shall discharge the same duties and receive the same pay that are now discharged and received by the messenger appointed by the Clerk to act as Librarian: Provided, That said messenger shall be dispensed with, and that the number of messengers hereafter employed by the Clerk shall be one less than are now authorized."

Upon this resolution the previous question has been ordered, and no other business is in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Do I understand the Chair to decide that that resolution now comes up as unfinished business?

The SPEAKER. Yes. It is the unfinished business of Thursday.

Mr. RICHARDSON. And that the previous question has been moved and seconded?

The SPEAKER. The main question has been ordered to be now put.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Does not the resolution go to the table?

The SPEAKER. No. The main question has been ordered to be now put.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I desire to fill the blank in that resolution, and to fix as the time the 13th instant.

Mr. COBB. The gentleman has no right to do that now, having called the previous question.

Mr. BAYLY. I believe I have the right.

Mr. RICHARDSON. No amendment can now be made.

Mr. BAYLY. It is not an amendment, and I undertake to say, that it has been the uniform practice of the House to allow blanks in resolutions to be filled without a motion. I have done it a hundred times myself, by merely directing the Clerk to do it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. BAYLY. If it were a blank created by action of the House, it could not be filled except by motion; but such is not the case. It is of those blanks usually left in resolutions sent to the Speaker's table, and which have uniformly been filled without motion.

The SPEAKER. As the resolution now stands, no particular day is proposed to be fixed. The gentleman from Virginia now proposes to fix a day. It is in the nature, therefore, in the opinion of the Chair, of an amendment, and cannot be received at this time.

Mr. BAYLY. I do not think it material that the day should be named; but I know, when I was at the head of the Committee on Ways and Means, that I have filled such blanks a hundred times.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The blank can only be filled by unanimous consent.

WAR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER. The Chair presents, with the unanimous consent of the House, the following communication from the War Department:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, Dec. 8, 1853.

SIR: In pursuance of the act of Congress of May 1st, 1820, I have the honor to transmit herewith, a statement of the appropriations applicable to the service of the War Department for the fiscal year 1852-'53, the amounts drawn by requisition from the Treasury during the same period, the balances on the 1st July, 1853, and such appropriations as have been carried to the surplus fund.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JEFFERSON DAVIS,

Secretary of War.

Hon. LINN DODD, Speaker of House of Representatives.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the communication be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

ELECTION OF LIBRARIAN FOR THE HOUSE.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon the adoption of the resolution of the gentleman from Virginia, (Mr. BAYLY,) for the election of a Librarian for the library of the House.

Mr. HAMILTON. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken, and resulted—yeas 98, nays 100; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, Appleton, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Ball, Barksdale, Barry, Benson, Bocock, Boyce, Brooks, Bugg, Lewis D. Campbell, Carpenter, Caskey, Chamberlain, Chase, Chastain, Christian, Clingman, Colquitt, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Cullom, Cunningham, Dent, Dick, Dickinson, Dowdell, Eastman, Edmunds, Edmundson, Etheridge, Ewing, Farley, Faulkner, Flagler, Franklin, Goode, Aaron Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Haven, Hunt, George W. Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Knox, Letcher, Lyon, McQueen, Matteson, John G. Miller, Millson, Morgan, Norton, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Parker, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Powell, Pringle, Puryear, Reese, Rogers, Rufin, Sabin, Sage, Shaw, Simmons, Singleton, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, Alexander H. Snodgrass, Sollers, Stephens, Tracy, Upham, Wade, Walsh, Elihu B. Washburn, Israel Washburn, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, White, Daniel B. Wright, Yates, and Zollcoffer—98.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Banks, Belcher, Bissell, Bliss, Breckinridge, Churchwell, Clark, Cobb, Craige, Curtis, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dean, Disney, Dunbar, Dunham, Eddy, Edgerton, Ellison, English, Fenton, Florence, Fuller, Gamble, Giddings, Green, Greenwood, Grow, Hamilton, Andrew J. Harlan, Hastings, Honn, Hibbard, Hill, Hillyer, Houston, Hughes, Ingersoll, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Latham, Lilly, Lindsey, Linsley, McCulloch, McDougal, McNair, Mace, Maco, Maurice, Mayall, Smith Miller, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Olds, Packard, Peck, Peckham, Phelps, Phillips, Pratt, Richard, Sapp, Seward, Seymour, Shannon, Showers, Samuel A. Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walker, Warren, Wells, John Wentworth, Westbrook, and Wright—100.

So the resolution was rejected.

Mr. GROW. I ask leave of the House to introduce a bill, of which previous notice has been given, for the purpose of reference, in relation to agriculture.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. Petitions are in order from the State of Maine.

Mr. HAMILTON. I move that the vote by which the resolution of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Bayly] was rejected, be reconsidered, and that that motion be laid upon the table.

Mr. MILLSON. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HAMILTON. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. WHEELER. I renew it.

Mr. CLINGMAN. The gentleman from New York voted in the affirmative, and I presume that it is not now in order for him to make the motion he has.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order for the gentleman to do so.

Mr. DEAN. I ask the unanimous consent of the House for the purpose of introducing a resolution, of which previous notice has been given.

Mr. FULLER. I call for the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the call upon States for petitions. Petitions are in order from the State of Maine.

On motion by Mr. FULLER, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of J. Clifton be withdrawn from the files of the House, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FULLER also moved the reference of the bill reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs of the last Congress, for the modification of the compensation of the forward officers of the Navy, to the Committee on Naval Affairs; which was agreed to.

On further motion of Mr. FULLER, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Jacob McLellan be withdrawn from the files of the House, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I now make the motion, of which I gave notice the other day, that the rules be amended, so that States will be called upon for bills and resolutions, instead of petitions, leaving the petitions to be presented in the customary manner. If there be objection to the motion, I move that the rules be suspended, so that it may be introduced.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask for an adherence to the rules.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I trust that the rules may be suspended for the purpose I have indicated. I do not like to be troublesome, but I am convinced that we will save time, and expedite business, by the adoption of my amendment to the rules. I move a suspension of the rules, for the purpose I have indicated.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman be pleased to submit his proposition in writing.

Mr. CLINGMAN. It is as follows: I move to strike out so much of the rules as requires States to be called for petitions; leaving that part which enables us to call for bills and resolutions.

The question was put on the motion to suspend the rules, and the Speaker announced eighty-four voted in the affirmative.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CLINGMAN and CHURCHWELL were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported one hundred votes in the affirmative, and fifty-two in the negative.

Two thirds of the members not having voted in the affirmative, the motion was lost.

PETITIONS.

The SPEAKER. Petitions from the State of Maine are now in order.

On motion by Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine, it was Ordered, That the bill and papers in behalf of French Forrest be withdrawn from the files of the House, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, that the petition and papers of John R. Bond be withdrawn from the files of the House, and referred to the same committee.

Mr. EDMANDS presented the petition of Esther Scollary, praying for a pension as widow of a revolutionary soldier.

Also, the petition of Mary Elliot, asking for a pension as widow of a revolutionary soldier.

Also, the petition of Abigail Brown, asking the same relief. Referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion by Mr. THURSTON, it was Ordered, That the bill and papers in behalf of Andrew Morse be taken from the files of the House, and referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. DAVIS, of Rhode Island, presented the petition of Charles H. Robinson, a naval pensioner, asking for an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a resolution, and upon that I beg leave to say a few words in explanation.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the resolution is not in order.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I move to suspend the rules so as to commence with resolutions where we left off the other day. If we do not, some of the States will never be reached.

Mr. JONES. It is very certain that if a motion to suspend the rules every five minutes is made, we never shall get through.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Is this discussion in order?

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I have been trying for a long time to present petitions from my State; but I will withdraw my motion, and wait until I see how long it will probably be before my State will be reached under this proceeding, before I present the motion.

Mr. KITTREDGE presented the petition of Robert Ham, asking that back pay or pension money be granted to him; which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

On motion by Mr. HUGHES, it was Ordered, That the papers of John W. Cameron be withdrawn from the files of the House, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

On motion by Mr. CHASE, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Josiah Martin be withdrawn from the files of the House, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. CUMMING presented the petition of John C. Carter, Lieutenant in the United States Navy, asking for compensation for services as Acting Purser of the United States steamship Massachusetts, and moved that the same be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs; which motion was agreed to.

On motion by Mr. TAYLOR, of New York, it was Ordered, That the petition and accompanying papers on behalf of the heirs of Thomas Park be withdrawn from the files of the House, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Also, that the petition and accompanying papers of Doctor Lemuel Hudson, praying for a pension on account of disability incurred in the military service of the United States, as a surgeon, during the war of 1812, be withdrawn from the files of the House, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, that the petition and accompanying papers of Oliver Brown, praying for a pension on account of disability incurred in the military service of the United States, during the war of 1812, be withdrawn from the files of the House, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. JONES, of New York, asked and obtained the unanimous consent to withdraw from the files of the House the petition and papers of Ebenezer Cowes, and that they be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

Also, the papers of Mary Hopperton, and that they be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, the papers of Gratia Reay, and that they be referred to the same committee.

Also, a memorial and other papers from the Medical Association of the United States, for the purpose of reference to the Superintendent of the Census.

On motion by Mr. FENTON, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House the memorial and accompanying papers of the late Oliver Lee and his legal representatives, asking payment of a judgment against A. Barker, Esq., late Collector at Buffalo, New York; and it was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. F. also presented the petition of Charles Benvels, of New York, asking pay for services in the war of 1812; and it was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. F. also presented the petition and accompanying papers of J. L. Heminger, of New York, an invalid, asking pay for services in the war of 1812, and it was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. SMITH, of New York, presented the petition of the New York City Temperance Alliance, for a law authorizing the authorities of the city of Washington to suppress the traffic in intoxicating drinks. I wish to refer it to a select committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I object to raising select committees upon subjects that properly belong to local legislation.

Mr. CLINGMAN. As it gives rise to debate, of course it goes over under the rules.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I propose to debate it. The SPEAKER. The petition will then lie over.

Mr. SMITH presented the petition of citizens of Mexico, New York, for a new pension law; and it was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion by Mr. WESTBROOK, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers of the heirs of Captain Frederic Schoonmaker for repayment of moneys expended in the war of the Revolution, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

SUSPENSION OF THE RULES.

Mr. EWING. Is it in order to move to postpone the calling upon States for petitions, and proceed with the call for bills and resolutions?

The SPEAKER. It would be in order to move to suspend the rules for the purpose of introducing such a resolution.

Mr. EWING. Then I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of introducing a resolution to postpone the calling of the States for petitions, until the last Friday of this month, and proceed at once to call the States for resolutions. By the course we are now pursuing, we will never reach a call upon States for resolutions.

The question was taken, and the motion to suspend was not agreed to.

Mr. LILLY presented the joint resolutions of the Legislature of New Jersey, relative to a breakwater at Cape May; and they were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ROBBINS presented the petition of John E. Reinhart, of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, asking Congress for remuneration for revolutionary services; and it was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

On motion by Mr. GAMBLE, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of James S. Barker, and that the same be referred to the appropriate committee.

Mr. DRUM presented the memorial of Presley M. Kellup, of Indiana county, Pennsylvania, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. CHANDLER presented the petition of sundry citizens of the city of Philadelphia, asking Congress to grant one hundred and sixty acres of land to all soldiers of the war of 1812, without regard to length of service; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HOWE presented the petition of Anne W. Butler, of Pennsylvania, praying for compensation for services performed by her late husband, Captain James R. Butler; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion by Mr. FLORENCE, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of James A. Dearnay, a soldier of the Mexican war, asking for a pension; and that the same be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, presented the petition of sundry citizens of Yorktown and vicinity, asking for the erection of a light on or near York Spit, and buoys at Taos Marshes; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. GOODE presented the petition of the Petersburg volunteers, praying for compensation for deficiency of ration and pay in the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion by Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Finnall and Graham be withdrawn from the files of the House, and that the same be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. SHAW presented the petition of Thomas W. Williams, Bateman O'Neal, George W. Felcher, and others, praying for the establishment of a light-house at the Roanoke Marshes; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

On motion by Mr. ORR, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of the heirs of Beatty —, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

On motion by Mr. BAILEY, of Georgia, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Elizabeth Barkston, for the purpose of future reference.

On motion by Mr. CHASTAIN, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of the Cherokees residing in States east of the Mississippi, praying for additional pay, per capita, due them under the treaties of 1835 and 1846, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

On motion by Mr. DENT, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Manoh D. Robeson and Andrew Smith be withdrawn from the files of the House, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Claims.

THE ESTIMATES.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to suspend the order of business, so as to allow me to refer to the Committee on Ways and Means the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting to this House the estimates for—

Mr. CLINGMAN. I insist upon an adherence to the rules. I object to anything being introduced now which is not strictly in orders

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

Mr. SMITH, of Alabama. I ask leave of the House to withdraw from its files the petition of John Baird, and to have the same referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Leave was granted, and the petition and papers were so referred.

I also offer a resolution which I desire may be referred to the Committee on the Rules.

Mr. CLINGMAN. It is not in order. I object to everything out of the regular course.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is it in order to give notice of a bill under this call?

The SPEAKER. It would be in order under the call for resolutions.

Mr. CLINGMAN. It cannot be in order now.

Mr. HOUSTON. I merely ask for information. I never object to conform to the rules of the House. I wish at all times to conform to them.

The SPEAKER. It has been usually allowed that a member may give notice of his intention to introduce a bill under the call for petitions; but there is no rule on the subject, and, if objection is made, it cannot be allowed.

Mr. HOUSTON. I merely proposed to give notice of the introduction of a bill.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Keep to the rules established by the House.

The SPEAKER. This permission has been usual; but as the Chair has already stated, there is no rule upon the subject.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object.

Leave to introduce the bill was therefore not granted.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. DUNBAR gave notice that he would on to-morrow, or some subsequent day, introduce a bill to remove the obstructions to navigation at the mouth of the Mississippi river, at the Southwest pass, and at Pass-ou-Loutre.

Also, a bill to establish a navy-yard at New Orleans, or in its vicinity.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. EDGERTON gave notice that to-morrow, or on some subsequent day of the present session, he would ask leave to introduce a bill to grant to the State of Ohio the unsold and unappropriated public lands remaining in that State.

Also, a bill to provide for the resurvey of certain townships in the county of Williams, in the State of Ohio.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion by Mr. OLDS, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the petition and papers of Beverly Stone, with a view to their reference to the Departments.

On motion by Mr. BLISS, it was Ordered, That leave be given to withdraw from the files of the House the petition and accompanying papers of Charles Alcott, asking for compensation for the use of his patented invention of iron ships by the Government, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Claims.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I would inquire whether, under the rules this session—I know it was so last session—gentlemen cannot withdraw petitions and papers, and refer them to the committees, without troubling the House?

The SPEAKER. That is so by express rule of the House, which the Clerk will read for the information of members.

The Clerk accordingly read a portion of the 24th rule, as follows:

"Members having petitions and memorials to present, may hand them to the Clerk, indorsing the same with their names, and the reference or disposition to be made thereof; and such petitions and memorials shall be entered on the Journal, subject to the control and direction of the Speaker; and if any petition or memorial be so handed in, which, in the judgment of the Speaker, is excluded by the rules, the same shall be returned to the member from whom it was received."

The SPEAKER. Under that rule the practice has been uniform during my service here, to withdraw and re-refer any matter introduced at a preceding session of Congress. The Chair therefore holds that it is in order so to do.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I think that the Speaker, on reflection, will correct that decision. It has always, I think, been necessary to obtain the consent of the House to withdraw papers, and for this obvious reason: gentlemen may come here, withdraw papers, put them in the hands of those for whose benefit they were presented, and then suppressing such as they may find unfavorable to the claimants, afterwards bring the balance in here, and refer it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee misapprehends the Chair; the decision of the Chair was not that members might withdraw papers for the purpose of sending them to the Departments, or for any other purpose except to re-refer them to committees of this House. That has been the uniform practice.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Certainly.

Mr. EWING. I ask leave to present a resolution proposing to amend the Constitution of the United States as regards the mode of electing the President and Vice President.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I found upon my table this morning the petition of Amos and J. E. Kendall, accompanied by a note, requesting that I would present it to the House, and have it, together with papers relating to the same subject on file in the Clerk's office, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs. I have not looked into the petition, and do not know to what subject it relates; but the House can refer it to the Committee on Indian Affairs, if it see proper.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I propose to debate that petition.

Mr. JONES. I thank you for that.

The SPEAKER. As the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] proposes to debate the petition, it must go over.

MEMORIALS.

Mr. EDGERTON presented the memorial of citizens of Toledo, Ohio, requesting an appropriation for the erection, at that place, of a custom house and marine hospital; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ZOLLIFFER presented the memorial of Wilkins Tanhill and Catherine Stout; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. Will it be in order to introduce a bill of which previous notice has been given?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order, unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. DAVIS. Well, I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the bill.

[Several MEMBERS objected.]

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana, presented the petition of Moses Pettit, of the State of Indiana, asking for relief; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, presented the memorial of Mrs. Helen McKay, praying for the passage of an act of Congress allowing her the commissions due her late husband, Colonel Aeneas McKay, deputy quartermaster general, for distributing moneys under an appropriation "for preventing and suppressing Indian hostilities, and so forth;" which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. W. also presented the petition of William K. Miller and others, asking the establishment of certain post routes; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

On motion by Mr. BISSELL, it was Ordered, That the memorial of General Sylvester Churchill be withdrawn from the files of the House, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BISSELL. I desire to give notice of my intention to introduce a bill.

Mr. PECK. I object.

Mr. LINDLEY presented the memorial of the St. Louis and Iron Mountain Railroad Company; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition from the inhabitants of Hampstead county, Arkansas, praying for the establishment of a post route from Washington, in said county, to Magnolia, in Columbia county, Arkansas.

Mr. W. also presented a petition praying for the establishment of a post route from Camden, in Ouachita county, Arkansas, to Magnolia, in Columbia county, in said State. Referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

On motion by Mr. CLARK, it was Ordered, That the papers of Moore & Hascall be withdrawn from the files of the House, and referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. COOK presented memorials of citizens of Iowa, asking a grant of lands to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

On motion by Mr. MACY, it was Ordered, That certain memorials and petitions asking a grant of alternate sections of land to the State of Wisconsin, in aid of certain railroads constructing by the Rock River Valley Union Company, be withdrawn from the files of the House, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

On motion by Mr. EASTMAN, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of James Morrison and others, sureties of G. R. C. Floyd, late Secretary of the Territory of Wisconsin, for authority to the accounting officers to settle the account of Louis Floyd; and the petition and papers of A. Finch, Jr., and eighty-one other citizens of Milwaukee, Wisconsin, asking Congress to remit a fine against Sylvester Pettibone, be withdrawn from the files of the House, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

On motion by Mr. EASTMAN, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of James B. Estes, for compensation for property taken for the use of troops in Wisconsin during the Black Hawk war, in 1832, be withdrawn from the files of the House, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WELLS presented the petition of J. A. Lapham, for compensation for services and information furnished Messrs. Foster and Whitney, and Mr. Owens, in making geological surveys of Wisconsin, Michigan, Iowa, and Minnesota, and also the letter of Charles Whittlesey on the same subject, and moved their reference to the Committee on Claims; which motion was agreed to.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon. I would ask the unanimous consent of the House for leave to introduce a resolution.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object.

Mr. LANE. It will be a long time before Oregon is again called, and I would be very much obliged if the gentleman making objection would withdraw it and let me introduce the resolution I have in my hand.

Mr. CLINGMAN. There is no person I would oblige sooner than my honorable friend, the Delegate from Oregon; but I attempted, during the whole of the last Congress, to introduce a bill out of order, and it was uniformly objected to. I must persist in my objection.

REPORTS.

The SPEAKER then proceeded to call for reports from the committees of the House.

Mr. DEAN. I move to suspend the rule calling for reports from committees, as there can be no reports ready.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Let the call go on. We will consume more time in suspending the rule than it would take to go through with the call for reports from committees.

Mr. DEAN. I withdraw my motion.

The call upon committees for reports was then gone through with.

RESOLUTIONS.

The SPEAKER announced that resolutions were now in order; and proceeded to call the States, beginning with Virginia.

The State of North Carolina having been called—

Mr. CLINGMAN. Mr. Speaker, I now make a motion, which I attempted to make half an hour ago. I assure the House that I would not have renewed it, if I did not apprehend that there is a large majority in favor of the movement—I mean as to the 24th rule of the House, of March, 1842. I would not occupy the time of the House by discussing it, were there not several members here who have not yet had time to read the rules, and many of whom do not know the effect of my motion. I hope they will give me attention for a single minute. At the time when this standing rule—by which States were called for petitions—was adopted, it was necessary, because that was the only mode by which members could get in a petition. It was found, however, that a great deal of time was occupied in this way; as gentlemen would rise in their places, propose to debate the resolution, and it would go over indefinitely. No one of these resolutions have ever been reached in my time in Congress. No resolution which a gentleman should propose to debate, as, in the case of the petitions of the gentleman from Tennessee—

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The gentleman from North Carolina has no petition to debate.

Mr. CLINGMAN. The Speaker stated that it would go over, and probably it never will be reached. Owing to these difficulties, the rules were amended, and it was provided that petitions to be introduced might be handed to the Clerk, the member presenting it indorsing on the back of it the committee to which he wished it referred. All our business was done in this way for years. I make the motion for this reason, that under the present system, during the last Congress, it was utterly useless to present any petition. Thirty days were consumed in calling the States for petitions; and at the end of that time they began to call the committees for reports. These committees began to report, and did not finish till the end of the session; and although we sat here for nine months, there never was an hour when a member of this House could introduce a resolution or bill in order. We should not have got along at all, but for the fact that the Committee on Ways and Means, and some other committees, frequently obtained the general consent of the House to make motions out of order, and in this way the business was carried forward. The short session came on, and I, and many others, were waiting for an opportunity to introduce bills; but it never came; and thus we passed through the whole of last Congress.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman has done for this resolution what he did for the resolution which I found on my table: it goes over.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I take it that the rule does not apply to a resolution. If so, then I move the previous question.

Mr. COBB. All this debate is out of order.

The SPEAKER read the rule, as follows:

"24. Petitions, memorials, and other papers addressed to the House, shall be presented by the Speaker, or by a member in his place; a brief statement of the contents thereof shall be made verbally by the introducer; they shall not be debated on the very day of their being presented; nor on any day assigned by the House for the receipt of petitions after the first thirty days of the session, unless where the House shall direct otherwise, but shall lie on the table, to be taken up in the order in which they were presented. Members having petitions and memorials to present may hand them to the Clerk, indorsing the same with their names, and the reference or disposition to be made thereof; and such petitions and memorials shall be entered on the Journal, subject to the control and direction of the Speaker; and if any petition or memorial be so handed in, which, in the judgment of the Speaker, is excluded by the rules, the same shall be returned to the member from whom it was received."

The SPEAKER. After the States have been called for petitions, and the committees for reports, resolutions shall then be called for, in the same order, and be disposed of by the same rules, as apply to petitions.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I was aware of that rule. I will move the previous question upon my motion.

A voice. It is too late.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I have the right to call for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. If a gentleman rises in his place, offers a resolution, and demands the previous question, he can have a vote upon it, if the previous question is ordered. But if he indulge first in debate, and it is then objected to, the Chair thinks the resolution must go over.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I indulged in remarks, as I understood, by unanimous consent; and I have the right now to move the previous question.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The gentleman certainly had no right to make a speech; and having made it, he cannot move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The practice has been for a member to rise in his place, offer a resolution, and demand the previous question, which cuts off debate. But the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] has indulged in debate, and for that reason the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] objects; and the Chair thinks the resolution must go over.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I submit to the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee obtained the floor, made the objection to stop debate, and, under the rule, the resolution must go over. The gentleman from North Carolina was deprived of the floor by the objection.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I have at least illustrated the operation of the rule, and will accomplish my object in some other way.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Cannot the matter be reached by a suspension of the rules?

The SPEAKER. It is competent to submit a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. SMITH. Then I make that motion, in order to introduce the resolution of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken on the motion, and there were, upon a division—ayes 118, noes 24.

So the rules were suspended, two thirds voting in favor thereof.

Mr. CLINGMAN. My motion is to strike out so much of the rule as requires the States to be called over every day for petitions. That being stricken out—

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman reduce his proposition to writing?

Mr. CLINGMAN. I will do it; but my motion is simple.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. The House only suspended the rule to entertain the proposition. According to the 136th rule, the rules cannot be changed except by notice previously given.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Notice has been given.

The SPEAKER. Notice has been given in this particular case by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN.]

Mr. STEPHENS. Notice of this very proposition?

The SPEAKER. Precisely this proposition.

Mr. CLINGMAN. My motion is to strike out so much of the existing rule as provides for the calling upon States for petitions. There are two clauses in the rule. One clause provides for calling upon the States for petitions, within the first thirty days, and the other upon alternate Mondays. The rule then stands in this way: That committees may be called upon for reports, and then the States may be called upon for resolutions and bills. I move the previous question.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Does the gentleman from North Carolina propose by his resolution to strike out of the rules everything which authorizes the calling upon States for petitions, not only for the first thirty days of the session, but for the alternate Mondays, during the remainder of the session?

Mr. CLINGMAN. I will modify my motion so as to leave Mondays out, because they will be taken up with motions for suspension of the rules.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I hope the gentleman from North Carolina will include Mondays, as well as the first thirty days.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move the previous question, and desire to have my motion apply to both.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The question was then taken upon Mr. CLINGMAN's resolution, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CLINGMAN moved to reconsider the motion by which the resolution was agreed to, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. COBB. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a bill, of which previous notice has been given.

Several MEMBERS objected.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Has notice been given of the bill?

Mr. COBB. Notice has been long since given.

Mr. JONES. It has been the uniform practice to introduce bills of which notice has been given. That has been the construction of the rules and the practice of the House.

Mr. COBB. I insist upon the right.

Rule 114, bearing upon the question, was then read by the CLERK, as follows:

"Every bill shall be introduced on the report of a committee, or by motion for leave. In the latter case, at least one day's notice shall be given of the motion in the House, or by filing a memorandum thereof with the Clerk, and having it entered on the Journal; and the motion shall be made, and the bill introduced, if leave is given, when resolutions are called for: such motion, or the bill when introduced, may be committed."

The SPEAKER. It has been the uniform practice of the House, when States are called upon for resolutions, to receive bills of which previous notice has been given. The Chair therefore rules that the gentleman from Alabama is in order.

Mr. COBB. I then ask leave to introduce a "bill to encourage agriculture, commerce, manufactures, and all other branches of industry, by granting to every man, who is the head of a family and a citizen of the United States, a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of land out of the public domain, upon condition of occupancy and cultivation of the same, for the period herein specified."

The bill was then read the first and second times by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

GRADUATION BILL.

Mr. COBB gave notice of his intention tomorrow, or on some subsequent day, to introduce a bill to reduce and graduate the price of the public lands.

MOTIONS TO ADJOURN OVER.

Mr. SMITH, of Alabama. I offer the following resolution, to which I presume there will be no objection. I ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That on all motions to adjourn over the yeas and nays shall be called, and the House shall not adjourn over unless two thirds order it.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no!

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to inquire of the gentleman from Alabama if notice has been given of intention to introduce the resolution?

Mr. SMITH. No notice has been given, and I supposed none was necessary.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. The gentleman from Alabama introduces the resolution and only asks its reference to the Committee on Rules. I suppose he has the right to do that?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the purport of the resolution to be, to change the rules of the House. If so, notice is necessary. If there be no objection, however, the resolution will be received, and disposed of as the gentleman desires.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I understand the gentleman from Alabama merely proposes a resolution of inquiry. I suppose there will be no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The resolution, there being no objection, will be received, and referred to the Committee on Rules.

RAILROAD BILL.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE introduced a bill, of which previous notice had been given, granting the right of way and a portion of the public land to aid in the construction of a railroad from Girard, Alabama, to Mobile; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. COBB. Will the Speaker rule that no member has the right to introduce more than one bill?

Several MEMBERS. That's all.

The SPEAKER. The rule requires that no member shall introduce more than one bill; and the rule will be enforced.

Mr. COBB. I have another bill that I desire to introduce, but I yield to the will of the House.

HARBOR OF MOBILE.

Mr. PHILIPS. I ask leave to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be instructed to inform the House whether any report or plan exists in his Department, showing the cost and practicability of deepening the harbor of Mobile.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I ask whether this resolution provides for anything more than calling for information?

Mr. PHILIPS. That is all.

Mr. STEPHENS. Then I have no objection to its introduction.

The resolution was then introduced and adopted. On motion by Mr. HILL, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Sterling Cocks, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE gave notice that on tomorrow, or some subsequent day, he would ask leave to introduce a bill, the title of which was not heard.

STATIONERY FOR REPORTERS.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I offer the following resolution, and if there be objection, I move he previous question:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be directed to furnish the Reporters for the Congressional Globe such stationery as may be required in the discharge of their duties.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I know the previous question has been called; but I should really like to know why that resolution ought to be adopted.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

The demand for the previous question was not seconded; forty members only voting in the affirmative.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Now, I suppose that the gentleman who offered this resolution will be able to give us some reason why he has introduced it.

Several MEMBERS. Let it lie over.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The only reason, and I consider that quite a sufficient one, is that the Reporters have been made quasi officers of the House, and have duties to perform requiring what this resolution proposes to give them. They have, in my opinion, as much right to this stationery as the members of the House themselves.

Objection was made to the consideration of the resolution at this time, and it was accordingly laid over.

ELECTION OF SENATORS BY THE PEOPLE.

Mr. MACE. I beg leave to offer a resolution, of which the following is the title: "A joint resolution to provide for the election of United States Senators by the people." I ask that it may be read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Why not consider it now? The present time is as good as any for the consideration of such a resolution as that.

The joint resolution was accordingly read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RAILROAD FROM THE FALLS OF THE OHIO.

Mr. ENGLISH. If it be in order at this time, I ask leave to introduce a bill, of which previous notice has been given. It is a bill granting lands to the States of Indiana and Illinois, to aid in the construction of a railroad from the Falls of the Ohio river to a point on the Mississippi, opposite the city of St. Louis.

Mr. E. I will state that my object is to have the bill referred to the appropriate standing committee.

The bill was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. EDDY submitted the following resolution; which was considered and agreed to, viz:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be directed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a port of entry at Michigan City, in the State of Indiana; and also of making an appropriation to continue the works upon the harbor at that place.

MOSES PETIT.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims, viz: "A bill for the relief of Moses Petit, of the State of Indiana."

PORT OF DELIVERY.

Mr. RICHARDSON, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill: "A bill to constitute Quincy, in the State of Illinois, a port of entry."

The bill was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. RICHARDSON. If any gentleman in the House desires that this bill shall go to a committee, I will not ask for its passage now. I desire to say, however, that it is important the bill should be passed at an early day in the session. There is now on the way to Quincy a large amount of iron, for the purpose of laying down a railroad, and the company desire to get it delivered there, and its delivery there will be of great advantage to them. If the passage of the bill is delayed, they will have to forego that advantage.

Mr. HAMILTON. I desire that the bill shall go to a committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then I move that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILROAD TO THE PACIFIC.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I offer the resolution which I send to the Chair; and upon it I demand the previous question.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That Congress has the power to provide for the construction of a railroad over the Territories of the United States, for the safer and more expeditious transportation of the public moneys, the mails, the troops, and the munitions of war, from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and ought immediately to exercise that power.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken, and resulted—yeas 126, nays 72; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Appleton, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Banks, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bliss, Boyce, Breckinridge, Brooks, Bugg, Caskie, Chamberlain, Chastain, Churchill, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Craig, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dean, Dent, Disney, Bowdell, Drum, Dunham, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmundson, Ellison, English, Ewing, Faulkner, Fenton, Florence, Franklin, Fuller, Gamble, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grow, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Hendricks, Henu, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Hughes, Ingersoll, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, McNair, McQueen, Lamb, Lane, Letcher, Lilly, Lindsey, McNair, McQueen, Mace, Macy, Maxwell, Mayall, Smith Miller, Millson, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Andrew Oliver, Orr, Packer, Peck, Peckham, Bishop Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Puryear, Reese, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rogers, Ruffin, Seymour, Shower, Shaw, Singleton, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Smeal A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, Snodgrass, Alexander H. Stephens, Stratton, Straub, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Trout, Vail, Vansant, Walbridge, Walsh, Westbrook, Wheeler, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, and Hendrick B. Wright—126.

NAYS.—Messrs. Willis Allen, Ball, Benson, Bissell, Lewis D. Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chandler, Chase, Clark, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Cullom, Thomas Davis, De Witt, Dick, Dickinson, Dunbar, Eastman, Edwards, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Flagler, Giddings, Goodrich, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Hiestler, Hill, Howe, Hunt, Knox, Lindley, Lyon, McCulloch, Matteson, Maurice, Middlesworth, John G. Miller, Morgan, Norton, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Pennington, John Perkins, Pringle, Ready, Richardson, David Ritchie, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Simmons, Frederick P. Stanton, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Upham, Wade, Walker, Elihu B. Washburn, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Yates, and Zollcoffer—72.

So the resolution was laid upon the table.

POWERS OF CONGRESS—RAILROADS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I offer the following resolution, and call for the previous question upon it:

Resolved, That as incidental to, and indispensable for, the exercise of the powers conferred by the Constitution upon the Congress of the United States, to provide for the common defense and general welfare, is the power to construct railroads through the Territories of the United States for the purpose of facilitating the transportation of the mails and the munitions of war.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I propose to debate that resolution.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Is not that resolution the same in character as the one we have just tabled?

The SPEAKER. It is the same in character, but not precisely the same resolution.

Mr. SMITH. I would inquire of the gentleman who has offered the resolution, whether it is his serious purpose to throw such great questions as are embodied in his resolution before the House without discussion?

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been called for, and debate is out of order.

Mr. SMITH. I hope the House will refuse to second the call for, the previous question.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JONES. I wish to withdraw the motion to lay the resolution upon the table until I see whether the call for the previous question is seconded.

Mr. HENN moved that the House adjourn; which motion was agreed to.

Whereupon the House adjourned till to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 13, 1853.

Prayer by the Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved

CONTINGENT FUND OF THE SENATE.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. President, I rise to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to be allowed to report at this time a bill from the Committee on Finance, which ought to be acted upon at once. We wish to get it through both Houses to-day, if possible.

The PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the report will be received.

There was no objection.

Mr. HUNTER. The Committee on Finance, to which was referred a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury respecting the mode of paying Senators, has instructed me to report a bill "to regulate the disbursement of the contingent fund of the Senate, and for other purposes."

The bill was read a first and second time by its title, and considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the moneys which have been, or may hereafter be, appropriated for the compensation of members and officers of the Senate, and for the contingent expenses of the Senate, shall be paid out of the Treasury on requisitions drawn by the Secretary of the Senate, and shall be kept, disbursed, and accounted for, at the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Senate shall be deemed a disbursing officer, and be allowed the sum of _____ per annum as a compensation over and above his salary as Secretary. It also proposes to enact that the Secretary of the Senate, in place of the bond now required to be given by him, shall, within ten days after the passage of the act, give bond to the United States, with one or more sureties, to be approved by the Comptroller of the Treasury in the penal sum of $20,000, conditioned for the faithful application of the moneys drawn by him; and that the certificate of the chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, certifying the accounts of the Secretary to have been passed by that committee, shall be deemed conclusive upon all the officers of the Treasury Department.

Mr. HUNTER. I am instructed by the Committee on Finance to move to fill the blank in the first section of the bill with "one thousand dollars."

The amendment was agreed to; the bill was reported to the Senate, as amended; the amendment was concurred in; the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; was read a third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Department of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate of March 31st, 1853, the report of an examination of the Patent Office Building made in 1851, under the direction of the Commissioner of Public Buildings; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings.

Also, a report from the Department of the Interior, transmitting, in obedience to the act of Congress of May 1, 1820, a statement showing the appropriations made for the service of that Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1853, and the repayments and transfers during the last fiscal year; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Also, a report from the State Department, in obedience to the twentieth section of the act entitled "An act regulating and making appropriations for such necessary expenses as have generally been included in the general appropriation bills, without authority of law, approved the 26th of August, 1842."

On motion by Mr. SEWARD, the reading of the report was dispensed with; and it was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. V. McKean, Chief Clerk, announcing that on the 7th instant, they elected the Rev. Wm. H. Milburn, Chaplain for the first session of the Thirty-Third Congress on their part.

PETITIONS.

The petition of the Iron Mountain Railroad Company, of Missouri, praying for a grant of the right of way through certain lands of the United States, reserved for military purposes, presented yesterday by the PRESIDENT pro tem., was taken from the table, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WADE presented the memorial and accompanying papers of the heirs of Captain Alexander Harper, praying compensation for his services in the revolutionary war; which were referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. SUMNER presented the memorial of William C. Parke, of Boston, praying for distribution of unclaimed balance of prize money, appropriated by Congress to heirs of John Paul Jones, and officers and men of the frigate "Alliance;" which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. CASS presented the petition of Amos Kendall and John E. Kendall, praying compensation for acting as agent and counsel of the Western Cherokees, or "Old Settlers;" which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. BROADHEAD presented the memorial of Joseph Tomlinson, of the city of Pittsburgh, and accompanying papers, in the matter of the loss of the iron steamer "Hunter," while engaged in the service of the United States in the war with Mexico, and connected, also, with the claim of the administratrix of the estate of John T. McLaughlin; which were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WELLER presented a letter from O. M. Wozencraft, late Indian agent and commissioner for California, in reply to charges against him, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. JOHNSON presented the memorial of Thomas Foster, in behalf of the widows of revolutionary officers and soldiers; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of S. L. Fremont, of the Army, praying to be restored to the position held by him in the Quartermaster's Department in 1849; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of Joseph Clymer and others, praying remuneration for losses sustained in consequence of the violation by the United States of their contract to furnish supplies for the Quartermaster's Department; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SEWARD presented the petition of John Thomas, praying that a sum of money, paid by him for a patent which he did not obtain, may be returned to him; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. SMITH presented the memorial of the heirs of Brigadier General Jedediah Huntington, of the Army of the Revolution, praying to be allowed for depreciation on commutation certificates; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. FISH presented the petition of Edwin Lord and Francis Bacon, praying to be relieved from certain judgments against them for duties, which they are unable to pay in consequence of losses by the great fire in New York, in December, 1835; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Also, the petition of Catharine Clark, widow and executrix of Joseph Clark, praying to be allowed arrears of pension due her husband; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, the petition of R. L. Beall and other officers of the Army, in behalf of the officers and troops who served in New Mexico from May, 1848, to March, 1852, praying to be allowed the same extra pay as was allowed those who served in California and Oregon; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

Mr. PRATT. During the last session of Congress, the Committee on Claims, if I recollect right, reported favorably upon thirty-five claims, twenty-four of which received the favorable action of the Senate. During the present session the papers, in many of those cases, have been withdrawn from the files of the Senate, on the motion of various Senators, and referred back to that committee, and I desire to suggest whether it would not be better that the bills, having passed this House, should now originate in the House of Representatives. Why should this committee be now incumbered with the labor of investigating these thirty-five claims again, which are accompanied with voluminous papers that have been already investigated by the committee, and which the Senate have sufficiently indicated their willingness to pass, although they may not, afterwards, have received the sanction of the House of Representatives. It seems to me that economy of time and facility in the dispatch of business in the Senate, requires that the practice should be, that where a bill has passed the Senate, the papers relating to the claim, instead of being brought back, as they now are, should remain in the House of Representatives, and then that the bill should originate in that House at the next session. But I suppose I shall be obliged to follow the course which has been pursued by other Senators here.

On motion by Mr. PRATT, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Lavinia Taylor, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion by Mr. COOPER, it was Ordered, That the memorial of John A. McGregor, one of the heirs of William McGregor, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion by Mr. COOPER, it was Ordered, That the papers relating to the claim of James Bell be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion by Mr. PEARCE, it was Ordered, That the petition of Mrs. Mary Williams, praying compensation for property taken or destroyed in the Florida war, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. PEARCE, it was Ordered, That the petition of Sally B. Matthews be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, for the purpose of being presented in the House of Representatives.

On motion by Mr. FOOT, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of the representative of Henry King be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion by Mr. FOOT, it was Ordered, That the petition of J. Nock be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, it was Ordered, That the memorial of the heirs of Judith Worthen, and the petition of William Miller, praying for pensions, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, it was Ordered, That the petition of Absalom Kyle and William C. Kyle, praying compensation for mail transportation, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin, it was Ordered, That sundry petitions and memorials of citizens of Wisconsin, praying a grant of land for a railroad from Chicago to Lake Superior, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

On motion by Mr. PRATT, it was Ordered, That the papers of the heirs of Major William Rely be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion by Mr. SEWARD, it was Ordered, That the petition of the heirs of Johannes Schultz, or Shulys, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion by Mr. DAWSON, it was Ordered, That the memorial of the West Feliciana Railroad Company, praying a remission of duties on importations of iron, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate.

Mr. DAWSON stated that a bill for their relief had been introduced during the last session, which had not passed both Houses, and that he should at an early day report back the same bill.

On motion by Mr. FISH, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Colonel Ward Burnett, relating to the claim of the common council of New York, for expenditures on account of New York volunteers, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion by Mr. SEWARD, it was Ordered, That the petition of Amos Knapp be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion by Mr. WADE, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of the heirs of William Dickey be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, for the purpose of presenting them to the proper Department.

On motion by Mr. JOHNSON, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of John B. and Thomas Johnson be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

On motion by Mr. JOHNSON, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Jonathan Lewis be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, for the purpose of presenting them in the House of Representatives.

On motion by Mr. GWIN, it was Ordered, That the petition of James W. Low be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

On motion by Mr. PEARCE, it was Ordered, That the petition of Martin Fenwick be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

On motion by Mr. ALLEN, it was Ordered, That the petition of John J. De Wolf be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

On motion by Mr. ADAMS, it was Ordered, That the memorial of John R. Jefferson be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

On motion by Mr. ADAMS, it was Ordered, That the petition of the heirs of John De Treville be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion by Mr. BRODHEAD, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Salvadora McLaughlin, widow of John T. McLaughlin, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

On motion by Mr. BRODHEAD, it was Ordered, That the petition of Mary E. D. Blaney, and the memorial of Cornelius McCaullay, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. PRATT, it was Ordered, That the petition of the legal representatives of John G. Mackall, the memorial of Benedict J. Heard, the petition of the heirs of William Somerville, the memorial of Hodges and Lansdale, and the memorial of the legal representatives of Rinaldo Johnson, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Mr. BRIGHT, from the Committee on Finance, reported a bill prescribing the manner of appointing the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. BRIGHT. I ask the Senate to consider the bill at this time. I will state that the object of the bill is to place the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury on the same footing with various other officers, whose offices are not more important than the one he holds. The Assistant Secretary of the Treasury is an exception to a general and important rule, without any reason in the judgment of the "Court" for that exception.

I have before me a list of officers appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, most, if not all of them less important in many respects, than the one to which this bill relates. I will name them: Comptrollers of the Treasury, the Treasurer of the United States, the several Auditors of the Treasury, the Register of the Treasury, the Commissioner of Customs, the Assistant Treasurers of the United States, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the Commissioner of Pensions, the Assistant Secretary of State, and the Assistant Postmasters General; hence the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on Finance of a bill on this subject. I hope there will not be any objection to its present consideration and passage.

The bill was read the second time by unanimous consent, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct that the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury shall be, from and after the passage of the act, appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I desire to inquire of the Senator from Indiana, when the Assistant Postmasters General were ordered to be appointed in the manner which it is proposed to adopt in this case?

Mr. BRIGHT. A provision was incorporated into one of the general post route bills of the last Congress.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. EVERETT gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to regulate the compensation of the district judge of the United States for the district of Massachusetts.

Mr. JOHNSON gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to amend the act creating the western judicial district of Arkansas.

Mr. HUNTER gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to extend the warehousing system, by establishing private bonded warehouses, and for other purposes.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GWIN, according to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to establish a line of mail steamers from San Francisco to California, via the Sandwich Islands, to Shanghai, in China; which was read a first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. ADAMS, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to reduce and graduate the price of the public lands; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. FISH, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to reimburse the common council of New York city, for expenditures made for the first regiment of New York volunteers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

BANK NOTES IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. ADAMS, according to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to prevent the issue and circulation of notes of a less denomination than five dollars within the District of Columbia; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to ask that the bill may be read a second time, with a view to its reference. Before doing so, however, I wish to state that my object in introducing it is only to meet the cases embraced by a bill introduced by me at the last session, to prevent the issue and circulation of notes of a less denomination than five dollars in the District. On my first visit here, I found a general complaint in reference to the circulation of small notes. There seemed to be no difference of opinion, except as to the nature of the corrective to be applied. I have learned recently that legislation is increasingly demanded in regard to larger notes than were embraced in that bill. A difference of opinion, however, exists in regard to that matter. A bill was brought forward at the last session by my friend from New York, [Mr. Fish,] which I expect he will bring forward again, in regard to free banking in the District. I have drawn up and presented the same bill which I introduced at the last session, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. I ask that it may be again referred to the same committee.

The bill was read a second time, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

PORT OF ENTRY AT BRUNSWICK, GEORGIA.

Mr. DAWSON offered the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a port of entry at Brunswick, in the State of Georgia.

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS.

On motion by Mr. ADAMS, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 13, 1853.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. SMYTH, of Texas, appeared and took the usual oath to support the Constitution of the United States.

[A message was here received from the Senate, by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., its Secretary, notifying the House that that body had passed a joint resolution, entitled, "A joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the expenses of codifying and revising the revenue laws," and asking its concurrence therein.]

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Department of the Interior, transmitting, in obedience to the act of Congress, approved May 1, 1820, a statement, showing the balances of appropriations made for the service of that Department, remaining in the Treasury on the 1st of July, 1852; the appropriation made for the fiscal year, ending 30th June, 1853; the repayments and transfers in the same time; the amounts applicable to the service of the years 1852-'53; the amounts drawn therefrom in the same period; and the balances on the 1st of July, 1853, with such appropriations as have been carried to the surplus fund.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the communication be laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

HOUSE LIBRARIAN.

Mr. MAURICE. I rise to a question of privilege. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. BAYLY,] to go into the election of a Librarian for this House was rejected. I voted in the majority, and have the right to submit the motion. Upon it I call for the previous question.

Mr. HIBBARD. I move to lay the motion upon the table.

Mr. MAURICE. I submit whether that motion is in order?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I ask for information, whether, if the House refuse to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table, the motion to reconsider will be debatable?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I hope, then, that the House will refuse to lay it upon the table.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The resolution was then read, as follows:

"Resolved, That this House will proceed at one o'clock to elect an officer to be called the Librarian of the House of Representatives, who shall have charge of its books and documents, and shall discharge the same duties and receive the same pay that are now discharged and received by the messenger appointed by the Clerk to act as Librarian: Provided, That said messenger shall be dispensed with, and that the number of messengers hereafter employed by the Clerk shall be one less than are now authorized."

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 97, nays 94; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Banks, Barksdale, Belcher, Bliss, Bliss, Breckinridge, Churchwell, Clark, Cobb, Craige, Curtis, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dunbar, Eddy, Edgerton, Ellison, English, Fenton, Florence, Gamble, Green, Greenwood, Grow, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hilyer, Houston, Howe, Hughes, Ingersoll, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Latham, Lilly, Lindley, Lindsay, McCulloch, McDougal, McNaif, Mace, Macy, Mayall, Smith Miller, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Olds, Orr, Packer, Peck, Peckham, Bishop Perkins, Phelps, Pratt, Richardson, Riddle, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Russell, Sapp, Seward, Seymour, Shannon, Shower, Samuel A. Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Wade, Walker, Warren, John Wentworth, Westbrook, and Hendrick B. Wright—97.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Ball, Benson, Benton, Bocock, Boyce, Brooks, Bugg, Lewis D. Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Caskie, Chamberlain, Chase, Chastain, Chrisman, Clingman, Colquitt, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Cullton, Dent, Dick, Dickinson, Dowdell, Drum, Eastman, Edmands, Edmundson, Etheridge, Farley, Faulkner, Flagler, Franklin, Goode, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Hill, Hunt, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Knox, Letcher, McQueen, Matteson, Maurice, Maxwell, John G. Miller, Millson, Morgan, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Pennington, John Perkins, Powell, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, Reese, Rogers, Ruffin, Sabin, Sage, Shaw, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Alexander H. Stephens, John L. Taylor, Tracy, Upham, Walsh, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Yates, and Zollicoffer—94.

So the motion was laid on the table.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. The motion to reconsider is not laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. It is laid on the table by a vote of 97 to 94.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. Reports are now in order from the Committee on Elections.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I have the testimony in the contested-election cases from New Mexico, of WILLIAM CARR LANE, against the election of DON JOSE MANUEL GALLEGOS, which I desire to present, and have referred to the Committee on Elections.

It was so ordered.

CLERK TO THE COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS.

Mr. HOUSTON the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be authorized to employ a clerk, at a compensation not to exceed $1,500 per annum.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I would like to inquire of the gentleman if the salary proposed to be given to the clerk is the usual compensation allowed?

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, the usual compensation allowed to the clerks of committees is four dollars per day, which, if the office were a permanent one, would amount to about $1,500 per annum. The Committee of Ways and Means, in looking at this subject this morning, and in view of the character of the business which will necessarily come up for action before that committee during this session of Congress, have determined, that it would not only aid them very much, and aid the House very much in the advancement of their business, but it would be of service to the country generally, if for the present, at all events, the office of clerk was made permanent; and that he should receive a salary commensurate with the salary heretofore given. It is known to the House that the Committee of Ways and Means have had a clerk all the time, for perhaps the last quarter of a century; and I will say here, that it is impossible for any number of gentlemen to transact all the business properly coming before that committee, without the services of a permanent and efficient clerk.

The only change we propose here, is to make this a permanent office, and give a compensation proportionate to that usually given to clerks of committees. And the object of this is, that a clerk may be employed by this committee who will give the duties and business of the committee his entire and undivided attention; and that he may prepare all the tables and statistics, or aid the committee in doing so, which may be necessary to investigate and elucidate all the subjects to come before them, not only connected with the appropriation bills, but with the consideration and modification of the tariff, which, in all likelihood, will be before that committee.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Mr. Speaker, my object in making the inquiry was to get the information which the gentleman has given. It is most certainly a very fair showing; but still I am opposed to creating any more of those permanent offices. You may put in this man, and you may not be able to put him out. I do not know whether the resolution provides for the removal of him or not, if he should prove to be inefficient or troublesome. By giving these clerks to committees four dollars per day, there can be no such difficulty. No doubt the gentleman will agree with me that heretofore the committees have got competent officers. I would, therefore, rather not extend the number of permanent offices; and I hope the resolution in this shape will not be adopted; because, if we begin that system of making the clerkship to the Committee on Ways and Means permanent, we will have to go on and elect clerks for other committees; and thus we will get into office a number of men whom we will find it troublesome and hard to get rid of. I think that the old system is a better one. Just let the committees employ such clerks as they require, and pay them four dollars a day for their services.

Mr. HOUSTON. My friend from North Carolina does not seem to understand the resolution I have offered. It is simply to give authority to the Committee on Ways and Means to employ a clerk, at a salary not exceeding that usually given. Of course the clerk will be entirely under the control of the committee, and can be turned out at any time. The object of the resolution is to meet the exigencies of the present occasion.

Mr. CLINGMAN. My reply was to the speech of the gentleman. I understood him to say that the object was to create this clerkship a permanent office. I hope the resolution will be amended, so as to appoint the clerks as heretofore. We have got along very well with them in this way; I am disposed, therefore, to make a motion to amend the resolution.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. One great reason for making this clerkship a permanent office—and if the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] had ever served upon that committee, and had seen, or had been conversant with the duties and qualifications required of that clerk, he would know it—is that we cannot pick up in this city, merely for a session of Congress, to be discharged at the end of it, a competent clerk at all times to perform the duties appertaining to a clerkship to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. CLINGMAN. If the gentleman will allow me, I wish to ask him a question, whether the clerk employed for that purpose during the last session of Congress was not a competent one, and cannot the committee again get him, or some one equally competent?

Mr. JONES. He was competent; and I venture to say as competent as any man within this city, or as any member of this House. He was employed as a clerk in the Treasury Department; and the First Comptroller of the Treasury, Mr. Whittlesey, bore testimony, in letters, to the faithfulness, efficiency, promptitude, and dispatch with which he there discharged his duties, and kept up his desk, to the entire satisfaction of that office; while, at the same time, he performed the duties which devolved upon him as the clerk of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Will not he do the same thing again?

Mr. JONES. That committee could not have got him for a per diem of four dollars, as they did during the session, if he had been compelled to leave the Department at the other end of the Avenue to perform those services here.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Could he not be obtained upon the same terms now?

Mr. JONES. I do not know how that is. It will be recollected by those who were here at the close of the last session of Congress that gentlemen brought up the complaint that he was performing the duties and receiving the pay of two offices, and on that account it was that Mr. Whittlesey wrote the letters, setting forth that he had performed all the duties and all the services of his office, and had kept up his desk to the entire satisfaction of that Department.

It is necessary, if we want an officer who is competent to discharge the duties of clerk to the committee, and if we want the duties discharged faithfully, that we should sometimes have a clerk here before the assembling of Congress, when the estimates are made up in the Departments, that he may prepare the bills, so that we may comply with the rule, as far as possible, in relation to reporting all the appropriation bills within the first thirty days of the session. You have a permanent clerk to the Committee on Claims, a very important one, but perhaps, not so important as a clerk to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The matter is in the hands of the House, and it is for them to dispose of it; and in that disposition, of course, I shall acquiesce.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. There are several committees of the House now having permanent clerks, and I do not find that any dissatisfaction has arisen as to those clerks. There is much more reason why the clerk to the Committee on Ways and Means should be permanent, than there is that the clerk to the Committee on Claims should be. Several of the subordinate clerks hold their offices during the year. The requisite qualifications could not be commanded for the four dollars per diem, especially during the short session. So think the committee unanimously; so I think the House will consider it.

The clerkship to that committee requires more preparation than that of any other committee. As the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] remarked, it would be impossible during the short session of ninety days, to get a gentleman of the requisite qualifications to serve for the per diem.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I wish to inquire whether, at the last short session, they did not employ this identical man?

Mr. STEPHENS. They did; but there was complaint made, on the part of the House, against paying him for holding two offices. This gentleman did perform his duties as clerk of the committee, and kept up his desk in the Treasury Department. There was a clamor raised against it, and a law was passed at the last Congress that no man should receive compensation for holding two offices at the same time. It is very possible that the House will permit the Committee on Ways and Means to employ Cochran upon the same terms; but it is against the law, as there was a statute passed at the last session of Congress prohibiting the holding of two offices by the same individual. Perhaps he would be perfectly willing to serve the House at four dollars a day, and keep up his desk in the Department; and perhaps we could not get a man of capacity who could discharge the duties of two offices.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I have no right to hold the floor again; but I wish to ask my friend from Georgia whether the fact that one man could perform the duties of two offices is not rather a reason for diminishing than increasing the number of officers; and whether, during vacation, the immense number of clerks which we have to furnish the estimates, cannot do that work without our making an additional standing clerk, during the vacation, to aid the Department in furnishing the estimates?

Mr. STEPHENS. I will answer the gentleman from North Carolina. The gentleman opens a new question; because one gentleman has qualifications and industry to perform the duties of Mr. Cochran, whether we should not reduce the number of offices in the Government? I do not wish to open that question. It is sufficient to say that Mr. Cochran in the short session did keep up his duties as Clerk of the Ways and Means, and did the duties of his desk in the Department; but it was an amount of labor which we cannot often command. We can seldom find an individual who will discharge these duties as well.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to say, in this connection, that a large proportion of the labor performed by Mr. Cochran was performed out of office hours, late at night. Almost every night, for a month at a time, Mr. Cochran was engaged in performing the duties of one or the other of his offices, until twelve or one o'clock at night. He was up in the morning by sunrise, and engaged at his desk, and that is the way he kept up the work in both offices.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I wish to ask a further question. The resolution is very indefinite. Do I understand that this gentleman shall be discharged from the duties of the other office?

Mr. STEPHENS. The resolution simply contemplates that the committee shall have authority to employ a clerk; but it does not contemplate that we shall elect Mr. Cochran. That is another question. The question that this House is asked to decide, is simply whether it is proper and right, that the Committee on Ways and Means shall have a clerk? Because Mr. Cochran may have worked late at night during the last session of Congress, or would be willing to do so this session—work sixteen hours, and get double the salary—is no reason why this House should impose this duty upon that gentleman.

Is the work that comes before that committee of such a character as should command a man of talent at $1,500 salary? If it is, let the Committee of Ways and Means have such clerk. If it is not, let them pay $4 a day. The House is perfectly satisfied that we cannot command a clerk, with the necessary talents and qualifications, for $4 a day. Is it right that the committee should have a clerk with the necessary qualifications to perform the duties of the Committee on Ways and Means during the vacation, or that this committee should hold office during the interval? I do not wish to detain the House with further remarks.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I move to amend the resolution by authorizing the Committee on Ways and Means to employ Mr. Cochran at the usual rate of compensation.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I hope that amendment will not be made. Mr. Cochran would then be appointed by the House, and the committee would have no control over their own clerk.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I do not propose that the House shall appoint him; I only propose to authorize the Committee on Ways and Means to employ him.

Mr. JONES. Well, sir, that will be the effect of the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. ORR. I call for the previous question.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I will withdraw my amendment, and move another.

The SPEAKER. The previous question is demanded, and no other amendment can be received.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I rise to a question of order. I made a motion to amend, which the Chair may not have heard. I proposed to amend by providing that the Committee on Ways and Means shall be authorized to employ a clerk in the usual manner, at the usual rate of compensation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman to make a suggestion to that effect, but not as an amendment.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I intended to have made that motion, and I supposed I was so understood.

Mr. SAGE. I propose now to move to amend the resolution.

The SPEAKER. No amendment is now in order, the previous question having been demanded.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Tennessee as having withdrawn his proposition to amend?

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I do withdraw it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If there is no proposition to amend before the House, I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Many Voices. That's right.

The resolution was again reported by the Clerk.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I demand tellers upon the motion to lay the resolution upon the table.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs RICHARDSON and CAMPBELL, of Illinois were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—yeas 78, noes 80.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 106, nays 93; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Ball, Benson, Benton, Bissell, Boyce, Brooks, Bugg, Lewis D. Campbell, Carpenter, Chamberlain, Chase, Chastain, Chrisman, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Corwin, Crocker, Cullom, Curtis, Dent, Dick, Dickinson, Dowdell, Eddy, Edmundson, Ellison, English, Fenton, Flagler, Gamble, Giddings, Greenwood, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Harrison, Hiestler, Hill, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, Knox, Letcher, Lilly, Lindsey, Lindsley, Lyon, McCulloch, McQueen, Matteson, Maurice, Meacham, Middlesworth, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Millson, Morgan, Murray, Noble, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pratt, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, Richardson, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchie, Rogers, Sabin, Sage, Seward, Seymour, Shaw, Simmons, Singleton, Gerrit Smith, William R. Smith, Snodgrass, Solfers, Richard H. Stanton, Stratton, Andrew Stuart, John J. Taylor, Tracy, Upham, Vansant, Wade, Walker, Walsh, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollieoff—106.

NAYS.—Messrs. James C. Allen, Thomas H. Bayly, Banks, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bliss, Biscoe, Breckinridge, Caruthers, Caskie, Chandler, Churchwell, Cox, Craige, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Drum, Dunham, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmunds, Etheridge, Everhart, Ewing, Farley, Faulkner, Florence, Franklin, Goode, Green, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Haven, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Ingersoll, George W. Jones, Kerr, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, McDougal, McNair, Mace, Macy, Maxwell, May, Mayall, Morrison, Nichols, Olds, Orr, Parker, John Perkins, Phelps, Powell, Reese, Riddle, Robbins, Ruffin, Russell, Sapp, Shannon, Shower, Skelton, Samuel A. Smith, George W. Smyth, Alexander H. Stephens, Hestor L. Stevens, David Stuart, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Vail, Warren, Elihu B. Washburn, Israel Washburn, Wells, Westbrook, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, and Yates—93.

So the resolution lies on the table.

Mr. SOLLERS. I wish to know whether it is now in order to offer a resolution?

The SPEAKER. It is not now in order.

Mr. SOLLERS. I move a suspension of the rules, for the purpose of enabling me to offer a resolution.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. That is not in order either.

The SPEAKER. It is only in order to suspend the rules on Mondays.

Mr. SOLLERS. I thought that the rules could be suspended any day by two thirds of the members present.

The SPEAKER. No. Motions to suspend the rules can only be made on Mondays.

The SPEAKER then proceeded with, and concluded the call of committees for reports; but no reports were submitted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that there is a resolution pending introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WASHBURN] yesterday, which now comes up for consideration.

BINDING OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. MURRAY. I was not in my seat just now, when the Committee on Printing was called for reports, but I have a report which I desire to submit. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to offer the following resolution, and I ask that it may now be put upon its passage:

Resolved, That the Executive Documents, the printing of additional copies of which has been ordered during the present session, or may during either session of the present Congress, be ordered by either House of Congress, and the size of which shall not be less than two hundred pages, such additional copies shall be bound under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing: Provided, That the cost shall not exceed twelve and a half cents per volume for the whole number ordered.

The question was then taken, and the resolution was adopted.

POWERS OF CONGRESS IN REGARD TO THE CONSTRUCTION OF RAILROADS.

The SPEAKER. The following resolution, offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN], comes up first in order as unfinished business:

"Resolved, That as incidental to, and indispensable for, the exercise of the powers conferred by the Constitution upon the Congress of the United States, to provide for the common defense and general welfare, is the power to construct railroads through the Territories of the United States, for the purpose of facilitating the transportation of the mails and the munitions of war."

The question pending, when it was last under consideration, was upon the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] to lay it upon the table.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I demand the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken, and the roll having been called, there were—yeas 118, nays 75; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Belcher, Benton, Bliss, Biscoe, Boyce, Breckinridge, Brooks, Chamberlain, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Craige, Curtis, John G. Davis, Dent, De Witt, Disney, Dowdell, Drum, Dunbar, Dunham, Eddy, Edgerton, English, Ewing, Faulkner, Fenton, Florence, Fuller, Gamble, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grow, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Hughes, Ingersoll, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Letcher, Lilly, Lindsey, McNair, McQueen, Mace, Macy, Maxwell, May, Mayall, Smith Miller, Millson, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Andrew Oliver, Orr, Pecker, Peck, Peckham, Bishop Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Reese, Thomas Ritchie, Robbins, Rogers, Ruffin, Seward, Seymour, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Simmons, Singleton, Skelton, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Alexander H. Stephens, Hestor L. Stevens, Straub, David Stuart, Trout, Vail, Vansant, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Westbrook, Wheeler, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, and Hendrick B. Wright—118.

NAYS.—Messrs. James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ball, Benson, Bissell, Bugg, Lewis D. Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chandler, Chase, Clark, Cook, Corwin, Cullom, Dawson, Dick, Dickinson, Eastman, Edmunds, Ellison, Etheridge, Farley, Flagler, Franklin, Giddings, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Hiestler, Hill, Howe, Hunt, Kerr, Knox, Latham, Lindsey, McCulloch, McDougal, Matteson, Maurice, Meacham, Middlesworth, John G. Miller, Morgan, Norton, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Pennington, John Perkins, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, Richardson, David Ritchie, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Samuel A. Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Tracy, Tweed, Upham, Wade, Walbridge, Elihu B. Washburn, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, and Yates—75.

So the resolution was laid upon the table.

Previous to the announcement of the result of the above vote—

Mr. ASHE said: I was not within the bar when my name was called. If I had been, I should most certainly have voted in the affirmative.

Mr. CASKIE. Had I been within the bar when my name was called, I should have voted in the affirmative, also.

[Here a message was received from the Senate by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., its Secretary, notifying the House that that body had passed a bill of the following title: "An act prescribing the manner of appointing the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury;" and asking its concurrence therein.]

RESOLUTIONS OF THANKS TO GEN. WOOL.

Mr. BISSELL. I offer the following resolutions for the adoption of the House, and move their reference to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Resolved unanimously by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the thanks of Congress are due, and are hereby tendered to Brevet Major General John E. Wool, for his distinguished services in the late war with Mexico; and especially for the skill, enterprise, and courage which distinguished his conduct at Buena Vista.

Resolved, That the President be requested to cause a sword, with suitable devices, to be presented to General Wool, as a testimony of the high sense entertained by Congress of his gallant and judicious conduct on that memorable occasion.

Resolved, That the President be requested to cause a copy of the foregoing resolutions to be transmitted to General Wool.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. YATES. I submit the following resolution:

Whereas, the construction of a railroad through the territories of the United States is imperiously demanded for the safe and rapid transportation of the mails, munitions of war, and the public moneys, between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts; and whereas, the sentiment of the American people is decidedly favorable to its construction, regarding it as a political, financial, military, and social necessity—a vital demand of our empire, our commerce, and our civilization—necessary in opening and making marketable and accessible our vast empire of the interior—necessary to bind our Pacific domain to us, and to secure to ourselves the commerce of the Pacific seas—necessary to the unity and promptitude of government, representation, administration, and defense; and necessary to the greatest prosperity and highest destiny of the nation: Therefore,

Resolved, That it is the duty of this Congress, as soon as it can determine from the reports of the surveys ordered by the last Congress the best route, to pass an act providing for the immediate commencement and early completion of said road.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that the resolution be laid upon the table.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I demand the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ORR. I should like to have the resolution read over again.

The resolution was accordingly read by the Clerk a second time.

The question was then put on the motion to lay the resolution on the table and resulted—yeas 119, nays 68; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Banks, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bliss, Biscoe, Boyce, Breckinridge, Brooks, Caskie, Chamberlain, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Craige, John G. Davis, Dawson, Dent, De Witt, Disney, Dowdell, Drum, Dunbar, Dunham, Eddy, Edgerton, Edmundson, English, Ewing, Faulkner, Florence, Franklin, Fuller, Gamble, Goode, Green, Greenwood, Grow, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Hendricks, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Ingersoll, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Letcher, Lilly, McNair, McQueen, Mace, Macy, Maurice, Maxwell, Smith Miller, Millson, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Andrew Oliver, Orr, Pecker, Peck, Peckham, Bishop Perkins, Phillips, Pratt, Puryear, Reese, Thomas Ritchie, Robbins, Rogers, Ruffin, Seward, Seymour, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Simmons, Singleton, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, Snodgrass, Alexander H. Stephens, Andrew Stuart, John J. Taylor, Trout, Vail, Vansant, Walsh, Westbrook, Wheeler, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, and Hendrick B. Wright—119.

NAYS.—Messrs. Ball, Benson, Bissell, Bugg, Lewis D. Campbell, Chandler, Clark, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Cullom, Thomas Davis, Dick, Dickinson, Edmunds, Ellison, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Flagler, Giddings, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Hiestler, Hill, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Knox, Latham, Lindsey, Lindsley, McCulloch, McDougal, Matteson, Meacham, Middlesworth, John G. Miller, Morgan, Norton, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Pennington, John Perkins, Pringle, Ready, David Ritchie, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Straub, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Upham, Walker, Elihu B. Washburn, Israel Washburn, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Yates, and Zollieoff—68.

So the resolution was laid on the table.

BINDING OF DOCUMENTS.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. A resolution was reported from the Committee on Printing, a few minutes ago, and adopted. I now rise for the purpose of moving a reconsideration of the vote by which it was passed. It is important that it should be reconsidered, for this reason: we intended that it should be a joint resolution of both Houses, but the enacting clause is not inserted. It is important that the resolution should be sent to the Senate for concurrence. It is relative to the binding of extra documents ordered by either House. I move, therefore, a reconsideration of the vote by which the resolution was passed, with a view to amend the same by inserting a clause which was omitted, so as to change its character and make it a joint resolution, as is required by law.

The motion for reconsideration was agreed to.

Mr. STANTON. I now move to amend the resolution so as to insert the usual enacting clause, "Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled;" and I move that the resolution so amended do pass.

The Clerk then read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Executive documents—the printing of additional copies of which were ordered during the present session, or may during either session of the present Congress be ordered, by either House of Congress, and the size of which shall not be less than two hundred pages—shall be bound under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing: Provided, That the cost shall not exceed twelve and a half cents per copy.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I should like to inquire what has been the practice heretofore on this point?

Mr. STANTON. This is precisely the same resolution which was adopted at the last session of Congress, and at the session before.

Mr. ORR. The resolution under which the binding was done three years ago was not a joint resolution; it was a resolution of this House alone, and it is proper that this House should pass the resolution without sending it to the Senate for concurrence. The House prints its own documents. It has the control, and should have the control, of the manner of putting up these documents. The resolution is proper, as a resolution passed on one reading here, for this House. It is not necessary to send it to the Senate for concurrence. Suppose the Senate should not concur, then the House would not have the power of having its own documents bound.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I would like to make an inquiry. Does not the resolution reported by the gentleman from Kentucky require that all documents, of more than two hundred pages in length, should be divided into volumes of two hundred pages?

The Clerk read that portion of the resolution applying, viz:

"That the Executive documents—the printing of additional copies of which were ordered during the present session, or may, during either session of the present Congress, be ordered, by either House of Congress, and the size of which shall not be less than two hundred pages—shall be bound," &c.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] said, that during the Congress preceding the last, a similar resolution of the House authorized the binding to be done. The policy of the House in reference to that matter was changed at the beginning of the last Congress. A joint resolution, of which this is a copy, was passed by the House, and sent to the Senate for concurrence. Under the joint direction of the two committees of the House and the Senate, all the binding of the last Congress was done. The Committee on Printing have thought that the safer course, and hence have authorized this resolution to be reported to the House. I do not know but it would be better to leave to the committee on the part of the House the control of its own binding, so that the House committee will not embarrass the action of the Senate committee, or the Senate committee that of the House. The resolution as it stood, authorized the committee of the House to have the binding done; but it now refers the whole matter to the joint committee of the two Houses, and that requires the concurrence of the Senate for its adoption; and the object of my motion was to change the form of the resolution, so as to make it a joint resolution.

Mr. HAVEN. I wish to state my recollection of this matter. I have a strong impression that during the last session of Congress these documents were bound, under the direction of the committee of the House; that is, those that were ordered by the House were bound under the direction of the committee of the House, and those ordered by the Senate, under the direction of the committee of the Senate. I have some reason to remember that fact quite distinctly. If the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANTON] will look back to some scenes which occurred last session, he will recall to mind that the Senate portion of the committee selected one binder, and the House committee another and different one. It is not a matter of much consequence, one way or the other. But for the reasons mentioned by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR,] it seems to me that the House should look after its own documents and its own binding.

I was so situated that I could not distinctly hear the remarks of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STANTON,] or I should have called the attention of the House to these facts before. It strikes me that the resolution had better stand as it was before the motion to reconsider was made, and that will be in accordance with the previous practice of the House.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Kentucky if, when a motion is made in this House to print an extra number of any particular document, it is not referred to the House portion of the Joint Committee on Printing, and whether they do not report back to this House, and recommend what number of extra copies should be printed?

Mr. STANTON. That is so.

Mr. JONES. I understand the gentleman to reply that such is the rule and practice. Then, sir, if the House portion of the Joint Committee on Printing consider and report upon all motions for printing extra copies of documents, I think the same portion of that committee—that is, the House part of it—should have the control of the binding of these documents, independent of the Senate portion of that committee. The committee is joint, and have the general superintendence of all the printing of Congress, to see that it is done according to the terms of the contract, and not as to the number of documents that either House, respectively, may order, or as to the manner or style in which they are done.

I think the resolution, as a House resolution, is proper, and that nothing is gained by altering it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I would suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANTON] a difficulty as to the resolution as it stood, and which should be amended, if it is to stand as a House resolution. If we are to have the control of the binding through the House committee, it ought to confer the power upon the committee of the House.

Mr. ORR (interrupting). If the gentleman from Illinois will give way, I will suggest a substitute which will meet his difficulty. I will read the substitute. It is as follows:

Resolved, That the members of this House of the Joint Committee on Printing be instructed to have all Executive documents, ordered to be printed by the House, of two hundred pages or more, bound at a cost not to exceed twelve and a half cents per volume.

The SPEAKER. The object of the gentleman from South Carolina can only be reached by unanimous consent, or by reconsidering the first and second vote upon the resolution. It is now a joint resolution.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. The object of the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR,] and the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. STANTON,] is only to have bound the extra copies for distribution. The resolution ought to provide for the extra copies only.

Mr. STANTON. I suggest the insertion of the words "extra copies."

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Kentucky, to ask the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw the joint resolution.

Mr. STANTON. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. If not objected to, the resolution will be withdrawn.

Mr. STANTON. I now offer the resolution as drafted by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR.]

The resolution was then read, as follows:

Resolved, That the members of the House on the Joint Committee on Printing be instructed to have all the extra copies of Executive documents ordered to be printed by the House, of two hundred pages, bound at a cost not exceeding twelve and a half cents per volume.

The question was then taken, and the resolution was adopted.

LAND OFFICE JURISDICTION.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw from the files of the House the petition of a portion of the citizens of Illinois, praying for the detachment of certain land from the Dixon land office, and to attach it to the Quincy land office, and to move that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. That can be done only by unanimous consent, as the rule which allows petitions to be presented in open House was changed yesterday.

There being no objection, leave was granted. On motion of Mr. HILLYER, the House then adjourned till to-morrow at twelve o'clock.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 14, 1853.

Prayer by the Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

The Hon. CLEMENT C. CLAY, Jr., of Alabama, and the Hon. WILLIAM K. SEBASTIAN, of Arkansas, appeared in their seats this morning.

PRESENTATION OF CREDENTIALS.

Mr. HUNTER presented the credentials of the Hon. CLEMENT C. CLAY, Jr., chosen by the Legislature of Alabama a Senator from that State, for the term of six years from the 4th of March last; which were read, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to Mr. CLAY, he took his seat in the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. V. MCKEAN, Chief Clerk, announcing that they had agreed to the amendment of the Senate to the joint resolution of the House for the relief of Alexander P. Field, late Secretary of Wisconsin Territory, and sureties.

Also, that the House of Representatives had, in compliance with the joint rules of the two Houses, appointed the following joint committees on their part:

On the Library—Mr. Benton of Missouri, Mr. Chandler of Pennsylvania, and Mr. Faulkner of Virginia.

On Printing—Mr. Murray of New York, Mr. Stanton of Kentucky, and Mr. Russell of Pennsylvania.

On Enrolled Bills—Mr. Green of Ohio, and Mr. De Witt of Massachusetts.

PETITIONS.

Mr. EVERETT presented the petition of B. E. Abbott, son of the late George F. Abbott, Vice Consul of the United States at Salonica, praying compensation for losses sustained by his father in the service of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HUNTER presented the petition of J. K. Cooke, praying compensation for loss of time and expenses incurred under an appointment of the President, as Consul of the United States at Xrbara, in the Island of Cuba, the Governor General of that island having refused to recognize him as such; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BRIGHT presented the petition of David Myerle, praying compensation for losses sustained in testing the practicability of water-rotting American hemp for the United States Navy; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. MASON presented the petition of Alfred Billups and others, praying compensation for French spoliation prior to 1800; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WELLER presented the memorial of Charles Homer, praying compensation for losses sustained in consequence of the delay of the United States Government in selecting a site for the marine hospital at San Francisco, and for services performed thereon not required by the contract; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. EVANS presented three memorials of the Charleston Chamber of Commerce, praying an appropriation for the improvement of the harbor of Charleston, South Carolina; also, an appropriation for a light-ship and buoys at Cape Roman; and a further appropriation for the erection of a light on White Point Shoal, in Charleston harbor; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. JOHNSON presented the memorial of the Creek nation of Indians, praying compensation for lands relinquished to the United States by the treaty of Fort Jackson, in 1814; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. BRODHEAD presented a petition of citizens of Massachusetts, praying the enactment of a law giving further remedies to patentees; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. SEWARD, it was Ordered, That the various memorials and papers relating to the construction of the Niagara ship canal be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

On motion by Mr. FISH, it was Ordered, That the documents relating to the claim of the late Colonel Joseph Watson be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

On motion by Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of the heirs of Benjamin Mooers, and the petition of Thomas Foster and others, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion by Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, it was Ordered, That the petition and accompanying papers of Thomas S. Russell and Antonio J. Noda, late register and receiver of the land office of St. Augustine, Florida, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, it was Ordered, That the memorial and papers of George Wright be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion by Mr. ADAMS, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of the heirs of Caleb Swann, deceased, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. HAMLIN gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill for the relief of Ira Baldwin.

Mr. SLIDELL gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill for the relief of settlers on the Maison Rouge grant of lands.

Mr. SUMNER gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to provide for the execution by the courts of the United States of commissions to take testimony issuing from the courts of justice of friendly nations.

Mr. FOOT gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill explanatory of an "act for the relief of Benjamin S. Roberts."

Mr. EVANS gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to indemnify the State of South Carolina for money expended for the United States in the war in Florida with the Seminole Indians.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DIXON asked and obtained the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a bill for the relief of Sophia Kirby; which was read a first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. SHIELDS, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to authorize the State of Illinois to select the residue of the lands to which she is entitled, under the act of March 2, 1827; which was read a first and second time, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BRODHEAD asked and obtained the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a bill giving further remedies to patentees; which was read a first and second time, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ADAMS, according to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill granting the right of way and a donation of the public lands to the States of Louisiana and Mississippi, to aid in the construction of certain railroads therein; which was read a first and second time, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, according to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to organize the Territory of Nebraska; which was read a first and second time, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on the Territories.

Mr. BENJAMIN asked and obtained the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a bill confirming certain land claims in Louisiana, in the Bastrop grant; which was read a first and second time, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

CLERKS TO COMMITTEES.

Mr. BADGER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the committees which were authorized at the last session to employ clerks, be authorized to employ clerks during the present session.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. CHASE submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Roads and Canals be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing for the construction of a railroad from some point on the western line of one of the existing States to some point on the eastern line of California.

STATUTES OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. SUMNER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to consider the expediency of providing by law for the appointment of a commission to revise the public statutes of the United States, to simplify their language, to correct their incongruities, to supply their deficiencies, to arrange them in order, to reduce them to one connected text, and to report them, thus improved, to Congress, for their final action, to the end that the public statutes, which all are presumed to know, may be in such a form as to be more within the comprehension of all.

The Senate then adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 14, 1853.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

WITHDRAWAL OF A PETITION.

On motion by Mr. MACE, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Committee on Claims, the papers in the case of Major Weed's administrators, with a view of replacing them on the files of the Senate.

A. AND J. E. KENDALL.

Mr. CLINGMAN. On my objection yesterday, the petition and papers in the case of A. and J. E. Kendall, presented by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] were laid upon the table. I now desire to withdraw my objection, and allow the papers to be appropriately referred.

There was no objection, and the papers were accordingly referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. LETCHER. Is it in order to introduce a bill, of which previous notice has been given, for the purpose of having it referred to the Committee on the Judiciary?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order at this time.

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

The House then proceeded to the consideration of the orders of the day, the first business in order being the call of committees for reports. The list of committees was called through in their order.

CHAIRMAN OF THE MILITARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. BENTON. Mr. Speaker, in the list of members of the Committee on Military Affairs as made by the Chair, my name was placed at the head of that committee. By the courtesy of the committee, the first name upon the list is usually considered chairman. The committee have the right, however, to elect their own chairman. While I am well pleased with a place upon that committee, I feel it extremely inconvenient to take upon myself the duties of its chairman at this time. I therefore proposed to the committee that we should go into the election and choose our own chairman, for the purpose of relieving me from the labors of that station; which they had the right to do. It was done, and Mr. WILLIAM H. BISSELL was elected chairman in my place.

The SPEAKER. Mr. BISSELL will be placed at the head of that committee.

INTRODUCTION OF A BILL.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, introduced a bill, of which previous notice had been given, for the relief of Louis B. Willis, late a Paymaster of the United States; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and ordered to be printed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. FLORENCE. Is it in order now to ask to withdraw a paper from the files of the House for the purpose of reference?

The SPEAKER. That can be done under the rules of the House, at the Clerk's table.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the unanimous consent of the House for leave to withdraw from the files of the House the petition and papers in the case of Magdalena Moore, widow of the late John Moore, a pensioner of the State of Pennsylvania. Leave was granted.

COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS' CLERK.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I rise to a privileged question. With a view of having the Committee on Ways and Means furnished with a clerk, according to the system adopted heretofore. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution on this subject was yesterday laid upon the table, understanding as I do, that some of the members of that committee are willing to adhere to the old principle.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Do I understand the gentleman from Ohio to say the Committee on Ways and Means are willing to return to the old system in reference to employing a clerk?

Mr. CAMPBELL. No, sir; I did not say that. I said some members of that committee were willing to return to the old system; not that the whole committee acquiesced in it.

Mr. STEPHENS. I trust the House will not reconsider that vote, unless that committee is to be authorized to employ a clerk under the system proposed by them yesterday.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will not insist on my motion; I withdraw it.

The list of committees having been called through, the States were next called for resolutions.

COMPLETION OF PUBLIC WORKS.

When the State of Illinois was called—

Mr. NORTON introduced the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to report a bill, as soon as practicable, for the completion of the public works for which appropriations were made by the last Congress.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, moved to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CLINGMAN asked that the resolution might be again reported.

The resolution was accordingly again reported by the Clerk.

Mr. ORR. I propose to debate the resolution. The previous question has not been demanded.

Mr. BAYLY. You cannot debate the resolution. The motion is to lay the resolution on the table.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has not been demanded; the motion is to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. BISSELL. I ask that the resolution may be again read for the information of the House.

The resolution was accordingly read.

The question was then taken on the motion to lay the resolution on the table.

Pending the announcement of the vote, Mr. GROW desired to be allowed to vote in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman from Pennsylvania within the bar when his name was called?

Mr. GROW. I was not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can be allowed to vote by unanimous consent.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The result of the vote on the motion to lay the motion on the table was then announced—yeas 102, nays 75; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Banks, Belcher, Bisell, Bliss, Bocoek, Boyce, Breckinridge, Brooks, Caskie, Chrisman, Clingman, Cobb, Colquitt, Craigie, Curtis, Cutting, John G. Davis, Dawson, Disney, Dowdell, Drum, Edgerton, Edmundson, Elliott, Ellison, Faulkner, Fuller, Goode, Greenwood, Sampson W. Harris, Hastings, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Hughes, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, Linsley, Macdonald, McDougal, McNair, Mace, Maxwell, Mayall, Smith Miller, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Andrew Oliver, Orr, Packer, Peck, Peckham, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Puryear, Reese, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Ruffin, Seymour, Shannon, Shaw, Skelton, Snodgrass, Richard H. Stanton, Alexander H. Stephens, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Trout, Tweed, Vail, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Warren, Westbrook, Witte, Hendrick B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—102.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Appleton, Ball, Barry, Beason, Bugg, Lewis D. Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chandler, Chase, Clark, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Cullom, Dick, Dickinson, Dunbar, Eastman, Eddy, Edmands, English, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Flagler, Florence, Franklin, Giddings, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Hiestler, Hill, Howe, Hunt, Kerr, Knox, McCulloch, Macy, Matteson, Middlesworth, John G. Miller, Morgan, Noble, Norton, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Pennington, Pringle, Ready, Riddle, David Ritchie, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Gerrit Smith, William R. Smith, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Upham, Wade, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Yates—75.

So the motion to lay the resolution on the table was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BISSELL. Is it in order now to introduce bills of which previous notice has been given?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. BISSELL. Then I ask leave to introduce the following bill:

"An act making a grant of public lands to the several States and Territories of the Union, for the benefit of indigent insane persons."

The bill was read a first and second time.

Mr. BISSELL. I ask that this bill may be referred to a select committee.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object to any such bill going to a select committee. I think it ought to go to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BISSELL. My only objection to this reference is, that that committee will undoubtedly be overwhelmed this session, as it was last, with bills proposing to make grants of land; and as the object of this bill is peculiar; I think it should have the reference I propose.

Mr. JONES. This bill legitimately belongs to the Committee on Public Lands; and I cannot see why a select committee should be raised for the reference of this bill.

The question was then taken on the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Public Lands; and a division being demanded, there were—yeas 99, nays 51.

So the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Public Lands was agreed to.

REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. CURTIS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take up a resolution passed by the Senate, to provide for a deficiency for the revision and codification of the revenue laws. I think it can be done in a few moments.

Mr. LETCHER. Is this in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BISSELL introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, viz:

"A bill for an act to repeal the first proviso of the fourth section of the bounty land law of September 28, 1850."

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Is it in order now to offer bills of which previous notice has been given?

The SPEAKER. It is in order under the call for resolutions.

Mr. WASHBURN. Then I ask leave to offer the following bills.

Mr. ORR. Before the gentleman proceeds I should like to know how many bills a member has a right to introduce under this construction of the rule?

The SPEAKER. By the construction which has been usually given to the rule, a member has been allowed to introduce all the bills of which previous notice has been given.

Mr. COBB. I have some fifteen or sixteen bills which I want to introduce, of all of which notice has been given.

The SPEAKER. They were resolutions, not bills.

Mr. COBB. I desired to introduce bills. I have a number here which I want to introduce early. I hope that, when next I get the floor, I shall be allowed to get them all in.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill of the following title; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, viz:

"A bill for the relief of the purchasers and locators of swamp and overflowed lands."

Mr. WASHBURN also, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce, viz:

"A bill for the further improvement of the Rock Island and Des Moines Rapids in the Mississippi river."

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, viz:

"A bill extending the benefits of the pension laws to all persons serving in the late war with Great Britain, and the Indian wars prior thereto, and their widows."

Mr. PHELPS, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, viz:

"A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act to provide for the payment of horses and other property lost or destroyed in the military service of the United States,'" approved March 3, 1849.

Mr. WARREN, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, viz:

"A bill for a grant of land to the Mississippi, Ouachita, and Red River Railroad Company."

Mr. GREENWOOD, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, viz:

"A bill to amend an act entitled 'An act to divide the State of Arkansas into two judicial districts,'" approved March 3, 1851.

Mr. MAXWELL, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed, viz:

"A bill granting the right of way and alternate sections of land to aid in the construction of railroads between the waters of the Atlantic and the Gulf of Mexico."

Mr. MAXWELL. Understanding that it has not been customary to order the printing of bills when introduced for reference to the standing committees, I modify my motion, and move simply that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

It was so ordered.

Mr. MAXWELL. I ask leave of the House to introduce "a bill granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the States of Florida and Alabama, in aid of the construction of a railroad from the waters of Pensacola Bay, in Florida, to Montgomery, in the State of Alabama," of which previous notice has been given.

There was no objection, and the bill was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HENN. I ask leave of the House to introduce "a bill making a grant of land to the State of Iowa in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of certain railroads in said State," of which previous notice has been given.

There was no objection; and the bill was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. HENN. I now move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HENN. I ask leave to introduce "a bill to grant a homestead to settlers on the public land, and to provide for their sale to actual settlers only," of which previous notice has been given.

There was no objection; and the bill was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. HENN. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would suggest to the gentleman from Iowa the propriety of moving the reference of his bill to the Committee on Agriculture. That committee had charge of the subject at the last Congress and reported a bill upon it to the House.

Mr. HENN. I would prefer the reference of the bills to the Committee on Public Lands, as one bill has gone there already. I know that a bill on the same subject has been referred to the Committee on Agriculture. It may be that two committees are wiser than one, and they together may be able to get the measure passed.

Mr. JONES. Has one bill been referred to the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. HENN. Yes, sir; and I desire this one to go there also.

Mr. COBB. It is as well that I should make the point I am going to on my friend from Iowa as on any other. I object to the printing of bills on their introduction for reference. Such has not been the practice of the House heretofore. If bills be printed, then they must always be reprinted when reported from the committees; thus involving an additional and unnecessary expense. I move to reconsider the vote by which the first bill introduced by the gentleman from Iowa was ordered to be printed. I trust that the gentleman will conform to the practice of the House, and not ask the printing of his bill till it shall have been reported from the committee.

The Clerk again read the title of the bill.

Mr. COBB. I object to the printing of it, for the reason that the system of printing bills on their introduction would cause a tremendous expense to Government.

Mr. HENN. I would just observe, in connection with the printing of this bill, that it provides for the construction of certain railroads, which have been memorialized for by the Legislature of the State. It is more for the purpose of carrying out the wishes of the Legislature of the State that I ask it to be printed, than for any other reason.

Mr. COBB. I would have no objection to the printing of the memorial itself.

Mr. HENN. The memorial does not require to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, it has never been the custom, I believe, to print bills when they are introduced and referred to a committee. When the committees report them back is the time when bills are ordered to be printed; but never on their introduction. I did not at first notice that the motion to print accompanied the one to refer.

The motion for reconsideration was then put, and agreed to.

The question on the motion for printing was then put, and negatived.

Mr. COBB. I make a similar motion in respect to the other bill on which the same order was granted.

The Clerk read the other bill introduced by Mr. HENN, providing a grant of public lands and sale to actual settlers only.

The question was put on the motion to print, and was also negatived.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be requested to inquire into the expediency and necessity of raising two or more regiments of mounted troops for the protection and defense of our frontiers; and that they be requested to report at an early day.

There being no objection, the resolution was adopted.

Mr. LANE also gave notice that he would on to-morrow, or some subsequent day, ask leave to introduce the following bills, viz:

A bill to provide for the improvement of the navigation of Willamette river;

A bill to provide for the extension of the military road from Myrtle Creek to Scottsburg;

A bill to provide for the completion of public buildings for the Territory of Oregon; and

A bill for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth Thurston, widow of Samuel R. Thurston, late Delegate from Oregon Territory.

On motion by Mr. BERNHISEL, it was Ordered, That the petition of the Legislative Assembly and Governor of the Territory of Utah be withdrawn from the files of the House, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The object of the gentleman from Utah could be accomplished under the rule, however, and the Chair is of opinion that that would have been the more regular course.

Mr. COBB. As we have finished the calling of the States and Territories for resolutions, I intend to appeal to the courtesy of the Speaker, as well as of the House, that my right which I had to the floor when I proposed to introduce bills of which previous notice had been given may be extended, so as to enable me to present the bills of which notice has been given. The Speaker has decided that it is not in order for any member to introduce more than one bill at a time. I am anxious to get rid of the bills which I have on my desk, that they may be referred to the proper committees.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I object. The gentleman from Alabama might have appealed from the decision of the Chair at the time it was made, if he was not satisfied with it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that, according to the rule, it is his duty to commence calling the States for resolutions precisely where he left off on yesterday.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. And get through with all the States and Territories before we go back. I think that is correct.

Mr. HOUSTON. Does the Chair decide that we must go back in the call of the States at the point where we last left off?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so decided.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not wish to interfere with the order of business, but I desire to ask the House to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union upon the President's message.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. HOUSTON. I intend to make that motion as soon as gentlemen get clear of their resolutions.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman submit the motion now?

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not.

The SPEAKER then commenced the calling of the States for resolutions, commencing with the State of Indiana, when—

Mr. MACE asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill, of which previous notice had been given, entitled "A bill granting land to actual settlers;" which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, a bill, of which previous notice had been given, entitled "A bill granting land to the States of Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Iowa, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Detroit to the mouth of the Big Platte, in Iowa;" which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ENGLISH asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill, of which previous notice had been given, entitled "A bill to constitute the city of Jeffersonville, in the State of Indiana, a port of delivery;" which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I have a resolution which I desire to offer, and I will send it to the Clerk's desk.

The resolution was then read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds be directed to inquire into and report to this House by what authority of law an officer of the United States Army is employed to superintend the construction of the two wings of the Capitol; what bond, if any, he has been required to give for the faithful disbursement of the money appropriated for that purpose; what alterations he has made in the original design of the said wings, as approved by the President under the law of September 30, 1850; by what authority of law the said alterations were made, and what additional expense has been and will be hereafter incurred in consequence of said alterations; and also inquire into the expediency of placing that work upon said wings at the Capitol under the supervision of the Commissioner of the Public Buildings, or some other civil officer to be appointed hereafter for that purpose.

Mr. STANTON. Upon the passage of the resolution I demand the previous question.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman withdraw the demand for the previous question for one moment? I desire to refer him to the law upon that subject.

Mr. STANTON. I understand the law, and it authorizes no such thing. I ask for tellers upon the demand for the previous question.

Tellers were ordered.

The question was then taken, (Messrs. CAMPBELL, of Ohio, and HARRIS acting as tellers,) and there were—ayes 82; noes not counted.

So the previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The question was then taken upon the passage of the resolution, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE introduced a bill, of which previous notice had been given, to amend an act, entitled "An act to continue half pay to certain widows and orphans," approved the 3d of February, 1853; which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE moved its reference to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. That bill, if I mistake not, is similar to others heretofore introduced, and relates more particularly to the widows of soldiers of other wars, since the war of the Revolution. I think it would more appropriately go to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I think I have proposed the proper reference.

Mr. JONES. I will withdraw my proposition to refer.

The bill was therefore referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. HILL. I ask leave to withdraw from the files of the House the petition and papers in the case of Magatee and Eastham, with a view of future reference.

The SPEAKER. That can only be done by unanimous consent. The Chair again states that the gentleman can accomplish his object by applying at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. HILL. I supposed that rule referred only to the presentation of memorials, but that the consent of the House was necessary to withdraw papers from the files of the House.

The SPEAKER. Leave will be granted, unless objection be made.

There was no objection, and leave was granted.

Mr. EDGERTON, on leave, introduced a bill, of which previous notice had been given, granting to the State of Ohio the unsold and unappropriated lands remaining in said State; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana, gave notice of his intention on to-morrow, or some subsequent day, to introduce a bill of the following title:

A bill granting to the State of Louisiana the right of way and a portion of the public lands, for the purpose of locating and constructing a railroad from Shreveport to the Mississippi river, in said State.

Mr. COBB. I now propose to introduce various bills, of which previous notice has been given. I begin with the following:

A bill to extend the time for payment of duties on railroad iron, and for other purposes.

The bill was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. COBB. I move its reference to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. It should go to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. COBB. I have no particular choice as to the committee to which this bill may be referred; but I would remind gentlemen that, at the last session of Congress, we passed precisely such a bill as I now propose to introduce. That bill, when introduced, was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and was reported from that committee and passed. I say again that I have no particular choice as to the committee. It is a question, I think, which will commend itself to the favorable consideration of every thinking mind in this House. I have nothing further to offer in regard to it. It is a matter of no consequence to me to what committee it is referred. I make the motion to refer to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, because I think it is the most suitable committee.

Mr. BAYLY. I beg to differ with the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. COBB.] This is not a mere matter of choice between committees, but a matter of principle is involved in this thing. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Alabama, by proposing the reference of this bill to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. COBB. If any principle is involved, I would say that there is a very important matter involved in that bill—a matter in which railroad companies are concerned, and also the public service—so far as regards the transportation of the mails. A great and important feature of this bill is connected with that branch of the public service.

Mr. HIBBARD. I wish simply to suggest to the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. COBB.] that the rule determines this question, in effect, by providing that matters relating to the public revenue shall go to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. COBB. If gentlemen desire the reference to the Committee on Ways and Means, I have merely to say that I have such confidence in the intelligence and sense of justice of the gentlemen constituting that committee, that I am willing to allow the bill to have that reference, and I withdraw my motion to refer it to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

The motion to refer the bill to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads was accordingly withdrawn, and it was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. LETCHER. I rise to a question of order.

During the last session of Congress, the question was raised by the gentleman from Alabama himself, [Mr. COBB,] who came here with an armful of bills, as to how many bills a member might introduce under this construction of the rules.

Mr. COBB. I never came here with an armful of bills.

Mr. LETCHER. The gentleman, I know, offered a proposition that no member should introduce more than one bill at a time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules that when the States are being called for resolutions, gentlemen may introduce bills of which notice has been given, without regard to the number of them. Gentlemen cannot, under the rules of the House, introduce more than one resolution, or one series of resolutions; but any number of bills, of which notice has been given, may be introduced.

Mr. COBB. I am glad that it is so. I propose now to introduce another bill, the object of which is, that all the public lands in the State of Alabama which have been unsold and unappropriated, and have been in market for a period of twenty years, should be granted to that State, for the purposes stated in the bill. The title of the bill is as follows:

"A bill to grant to the State of Alabama, and other States having public lands, the unsold and unappropriated public lands that have been in market for twenty years and upwards, for purposes of education and internal improvement."

The bill was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. COBB. I have another bill which I wish to introduce. I fear the House will think I am troublesome; but my duty demands that I should introduce these bills at this time. I ask leave to introduce the following bill:

"A bill granting the right of way, and a donation of the public lands, to the State of Alabama, to aid in the construction of the Wills Valley Railroad, and for other purposes."

The bill was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order. Would it not be in order for the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] to pass up all the bills in his hands at once?

Mr. COBB. I should prefer doing so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the question of order.

Mr. COBB. I ask leave to introduce a bill in which the States of Virginia, Tennessee, and many other States are interested. It is a bill "granting the right of way and a portion of the public lands to aid in the construction of a railroad from Memphis, in the State of Tennessee, to intersect the Charleston, Chattanooga, and Nashville Railroad, in Alabama."

The bill was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. COBB. I would introduce another bill, entitled "A bill granting the right of way and a donation of the public lands to the State of Alabama, to aid in the construction of the Cohab Valley Railroad, in said State." It is for the purpose of connecting the Tennessee and Alabama waters; an object which the Government has long had in view.

The bill was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. COBB. I have another bill here in which orphan children and others are interested. It is a bill entitled "A bill to authorize the school commissioners of fractional township No. 1, range No. 10 east, in Alabama, to locate one section of land for school purposes."

The bill was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. COBB. I ask leave to introduce another bill, and have it referred to the Committee on Public Lands. It is "A bill granting the right of way to the State of Alabama, and a portion of the public lands, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Winchester, in the State of Tennessee, to some point on the Tennessee river, at or near Fort Deposit, Alabama."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. That bill refers to a railroad commencing in my district; and I would ask the gentleman from Alabama whether that road runs through one foot of the public lands from Winchester to the Tennessee river?

Mr. COBB. Yes, sir, it does.

Mr. JONES. Where is it?

Mr. COBB. Near Flint river.

Mr. JONES. The people of that country do not know where it is then.

I would further inquire of the gentleman whether the railroad mentioned in the first bill, commencing at Memphis, in the State of Tennessee, and intersecting the Charleston, Chattanooga, and Nashville Railroad, passes through any of the public lands?

Mr. COBB. Oh, much of it.

Mr. JONES. I should like to know where?

Mr. COBB. In portions of Jackson and Madison counties.

Mr. LETCHER. I call the gentlemen to order.

Mr. JONES. We do not ask the right of way from this Government to open railroads through Tennessee.

Mr. COBB. I was aware of that, and I therefore got the Clerk to read the title of the bill, as I knew it would bring the gentleman from Tennessee down upon me.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] object to the reception of the bill?

Mr. JONES. Oh, no, not at all; but it is of no use to grant the right of way, or alternate sections in this case, because there are no public lands there.

Mr. COBB. Oh, yes; they can get some within six miles of the road.

Mr. JONES. They will have to get a search warrant to find it. [Laughter.]

The bill was then read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. COBB also, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

"A bill to reduce and graduate the price of the public lands to actual settlers and cultivators."

Mr. COBB also, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

"A bill to authorize the States in which sixteenth school sections are situated, to relinquish such lands reserved or granted for the use of schools as may be comparatively valueless or unfit for cultivation, and to select other lands in lieu thereof."

Mr. COBB. I have another bill here, and if the gentleman from Tennessee wants any information about it, I can tell him that if this bill passes we shall get some lands under it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It is the first one, then, under which that will be the case.

Mr. COBB then, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

"A bill granting the right of way and a donation of land to the State of Alabama, in aid of the construction of the Coosa and Tennessee River Railroad in said State, leading from Gadsden to the Tennessee river, at or near Gunter's Landing."

INDEMNITY TO SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. ORR, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

"A bill to indemnify the State of South Carolina for money expended for the United States, in the war in Florida with the Seminole Indians."

DUTIES ON IMPORTS.

Mr. BOYCE. I offer the following resolution; and upon it I demand the previous question:

Resolved, That in view of the large and increasing surplus now in the Treasury, the duties on imports should be so reduced as only to raise such a revenue as may be necessary for an economical administration of the Government, and the duties should be so imposed as to equalize, as much as possible, the burdens of taxation to all classes and sections, and to insure the abstraction from the pockets of the people of as little as possible over and above what is paid into the Treasury.

The House was then divided on the call for the previous question; and it was not seconded—only 38 voting in the affirmative.

Mr. SAGE. I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. DRUM. I demand the yeas and nays upon that motion.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I submit whether the motion to lay upon the table did not come to late? The call for the previous question failed to be seconded, and the resolution, of course, passed from before the House. In my opinion, the motion was not made in time.

The SPEAKER. The resolution, the gentleman from Tennessee will remember, will not pass from before the House unless debate arise upon it. No debate has occurred; and the motion to lay upon the table is a privileged one, and cuts off debate precisely like the call for the previous question. The Chair decides that the motion to lay upon the table was made in order.

Tellers were demanded on the call for the yeas and nays; but were not ordered.

Mr. DRUM. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HILLYER. I propose to debate the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The proposition now is to lay on the table, which cuts off all debate.

The resolution was again read for the information of the House.

The question was then put on the motion to lay upon the table; and, upon a division, there were—yeas 72, nays 76.

Mr. HIBBARD. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SAGE. I withdraw the motion to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I move to refer the resolution to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I propose to debate the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution then lies over.

U. S. DISTRICT COURT OF VIRGINIA.

Mr. LETCHER asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill, of which previous notice had been given, entitled "A bill to change the time of holding the district court of the United States in the western district of Virginia, and for other purposes;" which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

COMMERCIAL RESTRICTIONS.

Mr. FAULKNER offered the following resolution; which was read and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to report to the House a statement of the privileges and restrictions of the commercial intercourse of the United States with all foreign nations, similar to that communicated to this House on the 29th March, 1842; and further, that he be requested to give a table exhibiting a comparative statement between the tariff of other nations and that of the United States, similar to the one prepared and laid before this body in March, 1842.

HOMESTEAD BILLS.

Mr. DAWSON asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill, of which previous notice had been given, entitled "A bill to encourage agriculture, commerce, manufactures, and all other branches of industry, by granting to every man who is the head of a family, and a citizen of the United States, a homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of land, out of the public domain, on the condition of occupancy and cultivation of the same, for the period herein specified;" which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. GROW asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill, of which previous notice had been given, entitled "A bill to encourage agriculture, and all other branches of industry, by granting to every person who is the head of a family one hundred and sixty acres of land, on the condition of occupancy and cultivation for the period herein specified;" which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

EULOGIES ON WILLIAM R. KING.

Mr. MCNAIR. I beg to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing cause to be published and bound in pamphlet form, in such a manner as may seem to them appropriate, for the use of the House, thirty thousand copies of the addresses made by members of the Senate and by members of the House, together with so much of the message of the President of the United States at the commencement of the session, as related to the death of the Hon. William R. King.

I move the adoption of the resolution; and on it demand the previous question.

Mr. HAVEN. I submit that the resolution should go to the Committee on Printing, without any action of the House upon it.

The SPEAKER. It must go to the committee, under a general law of Congress.

CODIFICATION OF THE REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the House now proceed to the consideration of the resolution, which has come from the Senate, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay all the expenditures of codifying and revising the revenue laws.

The SPEAKER. The motion in that form is not exactly in order. A motion to go to the orders of the day upon the Speaker's table would be in order.

Mr. CURTIS. Then I make that motion.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I suggest to the gentleman that he should allow the call for resolutions to be finished before he makes that motion.

Mr. CURTIS. I withdraw the motion in conformity to the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. The motion is withdrawn, and resolutions are in order from the State of Pennsylvania.

GRANT TO PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. STRAUB gave notice that on to-morrow, or some future day, he should ask leave to introduce a bill to grant a portion of the public domain to the State of Pennsylvania, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of the Sunbury and Erie Railroad.

CENSUS REPORT.

Mr. STRAUB also submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That in addition to the number already ordered, there shall be five thousand copies of the report of the Superintendent of the Seventh Census, and thirty thousand copies of the abstract printed for the use of the members.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will go to the Committee on Printing, under the rule.

MANUFACTURE OF SALT.

Mr. DRUM offered a resolution which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to furnish to this House a statement of the number of establishments, and where located in the United States, engaged in the manufacture of salt; of the probable amount of capital invested in the said manufacture in each State; the average quantity annually manufactured at said establishments, and a table of prices for which the said article has sold under the present rate of duties thereon; and also to inform the House of the annual amount of revenue received from the importation of foreign salt into the United States.

The question was taken, and the resolution was adopted.

COPYRIGHTS.

Mr. CHANDLER asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill, of which previous notice had been given, entitled "A bill supplementary to an act entitled 'an act to amend the several acts respecting copyrights,'" approved February 3, 1831; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CENSUS REPORT AGAIN.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania, introduced the following resolution:

Resolved, That thirty thousand additional copies of the Seventh Census be printed for the use of the members of this House.

The SPEAKER. It must go to the Committee on Printing, under the rule.

Mr. WRIGHT. I hope it will be adopted without.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and, under the law of the two Houses, it must go to the committee.

Mr. FLORENCE. I ask the unanimous consent to withdraw from the files of the House, for the purpose of being used in the Senate, the petition and papers of David Myerle, asking compensation for losses sustained in supplying the Government with water-rotted hemp.

The SPEAKER. It cannot be done under the rules; but the order will be made, unless it is objected to.

No objection being made, leave was granted.

SALE AND SETTLEMENT OF PUBLIC LANDS.

AGRICULTURAL BUREAU.

Mr. SKELTON, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced bills of the following titles:

A bill to provide for the sale and settlement of the public lands of the United States; and

A bill for the establishment of an Agricultural Bureau; which were read the first and second time by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. S. also introduced a bill for the relief of Elizabeth Long; which was read the first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

CUSTOM-HOUSE AT BUFFALO.

Mr. HAVEN. I offer the following resolutions, and ask that they be referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be, and it is hereby, instructed to inquire into the necessity and propriety of constructing a custom-house and Government warehouse at Buffalo, in the State of New York, with rooms suitable for holding the United States court therein, and that the said committee report to this House the conclusions they shall arrive at upon said inquiry, and what action, if any, it may deem necessary and expedient for the public interest in the premises.

Resolved, further, That the papers on file in this House, in reference to a marine hospital at Buffalo, in said State, be referred to said committee.

The resolutions were referred as proposed.

Mr. FENTON. I ask unanimous consent to withdraw from the files of the House the petition and papers of Cornelius R. Lathrop, for the purpose of reference.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to do so in open House, but it may be done by application at the Clerk's desk.

CENSUS REPORT.

Mr. FENTON. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That fifteen thousand copies of the report of the Seventh Census of the United States be printed for the use and benefit of the new members of the House of Representatives, to be distributed equally among the aforesaid new members.

The SPEAKER. The resolution is referred to the Committee on Printing.

OUTRAGES UPON AMERICAN CITIZENS.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I beg leave to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the United States is requested to furnish Congress, if, in his opinion, the public interests will allow, with copies of all the correspondence that has passed between this Government and Spain relating to the seizure and imprisonment of Captain Thaddeus Beecher and the officers and crew of the schooner North Carolina, of and from New Haven, Connecticut, by the Spanish authorities at Porto Rico, in the month of March, 1850.

The resolution having been read—

Mr. INGERSOLL said: I am aware that, by the rules of the House, if debate is proposed, the resolution lies over; but I appeal to gentlemen of the House, to allow me their unanimous consent, under the peculiar circumstances of this case, to make a statement, in as few words as possible, of the object of the resolution which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

[Cries of "Go on!" "Go on!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will be allowed to proceed by unanimous consent.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. INGERSOLL. I appeal to my friend from New York to withdraw his objection.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw it.

Mr. LETCHER. Does this resolution go over if debate is proposed?

The SPEAKER. It does, unless the gentleman has the unanimous consent to proceed.

Mr. WALSH. I only withdraw my objection upon condition that the gentleman will be very brief in his statement.

Mr. INGERSOLL. Mr. Speaker, I hope the House will allow me to call its attention, for a very few moments, to the facts in a case which, though affecting more particularly my constituents, yet, in their general bearing, are full of interest to every American who has the honor of his country at heart; who looks to its flag for protection; and who demands for it nothing that is not right, and submits to nothing that is wrong. I ought to premise that the case in question has been a matter of correspondence between the diplomatic bureaus of this country and Spain for the past three years, swinging like a pendulum to and fro; and it is on account of the great delay in bringing about a disposal of it, and the fears I have, that if left to ordinary diplomatic notes, an indemnification never will be had for a most wanton and inhuman outrage upon the persons and property of American citizens, that I deem it a matter of duty to invite the attention of the country to it. The facts are substantially these, and I believe they will not be disputed:

On the 12th day of March, 1850, Mr. Thaddeus Beecher, of New Haven, in Connecticut, was in command of the schooner North Carolina, of and from New Haven, then lying at Porto Rico, one of the West India islands, belonging to the Government of Spain. On that day the schooner sailed, and on the same night was wrecked on one of the points of that island. The vessel and cargo were nearly a total loss, but the officers and crew, with much peril, were safely landed, and immediately Mr. Beecher repaired to Mayaguez, the nearest port, to obtain assistance. Soon after his arrival at that place the captain of the port, a Spanish official, without any just reason for so doing, ordered him to return to the wreck, threatening him with immediate imprisonment for any disobedience of the order. In consequence of that order, Mr. Beecher was obliged to return to the schooner without being able to see, or to obtain any assistance from the American consular agent at that port. With the assistance, however, of his officers and crew, and at the imminent peril of their lives, he succeeded in saving a few articles from the wreck, and they were sent ashore in a boat dispatched by the American consular agent for that purpose, when they were seized upon by the Spanish authorities; and Mr. Beecher, his officers and crew, were forbidden to leave the island. They were detained without any reason whatever for more than thirty days, until the arrival at Mayaguez of the United States sloop-of-war Albany, Captain Randolph. Mr. Beecher then, having applied to the American consular agent in vain, availed himself of the presence of the Albany, and applied to Captain Randolph for redress. As soon as the captain of the port heard of the conference between Captain Randolph and Mr. Beecher, he sent an order for the latter to attend immediately at his office, which order was obeyed. Mr. Beecher ascertained that it was the intention of the captain of the port to inflict imprisonment on him and his crew, for having laid his grievances before Captain Randolph, and at once sent a note to the American consular agent, requesting his advice and assistance, when, by the order of this captain of the port, Mr. Beecher, his officers and crew, were marched through the streets by a file of soldiers, the American flag flying from the mast-head of a ship-of-war in sight before them, and thrust into a filthy cell, in company with a supposed felon; and in a few moments, as if in aggravation of the insult offered (to use the language of our minister at Madrid, in laying this case before the Government of Spain) to the flag of the United States, as well as to Mr. Beecher and his companions, a sheep was driven in to be stabled! and here they remained until the exertions of Captain Randolph procured for them a release from their loathsome confinement.

This, sir, is a simple statement of facts, drawn from official sources; and when it is borne in mind that already three years have passed since these outrages were committed, and yet no redress has been granted by the Government of Spain to Captain Beecher or his companions, one may well express surprise and astonishment. Here is a case where treaty stipulations have been violated, and the rights of humanity trampled upon; the person of an American citizen insulted and imprisoned, his property illegally seized and withheld to this day from him, and, to add to this, the flag of his country outraged, and that, too, by a Government which has received every consideration of respect from this; and yet we are, as it were, quietly submitting to it all. I say submitting.

Nor, sir, am I ignorant of what has passed between the two Governments of America and Spain in relation to this case. I am aware that our Government was prompt in demanding satisfaction to Captain Beecher, and I know also that the Spanish Government has acknowledged the wrong done him, by removing from office the official who figured as the "Captain of the port" at the time

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33d CONGRESS, 1st Session.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 19, 1853.

NEW SERIES.....No. 4.

referred to; but the claim for damages remains unsettled, and, from all that I can see, is likely to remain so for years to come, unless the new leaf in the book of American diplomacy opened by the President in his noble inaugural, acted upon by Captain Ingraham, and commented upon by the Secretary of State, is again read over. Mr. Speaker, I am a man of peace, but not of that peace which is purchased with servility. The peace that is lasting, which carries with it honor and security to the citizen, is best preserved by an eagerness and a readiness to redress wrongs.

The English nation is powerful, and whoever visits England will be struck with the deep-seated loyalty of its people. What gives it this strength, and from whence springs this great loyalty? I will tell you. The feeling so common among Englishmen—a feeling born with them, and which grows with their growth—that the Government of England is prompt to vindicate a wrong done to the meanest of its subjects. Place an Englishman where you will—on the snows of Siberia, or the sands of Sahara—and you will generally find him the same loyal subject you meet with daily in St. James street, or the neighborhood of the Tower of London.

Far be it from me to underrate the attachment of my own countrymen to their land, its institutions, and its privileges; and yet truth compels me to say, that upon more than one occasion have I found it difficult to repress my feelings, when abroad I have seen an American citizen traveling with an English passport. In one instance, and the most striking one, the individual was a self-made man, who owed much that he possessed to the very institutions the protection of which, it would seem, he cared but little to claim or glory in.

The excuse, however unworthy it may be, generally offered for this quasi renouncement of allegiance is, that there is more security to the person under the shield of British than American authority abroad. Now, if there may have been heretofore ground for the complaint so often heard, that our Government does not evince that eagerness to protect its citizens which has distinguished, perhaps, the English Government above all others, I hope it exists no longer. There is no reason why we should not maintain our superiority among the nations of the world. With a territory bounded only by the oceans; with prosperity within our borders, and the two great staples of a nation's wealth—corn and gold—at our very doors; with institutions which place man his equal before man, acknowledging no superior but the God over all, it is the mission of the American Government to exact respect for the rights and privileges of the American citizen abroad.

And here I may say, that I have confidence that the distinguished individual now at the head of the Government, for whom, as an American, and more as from my own New England, I feel a pride, will not disappoint the just expectations of his countrymen in this respect, and, indeed, in no other.

The inaugural address of President Pierce, on the point just alluded to, should be printed in letters of gold, and stamped on the back of every American passport; every ship that crosses the deep, and every log-cabin beyond the mountains, should place it upon their wooden walls; and the child at school should be taught that—

“So long as he can discern every star in its place upon that ensign, without wealth to purchase for him preferment, or title to secure for him place, it will be his privilege, as it must be his acknowledged right, to stand unabashed, even in the presence of princes, with the proud consciousness that he is one of a nation of sovereigns; and that he cannot, in legitimate pursuit, wander so far from home that the agent whom he shall leave behind him will not see that no rude hand of power or tyrannical passion is laid upon him with impunity.”

Mr. Speaker, I have, as I conceive, but done my duty in calling the attention of Congress and the country to the subject presented. I think our Government has been tardy in exacting from Spain redress and indemnification for insults and injuries which that Government has never attempted, so far as I can learn, to excuse or even palliate.

If the facts related are true, I put it to the candor of gentlemen if over three years is not long enough to wait for justice to be doled out by Spanish courts?

I have faith in this administration to right the wrongs, if any have been committed, of its predecessors.

It is not for me to advise what course should be pursued in this or similar outrages committed by such Powers as Spain. The glory of these old countries is passing away, and their types and symbols are becoming pale and ineffectual; and the stranger now visits the land of Ferdinand and Isabella as he looks upon a noble ruin in process of decay. Ours is now the land of promise, and the spirit of progress is advancing here, armed with the Ithuriel spear of freedom.

In cases like the one which we now have before us, would not our Government be justified in making reprisals of property wherever it may be found?

It is the only sure way of bringing these almost worn-out Governments to terms.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the House for the indulgence afforded me in being permitted to make these remarks at the present time.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire to be heard on the resolution of the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. WALSH. I object, and give notice that I shall not withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The resolution then goes over, under the rule.

CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON WAYS AND MEANS.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I think that it is the duty of the House to furnish the Committee on Ways and Means with a clerk, under the system heretofore adopted; and therefore move a reconsideration of the vote by which the resolution of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] was rejected on yesterday, so that I may submit an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

Mr. EASTMAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the House refused to adjourn.

The question was then taken, and the vote by which Mr. Houston's resolution was rejected, was reconsidered.

The resolution was then read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means be authorized to employ a clerk, at a compensation not to exceed $1,500 per annum.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move to strike out all of the resolution after the word “resolved,” and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the Committee on Ways and Means be authorized to employ a clerk, during the present session, at a compensation not to exceed four dollars per day, for the time he may be actually employed.

And upon that amendment I call for the previous question.

The call for the previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

Mr. EASTMAN. I demand the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. So far as the Committee on Ways and Means are concerned, I have only to say that they are able to pay for the services of a clerk themselves.

The SPEAKER. Discussion is not in order. The subject is not debatable.

Mr. LETCHER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put, and the motion was not agreed to.

The House was then divided upon the demand for the yeas and nays on the amendment; and they were not ordered.

The question was then put on the adoption of Mr. CAMPBELL's amendment, and it was agreed to.

The question then recurred upon the adoption of the resolution as amended; and being put, it was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. CAMPBELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

BREAKWATER ON BLOCK ISLAND.

Mr. THURSTON. I ask leave to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of building a breakwater on Block Island, in the State of Rhode Island, and that they report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. There is no use in sending such a proposition as that to the Committee on Commerce. I object to it.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made, the resolution goes over under the rule.

PENSION TO WIDOWS OF REVOLUTIONARY SOLDIERS.

Mr. EDMANDS. I give notice that I will on to-morrow, or some subsequent day, ask leave to introduce a bill to allow the widows of officers and privates of the revolutionary army, who are entitled to pensions under the act of February 3, 1853, to draw their pensions from the same date as those entitled to pensions under the act of July 29, 1848.

WILLIAM WOODBURY.

Mr. MACDONALD introduced a joint resolution authorizing the accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust the accounts of William Woodbury, late pension agent at Portland, Maine; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

INVALID PENSIONS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine, introduced a bill, of which previous notice had been given, entitled a bill in relation to invalid pensions; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

EUROPEAN AND NORTH AMERICAN RAILWAY.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine, also introduced a bill making a grant of land to the State of Maine, to aid in the construction of the European and North American Railway within said State; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

MAILS BETWEEN NEW YORK AND LONDON.

Mr. WASHBURN also introduced “a bill for shortening the transit of the mails between New York and London; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

ANDREWS'S REPORT AND SABIN'S REPORT.

Mr. WASHBURN also submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That two thousand additional copies of Andrews's Report on the Colonial and Lake Trade of North America, and the like number of additional copies of Sabin's Report on the Fisheries, be printed for the use of the members of the House of Representatives.

CUSTOM-HOUSE AT BELFAST.

Mr. FARLEY offered a resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be directed to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation for the erection of a custom-house in the Belfast collection district, in the State of Maine.

Mr. LETCHER. I propose to debate that resolution.

Mr. FARLEY. It is simply a resolution of inquiry.

Mr. LETCHER. I have heard of custom-houses before, and I cannot withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The resolution lies over, under the rule. If there are no further resolutions from the State of Maine, the States have all been called through.

COMMUNICATIONS FROM STATE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. HOUSTON. Although it is late, I move—
The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Alabama will allow the Chair, he will present to the House a communication from the State Department.

Mr. HOUSTON. I yield for that purpose.
The SPEAKER then presented the communication from the Department of State, in obedience to the twentieth section of the act entitled "An act legalizing and making appropriations for such necessary objects as have usually been included in the general appropriation bills without authority of law, and to fix and provide for certain incidental expenses of the Departments and offices of the Government, and for other purposes," approved the 26th of August, 1842; and the act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of Government, for the year 1836, (section 2.)

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, moved that the communication be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and be printed; which motion was agreed to.

CODIFICATION OF REVENUE LAWS.

Mr. CURTIS. Is it in order to make a motion to proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. CURTIS. Then I make the motion.

The question was put, and the motion was agreed to.

Joint resolution (No. 1.) from the Senate, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the expenses of codifying and revising the revenue laws, was then taken up from the Speaker's table, and read the first and second time by its title.

Mr. CURTIS. I will state the object of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules this resolution must go to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, unless the rules be dispensed with by unanimous consent.

Mr. CURTIS. The individual selected for the work of codifying and revising the revenue laws has performed a considerable portion of the duties assigned him. At the last session of Congress, when this office was created, a bill passed both Houses making an appropriation for the services to be performed. That bill, unfortunately, in some way, was lost, and does not appear in the printed laws. My object is to carry out the provision passed at the last session making the appropriation, in compliance with the act which created the office, and under which the work has been commenced and nearly completed.

Mr. LETCHER. How much will it cost?

Mr. CURTIS. The amount named in the resolution is ten thousand dollars.

Mr. LETCHER. How much more will it take?

Mr. CURTIS. I think the amount required will be about that sum—not any more. It is supposed that the work will be finished by the first of April next.

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House that this resolution shall be considered at this time?

Mr. WHEELER. I object.

Mr. CURTIS. The resolution merely provides for an omission made at the last session of Congress. I hope that the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds, if objection be made, that the resolution, under the rules of the House, cannot be considered at this time, but must first go to the Committee of the Whole. Is it the pleasure of the House that the bill should be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire that the House would indulge me in the suspension of the rules, that we may go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of entering upon and referring the President's message. I do not suppose that we shall remain long in session this evening; but it is well known to those who have served long here, that it is important we should go into the Committee of the Whole early in the session, and get organized there for business hereafter. I therefore make the motion that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. MEACHAM. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to; and

The House adjourned till to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 15, 1853.

Prayer by the Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

On motion by Mr. JAMES, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourns to-day, it adjourn to meet on Monday next at twelve o'clock.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. SEWARD. I present the memorial of John C. Fr. Salomon, who states that he has invented an engine to be worked by carbonic acid gas, which he believes will supersede the use of steam. He desires that it may be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

It was so referred.

Mr. SEWARD. I also present the petition of William Emmons, the son and representative of Uri Emmons, the inventor of a planing machine, patented in the year 1829, praying an extension of the patent, which he desires may be referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

It was so referred.

Mr. MASON presented the memorial of the Alexandria, Loudon, and Hampshire Railroad Company, praying permission to extend their railroad into the city of Washington, and the aid of Congress in the construction of a bridge over the Potomac for that purpose; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, the petition of the heirs of James Monroe, praying compensation for revolutionary services; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. HUNTER presented additional documents in the case of John K. Cooke; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Also, a memorial of the Petersburg volunteers, praying the payment of a balance due them for services in the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SEBASTIAN presented the petition of the Mississippi, Ouachita, and Red River Railroad Company, praying a grant of land, and the right of way, to aid in the construction of a railway from the Mississippi to the Red river, above the Raft; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BRIGHT presented the petition of the heirs of the late Colonel George Gibson, praying compensation for revolutionary services; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. PEARCE presented the memorial of Philip F. Voorhees, praying allowance for expenses incurred in carrying public ministers of the United States to Siam, and other places in the East Indies, and elsewhere; which, with the papers on the same subject, now on the files of the Senate, was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. MASON, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of Commodore Ap C. Jones be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Joseph Mitchell be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

On motion by Mr. PRATT, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of the Pioneer Manufacturing Company, of Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, be taken from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

On motion by Mr. PRATT, it was Ordered, That the petition of Samuel Crapin be taken from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion by Mr. PEARCE, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of the representatives of Major John Baptiste Lomagne be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion by Mr. BELL, it was Ordered, That the memorial and accompanying papers in the case of Phineas M. Nightingale, heir of General Nathaniel Greene, be taken from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion by Mr. WALKER, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Robert Grignon, praying payment of a sum of money due him under a treaty with the Menomonee Indians, and the petition of Elias A. Brainard, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, for the purpose of being presented in the House of Representatives.

On motion by Mr. FOOT, it was Ordered, That the petition of Benjamin S. Roberts, an officer in the Army of the United States, praying indemnity for losses sustained during the war with Mexico, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

On motion by Mr. STUART, it was Ordered, That the petition of John M. Gilbert be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

On motion by Mr. STUART, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of D. J. Campau, in behalf of his father, Joseph Campau, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

On motion by Mr. STUART, it was Ordered, That the petition of Victor Morass be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

On motion by Mr. STUART, it was Ordered, That the petition of William A. Burt be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

On motion by Mr. STUART, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of Samuel Spalding, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Benjamin S. Roberts be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

On motion by Mr. PEARCE, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Catharine M. Weaver be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion by Mr. BADGER, it was Ordered, That the documents in regard to the claim of Purser Francis B. Stockton be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

On motion by Mr. HUNTER, it was Ordered, That the memorial of certain clerks in the Second Auditor's office, praying additional compensation, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. SEWARD gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill providing for the construction of a railroad through the territories of the United States, between the Atlantic and Pacific States.

Mr. EVERETT gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to authorize and empower the Secretary of the Interior to provide necessary and permanent accommodations for the courts of the United States and their officers in the district of Massachusetts.

Mr. HAMLIN gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to provide for the ascertainment and satisfaction of the claims of American citizens for spoils committed by the French prior to the year 1801.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. FOOT, according to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill explanatory of "An act for the relief of Benjamin S. Roberts," which was read a first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. EVERETT, according to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to increase the compensation of the district judge of the United States for the district of Massachusetts; which was read a first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HAMLIN, according to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill for the relief of Ira Baldwin; which was read a first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SUMNER, according to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to provide for the execution, by the courts of the United States, of commissions to take testimony issuing from the courts of justice of friendly nations; which was read a first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SUMNER asked and obtained unanimous consent to introduce a joint resolution for the relief of the owners of the brig Kate Boyd; which was read a first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

COMMERCE IN THE PACIFIC.

Mr. GWIN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire and report on the general condition of the commerce of the United States carried on upon the Pacific ocean, and whether any legislative action is necessary for the security and promotion of that important national interest.

REFERENCE OF THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. HUNTER. I move that so much of the President's message as relates to the finances be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. I move that so much of the President's message as relates to naval affairs be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I move that so much of the President's message as relates to the public lands be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that so much of the President's message as relates to roads and canals be referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move that so much of the President's message as relates to commerce, and the improvement of lakes, harbors, and rivers, be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MASON. I move that so much of the President's message as relates to our foreign relations be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. In the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, I move that so much of the President's message as relates to military affairs be referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON. In the absence of the chairman of the Committee on the Territories, I move that so much of the President's message as relates to our Territories be referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN. I move that so much of the President's message as relates to Indian affairs be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. In the absence of the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, I move that so much of the President's message as relates to the judicial system of the United States be referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ADAMS. In the absence of the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, I move that so much of the President's message as relates to the post office and post roads be referred to that committee.

The motion was agreed to.

CALIFORNIA JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

Mr. GWIN. According to previous notice, I ask leave to introduce a bill concerning the district courts of the United States in California. I wish, Mr. President, to make a statement in regard to the bill. It is already provided by law that California shall be divided into two judicial districts, and have two district judges. The object of this bill is to require the President to appoint a judge for the southern district, and to permit the two judges to alternate with each other. On the death of the judge of the southern district, some years ago, the judge of the northern district was required to discharge the duties of judge of both districts, a duty which he finds it impossible to perform, which makes it of great importance to pass this bill at once. The President of the United States has now the power to appoint a district judge for the southern district, but there is no legal authority for the judges to alternate. We have but one judge now in the State, and in case of his sickness or inability to discharge his duties, the whole business of the district courts in the State would be suspended. I hope, therefore, as the bill has been drawn up by the Attorney General, there will be no objection to its passage at once.

The bill was read a first and second time, and considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. It is as follows:

A BILL concerning the District Courts of the United States in California.

Be it enacted, &c., That there shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, a district judge for the southern judicial district heretofore established in the State of California, and that the sessions of the district court at San José, Stockton, and Sacramento are hereby abolished; and in case of the sickness or other inability of the district judge of the southern district of California, to hold the terms of the district court at the places prescribed by law, or at either of them, it shall be lawful for the district judge of the northern district of California to hold the said sessions of the district court for the southern district, or any of them; and in case the district court for the northern judicial district of California shall, from sickness or other cause, be unable to hold the sessions of the district court for the northern district of California, at the times and places appointed by law, or either of them, it shall and may be lawful for the district judge for the southern district of California to hold said sessions of the district court for the northern district of California, or any or either of them.

Mr. PETTIT. I certainly do not wish to defeat the intention of the Senator from California, but it seems to me that a bill of the importance which this is, creating, in fact, a new judicial circuit, creating a new officer, a new judge, should at least go through the form of a reference to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the Senator will not persist in his motion to refer the bill. It is important to my State to have another judge appointed without delay. There are now only three members of the Judiciary Committee in this city; and I do not know when the others will get here. I intended to refer the bill to the Committee on the Judiciary, and to ask that it should be immediately reported back to the Senate; and I have been waiting a week for a quorum of the committee to be in attendance in the Senate, before I presented this bill; but on account of the absence of so many members, its reference must delay our action. It has been drawn up by the Attorney General, and does not create a new officer, as the Senator supposes, because the southern judgeship was created more than three years ago. It is notorious that Judge Hoffman cannot discharge the duties of judge of both districts. The Attorney General, to whom the subject was referred for examination, is convinced that he cannot discharge the duties of both. We want an additional judge at once, that the intelligence may go to California by the mail of the 20th instant. There is a delay of justice for the want of a judge of the southern district that should not be permitted. I will not urge the bill, if the Senator persists in his motion; but I hope he, as a member of the Judiciary Committee, will act at once, and have the bill reported back without delay, if it is referred to his committee.

Mr. PETTIT. I am certainly unwilling to disoblige the Senator, but I do really think the bill ought to be referred to the Judiciary Committee. Upon its face it does create a new judgeship—a new judge. The State may have heretofore been divided into a northern and southern district, but all the duties of both districts have been reposed in one judge. I think I am not going out of the way in asking that the bill should be referred to the Judiciary Committee. I make the motion that it be so referred.

The motion to refer was agreed to.

CALIFORNIA AND CHINA STEAM LINE.

Mr. GWIN introduced the following bill:

A BILL to establish a line of steamships from San Francisco, via the Sandwich Islands, to Shanghai, in China.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, directed to enter into a contract for the term of five years, for a sum not exceeding $—, with such person or persons as may offer sufficient and satisfactory security, after due public notice, for the transportation of the United States mails upon the best terms for the United States, semi-monthly, from San Francisco, via the Sandwich Islands, to Shanghai, in China, and back, in steam vessels of not less than two thousand tons burden, of the best form of construction, adapted to the navigation of the Pacific ocean; the same to be ready in the shortest possible time.

EXPLANATION.

Mr. CHASE. Mr. President, I submitted, yesterday, a resolution directing the Committee on Roads and Canals to inquire into the expediency of constructing a railroad from the western limits of one of the existing States to the eastern line of California. I perceive that some of the journals of the day have the word "Florida" in place of "California." It is probable that the word "Florida" was uttered; and I find that the resolution, as it lies on the table, and as printed in some of the papers, has that word inserted instead of "California." I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to have the necessary correction made on the Journal.

The PRESIDENT. That correction will be made. The resolution of the Senator from Ohio will now come up in its regular order.

Mr. CHASE. I ask that it may lie on the table for the present.

The PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, that course will be pursued.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. GWIN, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened.

ELECTION OF OFFICERS OF THE SENATE.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the following rule be adopted, and numbered the 52d rule of the Senate, to wit:

In all cases of election by the Senate of its officers, the vote shall be taken viva voce.

Mr. BRODHEAD expressed his desire that the rule should be further amended so as to provide that the Executive sessions of the Senate be open to the public.

Mr. DODGE expressed his concurrence with the Senator from Pennsylvania; but he preferred that the propositions should be separate and distinct.

Mr. BRODHEAD did not persist in his amendment.

Mr. CHASE objected to the consideration of the resolution at this time.

It therefore lies over under the rules.

CLERKS TO COMMITTEES.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, moved that the Committee on Public Lands be authorized to employ a clerk.

Mr. BRIGHT said: The Senate was aware that, in consequence of the onerous duties which fourteen committees of the Senate have to perform, they were now constituted of six Senators each, instead of five as heretofore, and it must be obvious that the dispatch of public business required that those committees should each have the aid of a clerk; he moved, therefore, so to amend the motion as to authorize those fourteen committees each to employ a clerk.

The amendment was agreed to, and the motion, as amended, was adopted. It was, therefore,

Ordered, That each of the several committees, consisting of six members, be authorized to employ a clerk.

The Senate then adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 15, 1853.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by the Rev. HENRY SLICKER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDERS OF THE DAY.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the orders of the day, the first business being the call of committees for reports.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported a bill making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1855; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

MILITARY ACADEMY BILL.

Mr. HOUSTON, from the same committee, reported a bill making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy during the year ending June 30, 1855; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. DAWSON, from the Committee on Agriculture, to which was referred the bill of the House, No. 37, to encourage agriculture and all other branches of industry, by granting to every person who is the head of a family one hundred and sixty acres of land out of the public domain, upon condition of occupancy and cultivation of the same for the period therein specified, reported back the same without amendment.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. DAWSON. I move that the bill be made the special order for the second Tuesday in February next.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is it proposed to make that bill a special order?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HOUSTON. For what day?

The SPEAKER. The second Tuesday in February.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object to its being made a special order. It is out of order to make such a motion without a suspension of the rules.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Have not a majority of the House a right to make this bill a special order?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. CLINGMAN. It can do so by a suspension of the rules; but you cannot suspend the rules to-day.

Mr. JONES. I have no doubt that two thirds of the House are in favor of the suspension of the rules, in order to make that bill a special order, and I will make that motion.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Do I understand the Chair to decide that the House has no right to make a special order?

The Chair decides no such thing; but that it was not in order to make a motion of that kind at this time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will it be in order at any time?

The SPEAKER. It will, if the rules be suspended.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then I move to suspend the rules for the purpose.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order at this time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HAVEN. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. We can suspend the rules on Monday.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I withdraw the appeal, and also the motion, to make the bill a special order.

ANNUAL REPORT OF THE SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Mr. MURRAY, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the resolution providing for the printing of fifteen thousand extra copies of the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the state of the finances, reported that the printing of each number would cost thirteen and a half cents, and that it is expedient that that number should be printed. The committee recommend that the resolution do pass.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution.

Mr. HOUSTON. There was no resolution. I made a motion to print extra copies, and that motion was referred to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The following is the order of the House on the subject:

Ordered, That it be referred to the Committee on Printing, to inquire into the expediency of printing fifteen thousand extra copies of the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the state of the finances."

Upon what is the House to vote?

Mr. MURRAY. On the report, I presume.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I suppose the question will be upon the adoption of the report of the committee.

Mr. MURRAY. To obviate the difficulty, I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That fifteen thousand extra copies of the annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury on the state of the finances be printed for the use of the House.

The question was taken on the resolution, and it was agreed to.

The SPEAKER then proceeded to call the States for petitions, commencing with the State of Maine.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. MEACHAM gave notice of his intention to-morrow, or on some future day, to introduce a bill to repay to the State of Vermont the money which was expended by her during the war of the Revolution.

Also, a bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the fourth installment of the public money that was ordered by the law of June, 1836.

PURCHASE OF MOUNT VERNON.

Mr. SAGE. I hold in my hand a joint resolution, of which previous notice has been given, which I hope and believe will receive the favorable consideration and action both of the committee to which I propose to refer it, and of this House. The signs of mourning around this Hall for the loss of an eminent and patriotic citizen, make this a fitting occasion to introduce this resolution, as it relates to the purchase of the home and sepulcher of the Father of his Country. It is a joint resolution, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior, provided he first obtains the consent of the State of Virginia, to contract with the proprietor or proprietors for the purchase of the estate of Mount Vernon.

The joint resolution was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Do you want the estate for an arsenal, a fort, or what?

Mr. SAGE. I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I move to lay the joint resolution on the table.

Mr. SAGE. Oh, I hope not.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I ask that the joint resolution may be read.

The Clerk read the joint resolution. It provides that the Secretary of the Interior, (provided he shall first obtain the consent of the State of Virginia,) be, and he is hereby, authorized to contract with the proprietor, or proprietors, of the estate of Mount Vernon, for the purchase of the same for the use of the United States, on such terms as he may deem just and expedient; and that the sum he shall agree to pay for said estate shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. SAGE. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to lay upon the table.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DRUM. I would inquire of the Chair, whether the motion is to lay the whole subject upon the table, or merely the motion of reference?

The SPEAKER. The motion, as the Chair understands, is to lay the whole subject upon the table.

The question was then taken, and the motion to lay upon the table was disagreed to—yeas 96, nays 103; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Banks, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Benton, Bissell, Bocock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Brooks, Caskie, Churchwell, Clingman, Cobb, Colquhoun, Cox, Craig, Thomas Davis, Dawson, De Witt, Disney, Dowdell, Dunham, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmundson, Elliott, Ellison, Ewing, Faulkner, Fuller, Giddings, Goode, Green, Grow, Sampson W. So the motion to lay upon the table was disagreed to.

Previous to the announcement of the above vote,

Mr. WALSH said: As this seems to be a proposition to allow some degenerate individual to speculate in the sacred ashes of the Father of his Country, I change my vote from "no" to "aye."

Mr. SAGE. I withdraw my motion to refer the joint resolution to the Committee on Ways and Means, and move its reference to a select committee. I do so, because I noticed that a majority of the members of the Committee on Ways and Means voted in favor of laying it upon the table, very much to my surprise and disappointment.

Mr. HOUSTON. I was just about to suggest to the gentleman that the Committee on Ways and Means was not the appropriate committee to which to refer his proposition. It should rather be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which is also one of the standing committees of the House. I submit the motion to so refer it.

Mr. JONES. It should be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, in my judgment.

Mr. BAYLY. I move to refer it to the Committee on Military Affairs. I know of no authority in this Government to buy land except for dockyards, arsenals, and the like purposes, and, unless that property is to be applied in that manner, I do not know how we can purchase it.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield the floor to me a moment that I may ask him a question?

Mr. BAYLY. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would inquire of the gentleman whether he did not report and vote for a bill in favor of paying the expenses of the filibusters to bring them here from Spain; and where, if he cannot find the power in the Constitution to purchase this land, he found the power to pay those expenses?

Mr. BAYLY. I will refer the gentleman to the Congressional Globe, where he will find from whence that power was derived.

Mr. BISSELL. I propose that the resolution be discussed before it is passed. I do not know of how many acres this estate consists.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield to me for one minute?

Mr. BISSELL. I have but a single word further, and then the gentleman can have the floor altogether.

Mr. SKELTON. I rise to a question of order. Does not the resolution, debate arising, go over?

The SPEAKER. It does not. It is a joint resolution, and in the nature of a bill, and the motion now is to refer it, which motion is debatable.

Mr. BISSELL. The proposition is to direct the Secretary of the Interior to purchase the Mount Vernon estate, and to take the money from the Treasury to pay for it. Of how many acres does that estate consist? There are not ten members in this House who can tell me. Formerly it consisted of six or seven thousand acres, and I do not know but that it consists of as many now. What are we going to do with six or seven thousand acres of land on the Potomac, if purchased under this resolution? Who is going to take care of it? What disposition is to be made of it? Under whose control is it to be? If this thing is to be done—and I do not know that the American people are averse to the purchase of the ground in which repose the remains of Washington—let it be done regularly; let us understand what we are about. Let us know how many acres we are purchasing; more than that, let us know how much we are to pay for it. I am opposed to the resolution in toto; and if it is to be referred, I hope that it will go to that committee which will be the least likely to carry out the intention of the mover of the resolution.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I desire to ask my friend from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] to state to the House the feeling of Virginia with respect to yielding her jurisdiction to that property.

Mr. BAYLY. Mr. Speaker, I can answer for Virginia, with great confidence, that she will not cede her jurisdiction over any part of her soil to the General Government, except for those purposes which the Constitution provides for; and those purposes are defined in the Constitution. I stand with great confidence on the declaration that she heretofore refused, and that she will continue to refuse, to surrender that jurisdiction.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. Then it seems to me that it is unnecessary to legislate further on the subject.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I doubt very much whether the honorable gentleman from the State of Virginia, [Mr. BAYLY], is authorized to speak for that Commonwealth. It may be that the interests of Virginia are under his control, and that he is the exclusive guardian of her rights.

Mr. BAYLY. Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me—

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am aware, sir, that whenever there is any controversy in this House in relation to any matter of office affecting Virginia, that the gentleman [Mr. BAYLY] is the exponent of her rights; but I may be allowed to question his authority to speak for her. Now, sir, as to this resolution—if it be true, as the gentleman says it is, that Virginia will not cede her rights to the property in question, there is no harm in it, because without that right there is no authority given by the resolution to make the purchase.

Mr. BAYLY. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] says that I have no right to speak for Virginia; that is unquestionably true. But I ask the gentleman in return, if her united delegation has not the right to speak for her? And they have spoken for her, by voting, every one of them, to lay that resolution on the table.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Very well. Still, Mr. Speaker, I do not admit the position of the gentleman, [Mr. BAYLY], that the united delegation of Virginia in this House can control that question. It strikes me that it is vested in her legislative power—in the Legislature of her State—in her power as a sovereign State of this Union. And I doubt very much whether she has ever transferred to her entire delegation any authority on this subject. Except the gentleman will produce resolutions from his State Legislature, instructing the delegation to oppose any proposition of this kind, I cannot admit the position he has assumed.

Mr. LETCHER. Will the gentleman [Mr. CAMPBELL] allow me to interrupt him? If the delegation from Virginia on this floor are not authorized to speak for her, certainly her Legislature is, and that Legislature has repeatedly spoken, and said, in most decided terms, that she will not cede her jurisdiction for such a purpose.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is something more like meeting the question than the answer given by the other gentleman, [Mr. BAYLY].

Mr. GIDDINGS. I wish to inquire whether, if you get the land from Virginia, it is the intention to apply the Wilmot proviso to it?

Mr. CAMPBELL. In reply to my colleague, [Mr. GIDDINGS], I will simply say this, that I have understood, from some intimations which have been thrown out, that it is probable that the Union may be endangered soon again, and I do not know any better territory on which it can be saved again, if necessary, than at Mount Vernon.

The gentleman from Virginia wishes to propound a question, and I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. BAYLY. I wish to remind the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CAMPBELL], who said that my colleague [Mr. LETCHER] assigned a better reason than I did, that I assigned precisely the same reason that he did.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I did not understand the gentleman to refer at all to any action of the State Legislature of Virginia upon the point. He confined his response to the fact that her united delegation here said thus and so upon the question.

One word more, and I am through. This resolution provides that the Secretary of the Interior may make this purchase if the State of Virginia is willing to cede her jurisdiction over it. If it be true that the State of Virginia does not intend to cede her jurisdiction of this territory, as a matter of course there can no difficulty arise out of the passage of this resolution. But, inasmuch as it is a matter of complaint the world over, that the tomb of Washington is neglected, that the very ground he once beautified with his own hand is growing up with brambles and bushes, it seems to me that fact of itself is an appeal to the State of Virginia, and to the National Legislature, in favor of taking some steps for the purpose of having it preserved.

Mr. YATES. Is an amendment now in order? The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. YATES. I wish to have the resolution amended before it is referred to a committee, as I understand from the terms of the resolution the committee is to inquire into the expediency of making this purchase, provided the assent of the State of Virginia can be obtained. I desire to have it so amended, so as to strike out the words "that the consent of Virginia can be obtained."

This is not public property, but private. Let us buy the property first. It belongs to the Union. The fame of Washington belongs to his country. Let us buy the property first, and then pay Virginia for her jurisdiction. When we have purchased the property, and it is ours, there is too much patriotism in the "Old Dominion" to refuse to cede jurisdiction to the United States. I want to see Mount Vernon the spot where every American can pay his pilgrimage, and pay his devotion to the character and services of the illustrious Father of his Country.

I do not agree with my colleague, [Mr. BISSELL.] I do not care whether there is a thousand, or four thousand, or a million of acres. It is not a question of cost merely, but of sacred obligation—of justice to the memory of the beloved Washington. His is a name dear to every American heart; and I would have money poured out freely, yea, if necessary, lavishly, to testify our high admiration and lasting gratitude for his exalted character and illustrious services.

Then, sir, if it were in order, I would move to strike out that portion of the resolution which provides that the consent of the State of Virginia is first to be obtained.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am opposed to the resolution, as my vote indicated; and no amendment can place it in such a shape that I can give it my consent. My colleague from the State of Illinois [Mr. YATES] is in favor of pouring out the money of the people very lavishly for this purpose. I expect two years hence, when canvassing our State, to hear my colleague [Mr. YATES] refer to this matter as a matter of a prodigality on the part of a Democratic Congress. I have heard of such things before. They say they want to buy Mount Vernon, that American citizens may make a pilgrimage there. It is Government property.

Suppose you buy this property? Does not the same reason exist for buying the site of the battlefields upon which your liberties were won? Is there not the same reason for buying the residences of the Presidents of the United States, whose memories are deeply cherished by the American people?

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I desire to ask respectfully of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON], one question, and that is, whether he did not vote for the appropriation of money to pay for the equestrian statue of General Jackson?

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not remember. Mr. CAMPBELL. I think he did. [Laughter.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I do not see the point of the inquiry. I am not discussing the question of constitutional power, but the question of expediency, and I ask if there is not the same reason for purchasing some of these other places of which I have spoken, the residences of men whose names are immortal in our history—of men who gave to the world the Declaration of Independence. If there is a reason for purchasing Mount Vernon, the same reason will hold good for purchasing Monticello; and when we embark in enterprises of this kind, I do not know where we are to stop. I say to gentlemen that I am opposed to this thing at the outset; and if it gets through this House, it will be after every impediment that I, for one, can throw in the way of its passage. I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That question has already been decided. We have voted once upon a motion to lay the resolution upon the table.

The SPEAKER. It is in order to make the motion again; for since the motion to lay the resolution upon the table was made and voted upon by the House, action has been had upon the resolution.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion.

Mr. TAYLOR. I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] to withdraw the motion he has made for a moment, and I will renew it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Has not the motion of reference been changed since first it was made?

The SPEAKER. The motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Ways and Means has been withdrawn, and a motion made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SAGE] to refer it to a select committee, and then several other motions to refer to different committees have been made.

Mr. CULLOM. Has there been action by the House?

The SPEAKER. That of itself is action. We have had debate upon the propositions to refer.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will withdraw, for the present, my motion to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not intend to detain the House but a moment upon a proposition which I think is so important. It is due to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SAGE] who moved in this matter, to grant him the reference of the subject to a select committee, or some one of the standing committees of the House, to make the necessary inquiries in regard to it. If the committee report against it, and the House think proper to vote against the proposition hereafter, it can be easily done. The vote of the House this morning is an evidence of the public sentiment in regard to this matter; and the indications given for many years by the people, in every section of the country, have attracted the public attention towards the question of purchasing the Mount Vernon estate, in some form or other, to preserve it as the property of the Union. I am not, for one, in favor of an extravagant expenditure for this object.

It was the opinion of gentlemen of all political parties with whom I have served here, when we were about to establish, at the West, a Military Asylum for aged soldiers who had worn out their lives in the public service, that another should be established at Mount Vernon; but owing to a difference of opinion, or the extravagant price asked for the estate, or for some other reason, the Military Asylum selected for this neighborhood was located north of this city, and not at Mount Vernon. The other has been located in the western country.

The inquiry proposed by this resolution can certainly do no one any injury; and the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SAGE], who has proposed it, has done himself honor. Every member of this House, and every citizen of the country, who goes to Mount Vernon—who makes the pilgrimage of patriotism and pleasure to the home of the Father of his Country, is at once struck with the impression that there is an absolute and imperious necessity that the tomb of Washington, and at least a small portion of the grounds adjoining, should be made the property of the nation; that it should be preserved from dilapidation, and made free of access to every citizen who chooses to visit it. It is now the private property, I understand, of a gentleman by the name of Washington; but you, Mr. Speaker, know, and every member of this House knows, that among the citizens of the United States who visit this metropolis, thousands go to Mount Vernon to look upon the home of that great patriot—the Father of his Country—whose memory we all love, reverence, and venerate as that of the man who was chiefly instrumental in building up our independence and freedom.

Sir, no private citizen can afford to incur the expense to keep these grounds and buildings in such a state of preservation as the public demand. Under the existing state of things, the large bodies of people coming to the metropolis of the nation, who weekly and tri-weekly go to view the last resting-place of Washington, are kindly permitted access by the private proprietor; but every gentleman must see how desirable it is that this property should be made the property of the nation.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask the gentleman from Ohio to give way for a moment.

Mr. TAYLOR. In accordance with my promise to the gentleman from Illinois, I now make a motion which I hope will not prevail. I move that the resolution do lie upon the table.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. I have understood—and I wish to know whether my information is correct—that the present proprietor of Mount Vernon makes it a matter of charge to the individuals visiting there.

Mr. SAGE. That is what we want to obviate.

Mr. TAYLOR. In reply to the gentleman from Illinois, I can only say that I have gone there myself several times within the last two or three years, and many of the members of this House have been there, without charge. But, Mr. Speaker, if there be any charge upon the part of the private proprietor for visiting this property, that is still another reason for the passage of this or some similar resolution, which shall transfer it to the possession of the public. Let it be purchased by the Government, including one hundred or one hundred and fifty acres of land, then let the military arsenal or asylum in this neighborhood be sold or abandoned, and the home of Washington secured to the nation for the purpose of a military asylum, or refuge for old soldiers, who have worn out their lives in the defense of their country. Some arrangement of this kind seems to be necessary, in order that there may be a judicious and economical expenditure for the purchase of this property, which, as I before remarked, must be done to prevent it from dilapidation and decay.

But, sir, I do not wish to detain the House in this matter, and I therefore now renew the motion to lay the resolution upon the table, although I hope the motion will not prevail, but that the resolution will go to a select committee.

Mr. BISSELL. I ask the gentleman to withdraw the motion for a moment.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will withdraw it, with the consent of the gentleman's colleague, [Mr. RICHARDSON.]

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will yield in favor of my colleague.

Mr. BISSELL. I desire to say a word to my colleague over the way, [Mr. YATES] who expressed his willingness to be very lavish in disposing of the people's money for the attainment of this object. Sir, we all know that it is not at all uncommon to find individuals who are ready to be very lavish of other people's money; but, for my own part, I will never vote for any such proposition as that contained in this resolution. I wish it to be understood, however, that I do not declare it to be my purpose to vote against all propositions that may be made for the purchase of a portion of the grounds at Mount Vernon. If a proper bill, or joint resolution, with such restrictions as shall guard the people's treasure, and put it out of the power of the Secretary of the Interior, or anybody else, to lavish "millions," as my colleague has it, I will support it with hearty good will. The proposition, however, as it now stands, is monstrous; for it puts it within the power of one man to pay just such price as he may think proper for the estate of Mount Vernon—an estate of almost illimitable extent—and for which, to my certain knowledge, the proprietor has heretofore asked, at least, half a million of dollars. I will not detain the House by any further remarks. I promised to renew the motion to lay the resolution on the table, and I now make that motion.

Mr. SAGE. I ask my friend from Illinois to withdraw that motion for a moment. I will not detain the House long.

Mr. BISSELL. I withdraw it.

Mr. SAGE. In introducing this resolution, I had no idea that this discussion would have arisen this morning, nor had I any motives other than those of the highest respect for the memory of Washington. I am aware that there has been an unwillingness on the part of the Legislature of Virginia to cede her jurisdiction over this place; but I had hoped that experience and the lapse of time would have modified that feeling. Sir, the people of the State I have the honor in part to represent here—the State of New York—have shown their love for the memory of the Father of his Country by the acts of their Legislature, and by purchasing his headquarters at Newburg; and I believe that the resolution which has been offered here this morning is not only in accordance with the feelings of the people of the State of New York, but with those of nineteen twentieths of the people of the United States. I evinced no unwillingness to have this matter referred either to a standing committee or a select committee, so as to give them ample opportunity of investigating it, and of reporting understandingly to the House, so that we may act upon it understandingly.

But some gentleman intimated that there was to be great extravagance indulged in in this matter. Sir, I am one of the minority, and on their part I deny the existence of any such feeling. If gentlemen will reflect a little, I think they will find that votes have been given in this House, and are on record here, exhibiting such extravagance for objects far less worthy, and far less interesting to the public than that embraced in this resolution. I hope the motion to refer to a select committee will prevail.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman from New York allow me to ask him a question? His allusion to extravagance, in the manner in which he spoke of it, appeared to me to be a direct attack upon me as having voted for extravagant expenditures.

Mr. SAGE. I did not intend to refer to the gentleman from Illinois at all.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is sufficient.

Mr. SAGE. I intended, after finishing the remarks I last made, to have called for the previous question. I ask the previous question now.

Mr. YATES. I hope the gentleman from New York will withdraw the call for the previous question. I merely wish to say a single word.

Mr. SAGE. I will withdraw it for the accommodation of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. I do not wish to take up much of the time of the House. I wish to reply to the argument which my colleagues [Messrs. BISSELL and RICHARDSON] make with regard to the cost of this matter; and I wish to say to them that I have too much confidence, and too high a regard for the patriotism of my constituents, to believe that they would censure me for any vote that I may give upon this question. I rely upon their patriotism and good sense, as every pure-minded representative ought to do. When I used the word "lavish," I did not advocate an unreasonable and inordinate expenditure of the public moneys—by no means. When I use that word, I mean to say that we should expend this money freely, liberally, lavishly, if necessary, by way of paying our respect to the memory of the illustrious Washington. That is the object, sir, and I know my constituents, and the constituents of my colleagues, too well to believe that they would find fault with them for voting a liberal sum of money for the purchase of Mount Vernon. As I have already stated, the fame of Washington is the property of his country, and there is too much patriotism in the hearts of the American people to be penurious or parsimonious upon a subject of this kind. That is all I have to say upon the subject. I now renew the demand for the previous question.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I would suggest to my friend from New York, [Mr. SAGE,] whether it would not be better for him to modify his resolution, and make it one of inquiry, rather than a direction?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] demanded the previous question.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I thought the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] was under a pledge to renew the motion made by his colleague to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. SAGE. He was, but has kindly consented to withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois withdraw the demand for the previous question?

Mr. YATES. I do.

Mr. BAYLY. You have no right to do it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. WASHBURN] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I hold in my hand an amendment, which I think will meet the views of the gentleman from Maine.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Maine yield the floor?

Mr. WASHBURN. I yield the floor for a minute to my friend from North Carolina, to read his proposition.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I would suggest, then, the following amendment: That — Committee be instructed to inquire into the expediency of purchasing the estate of Mount Vernon, to be used in such a manner as may be consistent with the public interest and a due regard for the memory of George Washington.

Mr. SAGE. I accept that modification. I have no wish but a vote of inquiry. And I will fill the blank with "a select committee of five."

The SPEAKER. The original resolution was a joint resolution, but this is a simple resolution. The modification can only be made, therefore, by unanimous consent.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I object.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I hope, then, that this resolution will be referred to one of the committees that have been suggested. I should prefer very much to vote for it as modified, and I had hoped there would be a unanimous consent for its modification. I think, sir, that it is reasonable. I think it is due to ourselves that some steps should be taken; that the time has come when it belongs to the nation to take some steps for the purchase of Mount Vernon. I do not imagine it is going to lead to any very great extravagance. I do not imagine it would be a dangerous precedent.

There are some questions upon which, perhaps, we are not called upon or required to look very carefully, or with a very scrutinizing eye, into the Constitution.

I agree with what Madison once said when Louisiana was obtained, that the first thing was to obtain Louisiana, and then look into the Constitution afterwards. There are sometimes properties that choose, and are not chosen; and it seems to me that this is a case of that kind. We are not required to discuss the question of power, and it is well not to discuss it. Sir, I have no question as to the power—the power within the spirit of the Constitution. Certainly we have as much right to do this, as we had to appropriate money a year ago for the equestrian statue of General Jackson. I do not remember that the question of constitutional power was raised then by the gentleman from Virginia. As I said before, I do not think that this can be drawn into a precedent. We have but one Father of the Country—but one who was "first in war, first in peace, first in the hearts of his countrymen." I hope, therefore, that this resolution will be referred to a select committee, although I do not like the joint resolution in its present form. I now demand the previous question.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I move to lay the joint resolution upon the table.

Mr. DISNEY. I rise to a privileged question. We have had here to-day a very pretty exhibition of generous sympathy and large patriotism, and I take it for granted that, at least to some extent, some gentlemen—

The SPEAKER, (interrupting.) The gentleman from Ohio is aware that a demand is made for the previous question, and that a motion has been also made to lay the joint resolution on the table; debate is, therefore, out of order.

Mr. DISNEY. I understand that, and I was only about to add that, supposing gentlemen at this time feel some disposition to go to business, in order to give them an opportunity of so doing, I move that we now proceed to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table, the morning hour having expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. Can my colleague get the floor at this time to make that motion?

The SPEAKER. All the three propositions pending are privileged in their nature; but, according to the rules of the House, the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DISNEY] is in order at any time.

The question was then taken on Mr. DISNEY's motion, and it was agreed to; and the House proceeded to the business on the Speaker's table.

DISBURSEMENT OF THE SENATE'S CONTINGENT FUND.

The following bill from the Senate was taken up from the Speaker's table and read a first and second time by its title:

"A bill to regulate the disbursement of the contingent fund of the Senate, and for other purposes."

Mr. HOUSTON. That bill proposes to regulate the manner in which Senators shall draw their mileage and per diem; and several of the Senators have expressed a very great anxiety that the House should act upon it without a reference to a committee. If it be the pleasure of the House, I will propose to put the bill upon its passage now.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill.

Mr. MACE. Is it in order to move an amendment to the bill?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. MACE. I then move the following amendment:

Sec. — And be it further enacted, That the moneys which have been or may hereafter be appropriated for the per diem and mileage of members of the House of Representatives, shall be paid at the Treasury, on requisition drawn by the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives, and shall be kept, disbursed, and accounted for by him, according to law. And the said Sergeant-at-Arms shall be deemed a disbursing officer, and in lieu of the bond now required of him, under the rules of the House of Representatives, he shall give bond to the United States, within ten days after the passage of this act, with one or more sureties, to be approved by the Comptroller of the Treasury, in the penal sum of one hundred thousand dollars, with condition for the faithful application and disbursement of such funds as may be drawn from the Treasury under this act, which bond shall be deposited in the Comptroller's office.

Mr. LANE, of Indiana. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question. Does he propose to give the Sergeant-at-Arms the salary of four thousand dollars which we, by this bill, gave to the Secretary of the Senate? I am not prepared to vote for the thing at all.

Mr. MACE. I understand, from the terms of the bill now under consideration, that additional compensation is proposed to be allowed the Secretary of the Senate for disbursing the contingent fund of that body. If that officer is to receive additional pay for such service, I should like to know why the Sergeant-at-Arms of this House should not be placed upon the same footing with him? And I will remark here, Mr. Speaker, that, as at present advised, I am opposed to the whole arrangement. I understand that the Secretary of the Treasury has decided, distinctly, that the President of the Senate, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and the Secretary of the Senate, are not disbursing agents or officers under the revenue laws of the country. I may be mistaken in reference to another thing—but I do not think that I am—and it is: That the whole object of this present movement is to place the contingent fund of the Senate in the possession of some irresponsible bankers in the city of Washington.

Mr. HOUSTON. If my friend will allow me, I will answer him in reference to that point now. The object is precisely the reverse. The first section of that bill proposes to make the Secretary of the Senate a disbursing officer, and, as soon as that is done, he will, under the law of 1846, immediately come under the control of the Secretary of the Treasury; and then he dare not deposit with a bank.

Mr. MACE. I will ask my friend from Alabama one question. How does the Sergeant-at-Arms of this House now, without the aid of that law, pay the members their per diem and mileage?

Mr. HOUSTON. I have not examined into the manner in which the Speaker and Sergeant-at-Arms, obtained money for the members of the House. I understand it, however, to be thus: The Speaker signs a certificate, setting forth the fact that a certain amount of money is due to a member, which certificate, with his receipt, is handed by the member to the Sergeant-at-Arms, who takes them to the Treasury, and there obtains the money. The gentleman will allow me to state, while I have the floor, that the practice in the Senate is, and has been different, from the different organization of that body. I understand it to be true—and the honorable member from Missouri, [Mr. BENTON], will know more of that than I do—I understand it to be true, that the Presiding Officer of the Senate never certifies to any amount due to the members of that body until the termination of the session; at which time he makes one certificate as to the whole amount. The practice there has been for the secretary of that body to draw out of the Treasury large amounts of money for its contingent fund, at a time—such amounts as would suit the purpose. The amount is deposited in his favor, and he draws his individual checks for the sums due the Senate whenever they desire them. Under the old practice it was an individual transaction whenever money was drawn from the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury has very properly, in my opinion, decided that this practice is against the law of 1846—the Independent Treasury law. He requires that the Senate shall either adopt a mode similar to that adopted by the House, or else make the Secretary of the Senate the disbursing officer of the Government. This bill proposes to make the Secretary of the Senate that disbursing officer. By it he will have authority to draw out of the Treasury and deposit the amount under the order of the Secretary of the Treasury, and then his checks in favor of the Senators will command the money. That is what the Senate desire, and I do not regard it as unreasonable.

Mr. MACE. I am very well satisfied with the explanation made by my friend from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON], so far as it regards the Senate. On other points I am not so well satisfied. If it is a matter of convenience to Senators, and a matter of convenience to their disbursing officers, to receive their pay under such a bill as that now under consideration, I ask why it is that the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives should not have the same facilities, and the same easy manner of paying us?

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman allow me a word of explanation? It is this: The explanation given to me by Senators who have conversed with me on the subject was merely this. They said that they did not propose to interfere with the arrangements of the House, because they did not know whether the House desired this to be done, or whether they preferred it as the mode by which their money was to be managed and controlled. And if the House choose to receive their pay on the same principle, and put their money on the same footing, they have a right to do so. The Senate are not opposed to the House having the same laws regulating the government of their contingent fund which they propose to apply to themselves and to the government of their contingent fund.

Mr. MACE. Is the gentleman [Mr. HOUSTON] in favor of my amendment?

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask the gentleman to favor me for a moment. I have no objection to his amendment. I do not oppose it. I am willing to vote for it; and if he offer an additional amendment, I will vote for it. Whatever is convenient for the Senate, under proper restrictions, and is not irregular or contrary to the law, I am perfectly willing to see them exercise.

Mr. MACE. Mr. Speaker, I think that this matter involves considerations which should be reflected upon. Many members of the House are not sufficiently well satisfied yet in respect to the practice proposed in the proposition. With a view, therefore, to give every gentleman an opportunity of investigating and looking into it, and voting understandingly upon the question, I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means; and upon that motion I demand the previous question.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Will the gentleman please to withdraw that motion?

Mr. MACE. Certainly, I will withdraw it, if the gentleman will renew it.

Mr. JONES. Mr. Speaker, by the laws of 1818, fixing the pay—the mileage and per diem—of Senators and members of the House of Representatives, it is provided, I believe, that the certificate of the Presiding Officer of the Senate and the Presiding Officer of the House shall certify as to the amounts respectively due to the members of the body over which they preside. By the act of 1851—if I mistake not, sir—it is provided that the certificate of the Presiding Officer of the House, and also of the Senate, shall be conclusive on all the accounting officers of the Treasury as to the amount due respectively to the Senators and members of this House. By that proviso to the appropriation bill of 1851—I think it was—the accounting officer of the Treasury cannot go behind the certificate to ascertain what is due to any member of this House—cannot go behind the certificate of the officer of the Senate to ascertain what is due to any member of the Senate—for mileage and per diem. The practice up to the present session, with a few exceptions, has been for the Speaker of this House to make his requisition upon the Treasury Department for fifty, a hundred, or two hundred thousand dollars, for appropriations made to pay the mileage and per diem of members of the House. That requisition would be honored at the Treasury Department. The Speaker then deposited that, the sum drawn, in some one of the banks of this city, from which he could check out any amount which the members should call for from day to day. I believe similar arrangements were made, as to the pay of the members of the Senate, with the Secretary of that body, who performed those services.

The present Secretary of the Treasury, in looking to that law, has come to the conclusion that there is no law to authorize him to pay the requisitions of the Speaker, or of the Secretary of the Senate, and that the law requires that the presiding officers of the two bodies shall certify as to the amount due to the members therein, and that that amount so certified shall be paid at the Treasury of the United States. Consequently, sir, you at this time, instead of making a requisition upon the Treasury, and depositing the amount drawn with one of the banks of this city, as has been the case at former Congresses, must certify to a certain amount as due to members of this House for mileage and per diem. The Sergeant-at-Arms sends up to the Treasury by his messenger, and in as short a time as he could go to a bank where the money has been heretofore deposited, he receives it here. The same operation can be applied to the Senate, and the same will be applied, if they adopt the same policy. My own opinion is, that the law requires the money to be paid at the Treasury. It is the proper place where the money should be paid.

For myself, I can see no necessity for the passage of this bill. There is one thing in the first section of it which I hope will be stricken out, if the House determine to pass the bill, and that is, the provision increasing the salary of the Secretary of the Senate. He now receives, by law, three thousand dollars, and I believe, under the universal compensation rule which prevails in that and this House at the end of every session, he receives five hundred dollars in addition.

There is another thing, also, which I wish to see stricken out of the bill, if it must pass; and that is the provision which constitutes the Committee on Accounts in the Senate the auditing officers of the contingent fund of the Senate. I hope it will be amended so as to leave that duty to be performed by the Secretary, as heretofore, so that it may be audited at the Department, as the law requires it to be done in reference to all persons having accounts at the Treasury.

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish to correct an error into which the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] has fallen. I shall not resist a reference of this bill to any committee. It is very desirable that it should be acted upon, and it is desirable, in the first place, because there is no law regulating that subject, as far as the Senate is concerned. In the next place, my own opinion respecting the intercourse of the two Houses of Congress, in the discharge of their duties, is, that it should be characterized by a great deal of indulgence on the part of each towards the other. If the Senate have any particular fancy for any particular mode in which their contingent fund shall be kept and disbursed, as a member of this body, I should let them have it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to ask the gentleman to specify the error into which he said I fell?

Mr. HOUSTON. I am coming to that point. I say I set out with this sort of feeling, to which I have referred, in the discussion and examination of this proposition. If the Senate propose to the House a mode in which they are to disburse their contingent fund, unless that mode is one in conflict with law, or justice, or propriety, or economy, I say let them have it. I defer that much to a coordinate legislative body.

I think, furthermore, that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] has fallen into error in this respect—there is no law devolving upon the Vice President of the United States, who presides over the Senate, any duty connected with paying or disbursing the contingent fund in that body.

Now, I understand the practice to be—and that practice is founded on law—that the Vice President of the United States certifies, at the end of a session of Congress, to the gross amount due to members for their mileage and per diem.

Mr. JONES. I did not state that it required any certificate from the Presiding Officer of the Senate as to the contingent fund, but as to the mileage and per diem of members; and I would ask the gentleman from Alabama to state to the House, if there is any difference in law with respect to ascertaining the amount due and the mode of payment to members of the House and Senate. They are all placed upon the same footing.

Mr. HOUSTON. The Speaker certifies to our drafts, and all our transactions concerning mileage and per diem are carried on through the Speaker, and under his signature; but such has never been the case in the Senate. The Vice President has his duties prescribed to him by the Constitution; and there is no law that I am able to find that devolves upon him any duty connected with the disbursement of the money.

Mr. JONES. I would ask the gentleman from Alabama if either the Senators or members of the House have been paid according to law?

Mr. HOUSTON. I stated, when I had the floor upon a previous occasion, that I believed the Secretary of the Treasury was correct in his opinion of the construction of the law of 1846; and that we were going on in violation of the law; but that does not meet the point which I was presenting to the honorable member from Tennessee. What right have we to say that the Vice President, who is elected by the people of the United States, and whose duty it is, as prescribed by the Constitution, to preside over the Senate, shall be a disbursing officer of the Government, as far as the mileage and per diem of members of Congress, or any other sum of money, is concerned? I ask the gentleman whether we have the power to do that? I stated a fact, which I supposed to be true, that it has never been the practice of the Vice President or the Presiding Officer to certify to the mileage and per diem.

Mr. JONES. I ask the gentleman from Alabama if the Constitution of the United States does not make the Vice President the President of the Senate, and if the Congress of the United States have not the right to prescribe the duties of that officer as well as the President, or any other officer of the Government?

Mr. EWING. I would suggest that this matter should go to the Committee on Ways and Means, where it can be fully investigated, in order that it may be better understood by the House before it is disposed of.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have no objection to the bill going to our committee, if the House wish it.

Mr. JONES. I will merely remark, that I have no particular feeling about this bill.

Mr. EWING. I have not yielded the floor. I renew the motion to refer this bill to the Committee on Ways and Means; and upon that motion I call the previous question.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. Will the gentleman allow me to make a single remark?

Mr. EWING. The motion has already been withdrawn once, and I cannot accommodate my friend from Virginia.

Mr. BAYLY. I only desired to say that the Senate are on short allowance, and that they cannot stand delay. [Laughter.]

The previous question was seconded.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

[Loud cries of "No!" "No!"]

The question was put; and the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

The main question was then ordered; and under the operation thereof, the bill was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

The bill from the Senate, prescribing the manner of appointing the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, was next taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move to refer this bill to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. EWING. I move to refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and, if it be in order, I will briefly give my reasons for making the motion.

A MEMBER. Let the bill be read first.

The bill was read through by the Clerk.

It provides that hereafter the officer of the Government known as Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. EWING. Now, sir, a word in explanation of my motion. I think it would be a better disposition of this bill to refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, than to any private standing committee. I am extremely anxious, and I believe it is the desire of the people all over the country, that this war which has been stealing upon us should at last be openly conducted. It is the custom among all civilized nations, when they go to war, to declare what are the issues upon which their warfare is to be waged, that an enlightened world may judge of the justice of those issues.

Now, sir, I discover upon the part of some of my friends the existence of a very proper and praiseworthy State pride. For instance, the other day, when the ancient prescriptive right of Virginians to hold office was assailed most outrageously and unprecedentedly, [laughter,] my worthy friend over the way, [Mr. BAYLY,] from Virginia—greatly be it said to his honor—at once rose in defense of the rights of Virginia. That gentleman has taken under his charge the protection of the department of the library of the House of Representatives, and I, as a Kentuckian, claim the same right in reference to another branch of the Government, and assume to take the Treasury Department under my wing. [Renewed laughter.]

Sir, I know of no other reason, but the one I have given, which the gentleman could offer in justification and vindication of his course. Two years ago, when the head of that venerable Whig, the Librarian, rolled upon the sands, stained with his sacred blood—when he fell under the axe of proscription, removed from this same office by this same high functionary who presides at that desk, I do not remember that a single word was then said of the supreme importance of the House taking the election of Librarian into their own hands. We poor, proscribed, and down-trodden Whigs, had then, as we have since, not only in Congress now, but in the Executive Departments of the Government, to submit to the torture inflicted upon us by our relentless conquerors with Indian stoicism, not being allowed even the privilege of grumbling, though I now beg leave to give one solitary groan of agony for the fate of some of my friends. [Laughter.]

I do not like this sort of warfare; let us have a fair and open fight. Let us have a courageous, energetic fight; no underhanded game; no guerrilla warfare, cutting off sentinels and pickets, and skirmishing with outposts. Let us see good National Democrats, as they call themselves, come out with true courage. I am weary of these assaults upon a Kentucky Secretary of the Treasury, whom I believe to be the best of the whole batch. He might well exclaim with honest Jack Falstaff, "Company, villainous company, hath been the spoil of me." [Great laughter.] I believe that he is an honest man, and I say it in all sincerity; and I do not want any "laughter" introduced by the Reporter just here in his report of these remarks, so as to make it appear that I am not now speaking in sincerity. I repeat it again, sincerely, that I believe he is an honest, reliable, courageous man. I know it. I have known him for years; and both in his public and his private character I esteem him most highly. I believe him to be a man of courage, a man of energy, a man of sincerity. I believe that the strength of his convictions, and the honesty of his purposes, have been used by others who had, perhaps, less courage, and less energy, and less sincerity. I know that he has been un-horsed, perhaps, in the opinion of many, in a recent tilt which he had in a New York arena. Perhaps his luck was not very good in that quarter [laughter;] but all men have their faults and their weaknesses. Dogberry says that "to be a well-favored man is the gift of fortune; but to write and to read comes by nature." [Laughter.] And it is not in the nature of all men to write with ability. He may have failed in that encounter. He may have been unfortunate. So much the stronger, then, is the call upon the sympathies of his countrymen—Kentuckians. I appeal to all of them around me to come to the rescue. Let us defend him and have open warfare, and then perhaps I might feel there was some chivalry in the combat. I do not know that I might not be tempted even to enlist myself in the army, if war was declared against the whole Administration, the head and front, from the chief down to the assistant secretaries, and the lowest clerks. Why, they do not even assail our Kentucky Secretary directly himself. They attack him by a sort of indirect blows at the Assistant Secretary—by passing a resolution somewhat like the resolution of my friend from Virginia, [Mr. BAYLY,] who has just discovered, after several years' service in Congress, that it is highly important for the proper care of the books, that the Librarian should be elected by the House—[laughter]—they discovered after a long series of years that it was not safe to intrust the appointment of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury to the head of the Treasury Department himself, but that he ought to be confirmed by the Senate.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. As the gentleman has referred to me so frequently, probably I may be justified in interrupting him for a moment. He says that for a long series of years the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury has been appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury. Will he be good enough to inform me when the law passed authorizing the appointment of an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury? It occurs to me that it is a late law.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Oh, no; it was two years ago.

Mr. EWING. The gentleman from Virginia, like the gentleman from Illinois, on his left, [Mr. RICHARDSON,] has a sort of Socratic mode of argument; he is peculiarly given to asking questions in order to entrap young and unsophisticated members like myself, who do not know the dates of the passage of laws. [Laughter.] I knew he only asked that question in order to give himself an opportunity of showing that he knows a great deal better than I do when laws were passed. Well, at all events, that law was passed by a Democratic Congress, and, unfortunately, you have got a Kentucky Secretary—a Democratic Secretary—and you want to deprive him of power. Sir, I call upon the Democracy—the organized Democracy of the House—the Democracy who go for true organization—the great and general Democratic party—the universal, all-absorbing Democratic party, composed, as it is, of so many elements throughout this universal nation of ours—I call upon the organized Democracy of the House to refuse to that refractory Senate the right to sit in judgment upon the appointments of the Democratic Secretary of the Treasury of the United States. [Laughter.]

Why, sir, what next are they to perpetrate? Here, within a few days past, have they not declared—not exactly open warfare; they have not come to that yet—but have they not declared this newly-invented guerrilla war against the organization of the Democratic party, and absolutely, with an unprecedented audacity, unpardonable, too, as it is, dared to elect their own public printer, [laughter,] without consultation with Mr. Armstrong, or the President, or either of the Secretaries of the United States, although, as I am informed, those gentlemen most amiably offered to a number of Senators their best advice and counsel in reference to the matter? [Renewed laughter.] Who ever heard of such audacity? We know it has been intimated by the Union newspaper that they would not have dared to do it, but for the secret ballot. But he is after them. He intends to ferret out those pusillanimous Senators who slyly, and under cover and protection of the secret ballot, assailed the great Democracy, and to hold them up to the derision of the country. Armstrong will get them yet. [Laughter.] There is no escape for them, no secrecy, no bushwhacking, no guerrilla warfare. They will have to come out openly; and I am on Armstrong's side in that respect. [Laughter.] Let us see who they are. One gentleman has already denied that he had any part in the matter, with the utmost haste and the most wholesome fear of the rod which the Union holds over his writhing back. Yes, sir, I call, in conclusion, most earnestly upon the organization of the great Democratic party in this House to resist the proposition to deprive a Kentuckian—a citizen of a State next to old Virginia—[laughter]—(we cut off Old Virginia when we concluded to come into the Union,)—[renewed laughter]—to resist the proposition, I say, to deprive a Kentucky Secretary of the Treasury of the power which justly belongs to him, and the transferral of that power into the hands of a refractory, audacious Senate of the United States, who have ceased, as it seems, to know their own place, and who, absolutely, without consultation, or rather in the face of proper counsel, have dared to elect their own public printer. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I have noticed that my friend from Kentucky has been for the last two or three days very restless, and looking, I have no doubt, with a great deal of anxiety over to this side of the House, in the hope that we would spring a little quarrel among ourselves. As we have not done so quite as soon as he desired, he has taken this occasion to attempt to throw a firebrand in our midst. Sir, the gentleman is very welcome to his witticisms; but when you come to examine the joint resolution now before the House, it will be perceived that it does not justify the remarks he has made. It is incorrect, as asserted, that it was upon Mr. Guthrie, or anybody else. The gentleman seems to have forgotten the legislation even which has occurred since he became a member of this body. He seems to have forgotten that this is the only Assistant Secretary at this time whose nomination is not confirmed by the Senate. He has argued as if it were an attack upon the part of the Senate against the Secretary of the Treasury, because they have singled out his Assistant Secretary for the purpose of bringing his nomination before that body for confirmation.

Now, Mr. Speaker, all of the assistant secretaries in all of the other Departments are nominated to the Senate for its confirmation: the Assistant Secretary of State is so nominated, and a law was passed at the last Congress, requiring the appointments of the assistant postmasters to be sent to the Senate for its confirmation. This appointment of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury is the only one not subjected to that ordeal. In my view it is proper that it should be made so.

I, however, have objections to that resolution, and I propose to refer it to the Committee on Ways and Means, for the purpose of amending and correcting it. The resolution proposes that it shall go into effect immediately upon its passage, to which I object; because, if that provision be agreed to, the resolution may be regarded as an attack upon the Secretary of the Treasury. That was not the design of many of the Senators who voted for it, for they have so advised me; but whether it was the design or not, I would never consent to vote for the resolution in its present shape. I am willing to vote for a resolution which will require the appointment of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, on a vacancy occurring hereafter, to be sent to the Senate for its confirmation.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I will, with the gentleman's permission, make the following suggestion: Let the gentleman propose an amendment, such as he has mentioned, call the previous question, and then let the bill be passed, with or without amendments, as the House may choose.

Mr. HOUSTON. If I had an amendment prepared I would offer it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] will withdraw the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Ways and Means, I propose to amend the resolution, by inserting at the end of the first line, after the word "Treasury," the words "hereafter to be provided," and we will have it all right then.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is the objection I have in view. I do not wish, Mr. Speaker, to consume the time of the House; therefore I withdraw the motion to refer to the Committee on Ways and Means, and propose the amendment suggested by my friend from Tennessee, [Mr. Jones], and upon that motion to amend I ask the previous question.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I move that the whole matter be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The motion was withdrawn.

Mr. WHEELER. I renew it.

Mr. EWING. I am willing to listen to suggestions from any competent authority recognized by the organization of the House. I would simply say that I feel flattered at the notice I have received from the gentleman for the last few days.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. EWING. Is it not in order on my own motion?

The SPEAKER. No; the previous question having been demanded.

Mr. EWING. Could I not withdraw my motion?

The SPEAKER. Not without the unanimous consent of the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. I demanded the previous question on the entire proposition—on the motion to refer and on the motion to amend.

Mr. EWING. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will allow me to withdraw my motion and make a single word of explanation. He has endeavored to hold me up to this House—

Mr. HOUSTON. I have no desire to hold up the gentleman before the House, but I was cut off in my own speech by the gentleman on my left. I have no desire to suppress debate, but I think that the question has been debated far enough. I withdraw the motion for the previous question to give the gentleman [Mr. Ewing] the opportunity he desires, to explain.

Mr. EWING. I wish simply to state that I have been misinterpreted and misunderstood, and that this is but an additional instance added to the many that have gone before showing how easily a patriot's motives may be perverted and misunderstood. My restlessness and anxiety were excited by the commotion in the great Democratic party which has saved the Union, and which is hereafter to save the country. They have had my sympathy. In relation to the gentleman's [Mr. Houston's] share in the organization of the House, I am sure that if he had observed me during the past Congress as he has done for the past few days, he would have seen me at all times endeavoring to sustain himself and his committee; and the Lord knows they needed it sometimes! I voted to give them a clerk when they seemed to be in a minority on this floor. The request was a proper one to the House, and was presented unanimously by the committee; and having seventy majority on the Democratic side, I thought it would be adopted. But the Committee on Ways and Means seemed, as usual, to be in a woeful minority. Sir, if the last Congress provided by law that the Secretary of the Treasury alone should have the appointment of his associate, doubtless it was for good reasons. I confess I gave no particular attention to that law in its passage, conception, or origin. I had no idea that it would affect any personal or intimate friend of mine, or that any such would be likely to hold the office. I paid no particular attention to it at the time. I confess freely (and I allow the gentlemen from Virginia and Alabama [Messrs. BAYLY and HOUSTON] all the honor of their boasted superior information) that I did not know the date of the passage of the law. But if this law now proposed be necessary in connection with that Department of the Government, why not reform also the other Departments? Why not extend this reform to the other Departments, instead of undoing that which was found necessary in the last Congress? I am not, however, disposed to be refractory. I have seen the evil of it; and, as the gentleman constitutes a part of the organization of the House, I yield to his suggestion, and withdraw the motion to refer it.

Mr. BAYLY. I ask that the second clause of the second section of the second article of the Constitution may be read.

The clause was read, as follows:

"He shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, Judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments."

Mr. BAYLY. I desire only to call the attention of the House to that part of the Constitution which has been read—and which I am obliged to the Clerk for properly emphasizing—which refers to the inferior officers who are to be appointed by the President or heads of Departments. All other than inferior officers are to be appointed by the President, under the review of the Senate. Can there be any objection to this? Is the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury an inferior officer, whose appointment is a matter of so little general concern that it is to be left alone to the heads of Departments, or to the President? Sir, he stands next to the Secretary of the Treasury himself. It was an omission, I am quite sure, in the law organizing the Department of the Interior—for I think it was in the organization of that Department that this Assistant Secretary was given—it was an omission not to require that officer to be confirmed by the Senate. When, at the last Congress, we gave to the Department of State an Assistant Secretary of State, that omission was noticed and marked, both in this House and in the other, and the Assistant Secretary of State, whose appointment we authorized then, can only be appointed upon the nomination of the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. This bill, as I understand it, is a bill to correct the omission to which I have referred, and to produce uniformity.

I beg leave to say—though I know it often excites a smile here if anybody says anything about the Constitution, and particularly if the remark comes from a member from Virginia—but without the fear of that ridicule, I undertake to say it was an unconstitutional omission. It being an unconstitutional omission, and the Senate, by an overwhelming majority, having attempted to remedy that omission, the question is whether this House itself will refuse its concurrence? Unless gentlemen here are prepared to decide that the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury is, in view of the Constitution, an inferior officer—an officer such as a messenger or clerk—unless they are ready to decide that a man who stands second in the Department to the Secretary himself, is an inferior officer, whose appointment may be conferred by law upon the President alone, or the heads of Departments, they are compelled to pass this bill.

I undertake to say to my friend from Tennessee that this amendment of "hereafter" does not remedy the defect. The whole defect is in the law as it is, and it ought to be remedied at the first opportunity which presents itself. Why insert the word "hereafter?" Is there a fear that the present Assistant Secretary of the Treasury cannot stand the ordeal of the Senate? If he cannot stand that ordeal, that is the very best reason in the world for not inserting this word "hereafter." If he can stand the ordeal, then the amendment will not affect him.

Mr. HOUSTON. In reply to the gentleman, I would say, so far as that phraseology is concerned, that I have no such fear as he has. It is not for the purpose of covering any cases that have already occurred, or of pointing directly at the Secretary of the Treasury, but of making the law apply to cases that may hereafter occur.

Mr. BAYLY. I do not regard this bill as pointing at the Secretary at all.

Mr. HOUSTON. I say, furthermore, that the language of the law in relation to Assistant Postmasters General, is of a similar character. The name of one of these assistants was presented to the Senate; the other two are holding their offices now, but their names have never gone before the Senate for confirmation, because no vacancy was made, and I propose to do the same in this case.

Mr. BAYLY. I am opposed particularly to the amendment "hereafter." As far as the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury is concerned, I have not a word to say. He is a gentleman, I know very well; and I know him to be a most efficient officer. In the course of my remarks upon this matter, I have not had any reference whatever to that Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. I aim no blow at him.

The gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Ewing], in his remarkable speech, took occasion to refer two or three times to my action about the Librarian, and said that Mr. Williams, when he was turned out, was a Whig, and that I was not so vehemently impressed at that time with the propriety of this House electing its own Librarian. I beg leave to say to the gentleman, in regard to that matter, that he is simply mistaken. I thought so then. I did not move in the matter in the House, because there was no propriety in my doing so. He was not my constituent. I did remonstrate, however, Whig as he was, against his removal; but my remonstrances were of no avail.

Mr. EWING. I understand the gentleman perfectly, and give him credit for his explanation. It is precisely in accordance with what I said before. The gentleman did not find occasion to move in the matter of the removal of Mr. Williams, the Librarian, because he was not a Virginian and a Democrat. I thought that the gentleman from Virginia, who had voted for that high functionary, (pointing to the Clerk,) ought at least to be willing to stand up for one week to the responsibility of the vote he had given, even to the removal of the late Librarian, Mr. Parker. That was the idea I had about it.

Mr. BAYLY. I beg to say to the gentleman from Kentucky, that the Librarian of which he speaks [Mr. Williams] was a Virginian, and that he was removed against my remonstrance. I have also to say, that Colonel Parker, who was subsequently appointed, was not appointed upon my recommendation; but was recently removed against my remonstrances. And I am free to say to my friend from Kentucky, [Mr. Ewing,] that the fact of this constituent of mine being a Democrat, and belonging to a democratic family, seemed to me to make it proper that I should move in the matter.

Mr. HIBBARD. I must raise a point of order upon my friend from Virginia. It seems to me this train of discussion has been carried on far enough. It cannot be in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BAYLY. I regret that the gentleman from New Hampshire did not raise his question of order before. He has allowed me to be assailed, and refuses to permit me to say a few words in my defense.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. After that clause of the Constitution which has been read, upon the suggestion of the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. Bayly,] it is unnecessary to add a word as to the propriety or the necessity of the passage of this bill.

I had intended to say a word with regard to the amendment suggested by myself. I suggested that amendment, not for the purpose of securing its passage—for I regard it as altogether improper—but for the purpose of obtaining the action of the House upon the bill at the present time.

Now, sir, if the idea advanced by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] be correct—that the officer appointed under the law of the last Congress was appointed without the advice and consent of the Senate—and if the original enactment was altogether wrong in this respect, then there has been a wrong, ab initio; and the nomination of the present officer ought to be submitted to the Senate for confirmation. If he was appointed under a law wrongly constructed, then why should his appointment not be submitted to the same ordeal as the appointments to be made to that office in future? Let it go to the Senate, and, if he be a worthy officer, the Senate will, doubtless, confirm his appointment; but if he be unworthy—and I do not pretend to express an opinion as to whether he is or not—but if he be an unworthy officer, he ought to be rejected, and neither he nor his friends ought to attempt to screen him from it, under a provision of a law which was passed, perhaps, without proper consideration.

If it be true, as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] has suggested, that other officers have been appointed under the same circumstances, who have not been submitted to the Senate, let him propose an amendment that shall embrace them and subject them to the same ordeal, and I will vote for it.

Mr. HOUSTON, (interposing.) The gentleman has misunderstood me altogether. What I said was that until the last Congress, Assistant Postmasters General, three in number, were appointed by the Postmaster General himself; at the last Congress, however, we passed a law substantially in the same phraseology which we propose to give this bill, requiring that in future the appointment of these officers must go the Senate. The result has been, that one of them has been removed, and the appointee confirmed by the Senate. Two of the Assistant Postmasters, appointed before the passage of this law, however, now hold their offices, and have never been confirmed by the Senate, their appointment having never gone before that body. Here is the law to which I refer, passed during the last Congress:

"That hereafter, as the office of Assistant Postmaster General, or either of them, shall become vacated, the appointment of his successor shall be made by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate."

Mr. STANTON. I wish to call the attention of the House to another point. The Constitution of the United States, as I understand it, requires that officers of this description shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. HENN, (interrupting.) I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee as to the limitation of the term of office of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, or of the Assistant Postmasters General; whether there is any limitation or end to their terms of office?

Mr. STANTON. There is no positive limitation, except in the will of the appointing power. But, sir, there is a constitutional requirement, and the question is, whether it can be evaded by suffering a man to remain in office contrary to that requirement. There is no other instance now under the Government of the United States—no instance under any existing law—in which an officer of this grade is appointed without confirmation by the Senate of the United States. It ought not to be so in this case; and a man of high feeling and of honor ought to scorn a place under such circumstances, or any attempt to screen himself from the examination of the Senate.

Mr. WHEELER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee, if the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alabama should be adopted, whether it would not be a reflection upon the President, in denying him the right to appoint in such case?

Mr. STANTON. I think it is a reflection upon the officer who holds the office in question to desire to screen himself in any such manner.

Mr. HIBBARD. I have but one word to say upon this subject now, and that is, that enough has transpired in this debate, if it were not before sufficiently evident, to convince the House that now is not the time to proceed to final action upon this bill.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I think that this is the very time when we should act upon it.

Mr. HIBBARD. I do not think so. There is no worse feature that can characterize legislation than that a bill involving important questions of law and expediency, should be driven through this House without allowing sufficient time for its proper consideration. Two questions have arisen here—one in regard to the constitutionality, and another in regard to the expediency of this measure—both of which may well be doubted. At all events, so it struck me; and I am not prepared, therefore, at this time, to act upon this bill. It may be that I am not so quick of apprehension as other gentlemen upon the floor of this House, but I must confess that I do not sufficiently understand its meaning, its purpose, and its effect; and what, let me inquire, is the need of this earnest haste on this occasion? Sir, I know it not. My friend from Alabama [Mr. Houston] has furnished no reason that is at all satisfactory to me. If the bill be a good one—and, for anything I know, it may be so—and I am by no means prepared to say that it will not have my full and perfect assent—there is no occasion for this earnest haste. Let these questions be investigated by proper committees; let there be a report made by some committee to the House; and when that is done, we can act understandingly and advantageously. There is nothing whatever gained by undue haste. On the contrary, it not unfrequently leads to a lamentable retracing of our steps. It is a good rule to be cautious; and for the sake of the integrity of the practice of deliberation, as well as the bearings upon the question involved in this bill, I submit that this is not now the time to act upon it. If it pass at all, it strikes me that it should pass with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. Jones;] but I hold it to be one of those bills which should be examined by a suitable committee as to its legal bearings, and also as to the questions of expediency relating to it; and I think it should be referred to one of the standing committees of this House, for the purpose of careful investigation. Touching the revenue and affecting the Treasury Department in its operation, it strikes me that the proper reference in this case is to the Committee on Ways and Means—the reference which has been already suggested. If gentlemen have another choice, well and good; I have no feeling in the matter; but for the purpose of terminating debate, and of deciding whether we will act upon the bill now, or at some future period when we have had sufficient time for deliberation, I move its reference to the Committee on Ways and Means; and on that motion I ask for the previous question.

Mr. JONES. I hope the House will vote it down. [Cries of "Vote it down!"]

Mr. PHILIPS. I ask the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. Hibbard] to withdraw the demand for the previous question.

Mr. HIBBARD. I would do it with pleasure, but if I do it for the gentleman from Alabama, I must do it for others.

Mr. JONES. Further debate is not in order. The House was then divided on the demand for the previous question, and it was not seconded.

Mr. PHILIPS said: I would not, Mr. Speaker, offer any remarks upon the subject before the House, which has already received so much debate, if it were not that I differ from the able and learned gentlemen who have preceded me with regard to the constitutionality of this measure. I profess to be a strict constructionist. I probably owe my seat here to my attachment to that political creed. But, at the same time, we must be careful that we do not forego or pretermitt the clear constitutional powers which are vested by the Constitution in the Federal Government.

The gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. Bayly,] and the gentleman on my left from Tennessee, [Mr. Stanton,] have both assumed that it was a position which scarcely could be controverted, that the Constitution requires the appointment by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, of the officer in question; and they placed their judgment upon the ground that the appointment of no other than inferior officers could, by the provisions of that instrument, be vested in other hands. Now, to what does that term "inferior" relate? is the question before the House. Why, sir, it relates—and can have no distinct definition but in that relation—to the first; to wit, the Secretary himself. Once determine that the First Assistant Secretary is not an inferior officer, and, I ask, where is the significance of the term "inferior" to rest? Who shall say that a Second Assistant Secretary is an inferior officer? If we depart from the plain construction, which, to my mind, is so evident, that inferiority has reference only to the first—to wit, the heads of Departments—we are thrown upon a sea of construction by which a constitutional rule of one character may be established to-day, and a constitutional rule of another character to-morrow.

Look to the cases specified in the Constitution where the concurrent action of the Senate is required. They are "ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court"—offices the superiority of which is at once recognized. "But the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments."

The incumbent holds under a law vesting his appointment in the Secretary of the Treasury, the head of his Department. He is subordinate or "inferior" to the Secretary, and is already within the constitutional limitation, however important his duties may be.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I would ask the gentleman whether the collectors at various points are not subordinate to the heads of Departments, and whether his construction would not bring them under the head of inferior officers? And let me also ask him whether, from the foundation of the Government, the President has not been required to make appointments of those officers, and if they have not been confirmed by the Senate?

Mr. PHILIPS. I will say, in reply to the gentleman from Virginia, that a collector is the "first" in his office. He has no superintendent there. He has the sole control of it, and therefore comes within the definition assigned to the Constitution.

So much, sir, for the constitutionality of this measure. Now let me say a few words with reference to the expediency of the measure which is before the House. It is proposed to take the appointment of the First Assistant Secretary of the Treasury from the Secretary, and to give it to the President; and this is to be done upon grounds which denounce the past action of the Government and the past action of these officers, as illegal and unconstitutional. I, for one, am not prepared lightly to admit premises which lead to such a conclusion.

Sir, I am opposed to making this change. There is certainly one reason in favor of it, and that is, that if other officers of the same character are appointed by the President, it would be more consistent that all should be appointed by him. But in consideration of all the questions involved in it, I am opposed to the change. If any gentleman of more experience in the House than myself, would bring in a bill to give all the appointments of the various Departments to the heads of those Departments, I would give it my hearty vote and concurrence, and for the reason that it would promote the unity of the Department as connected with the responsibility of it. When the President appoints a chief of one of these Departments, I should be for permitting the Secretary to assume the responsibility of appointing such subordinates as would, in his opinion, perform the duties assigned them in the very best manner. I would place the responsibility upon him, and not throw it upon the President and the Senate; and I would hold him responsible to the country for the faithful discharge of the duties of the offices which are placed under his supervision. For these reasons I shall vote against the bill now before the House.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. What is the proposition now pending?

The SPEAKER. To refer the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Has the bill been read in the House to-day?

The SPEAKER. It has been read a first and second time, and an amendment has been proposed.

Mr. WENTWORTH. It is of no use to attempt to disguise the issue involved in this bill. I presume there is not an individual in this House who really doubts that it is aimed at the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. I honestly believe it is so aimed, and I am willing to vote accordingly. I do not believe in carrying water on both shoulders; and the sooner it is known in this House who are really for the Administration, and who are against it, the better. My course in Congress heretofore will show, that when I have been opposed to an Administration I have dared avow it. If I was opposed to Peter G. Washington being the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, I would say so, and vote against the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee. I shall vote for the amendment, because I am in favor of Mr. Washington, and for no other reason whatever; and if that amendment does not prevail, I shall vote against the bill, as I believe it was got up by Senators to get Mr. Washington's name before that body so as to refuse to confirm the appointment; and I believe that, however we may think in this House, the country will so understand it.

Now, about the reference of this subject to the Committee on Ways and Means. I do not see what use there is in sending it there, as we all know what disposition that committee will make of the matter. Three of the members of that committee are opposed to the Administration, and six of them are in its favor, or the Speaker made a mistake in placing them there. [Laughter.] We know, then, before that resolution goes to the Committee on Ways and Means, how it will stand there. Then why go through the formality of sending it there? Why not come boldly up, and as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Ewing] said, meet the issue openly and frankly? Let it be known where we all are; whether we are inside of the organization of the Democratic party or out of it. [Laughter.] I propose to be inside. How is it with the balance of the House?

I have one or two other reasons why this resolution should not be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means. That committee consists in fact of six members only, because that number constitutes the majority, and therefore, it is presumed, the power of the committee; and that committee is so constituted locally that its recommendation will not have the influence that it ought to have. Now, where are these six members from, who are in fact the power of this Government? We have one from New Hampshire, one from Philadelphia, and then we have the other four all in the same region of country, one in Alabama, one in Tennessee, one in Kentucky, and one in Missouri.

The Committee on Ways and Means, sir, have more power than the President of the United States; they set upon all his measures; they set upon his salary, and upon everything he recommends to the country. They originate all appropriation bills which go to the Senate; and the Senate can have nothing unless the Committee on Ways and Means says so. They are the all-absorbing and all-engrossing power of this nation. They are far ahead in power and influence of all the other committees of the House; and the humblest position on that committee is more desirable than the best on any other. I do not know how many committees we have; but they are, when all combined, as nothing in comparison. The chairmen of a large proportion of them have as nominal a title as a title in the militia. Many would prefer a military title to that of chairman of any one of the greater portion of the committees of this House. Most of them never meet; indeed, they have no room assigned them; and they are not expected to meet; and I honestly believe that we are fast approaching a time when we shall need no other committee but that of Ways and Means. The six gentlemen of that committee, constituting its majority, as I have said, are in fact the whole Government of this country. When a gentleman is placed upon it, he knows that he has one of the highest positions in the Government, so far as power is concerned; and I look upon the position of chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means as the most honorable position under the Government; and he has the right to look to the next Baltimore Convention as the next compromise candidate for the Presidency. [Laughter.]

It is proposed, I repeat, to refer this subject to the Committee on Ways and Means; and I have asked from whence come the six members who constitute its majority? The six free States of the great Northwest have not a member on that committee. It may be said that none of us are qualified to be on that committee; but qualification has nothing to do with the appointment of its members, and it has not had for many years past. [Laughter.] The question arises, have we any friends of the Administration out of the whole delegation of the six northwestern States? There were any number of us admitted to the caucus that nominated the Speaker. Is there not one of them that can be trusted with the honor and credit of this Administration? I might go further, and allude to other portions of the country disfranchised on that committee; but I leave it for every individual to take care of his own section of the country. Yet, I must say, that these six gentlemen are not sufficiently scattered over the country to do justice to all sections, and afford strength to the Administration. No additional weight will be given to this bill because of its reference to the Committee on Ways and Means, for the reasons I have stated; and we might as well come to the test at once; and the sooner the better, in my judgment. As a friend of the Administration, I am prepared to vote for it, now or hereafter. If any gentlemen here are opposed to the Administration and dare not so record their votes, they are not fit to be members of Congress. Let me tell gentlemen how to strike the Administration, if they must strike. They should do it openly and boldly, so that the Administration would see as well as feel the blow. Then, if they are afraid, they will take the proper steps to conciliate. To strike in the dark is malice, and the Administration, not knowing who struck, knows not whom to conciliate. I believe that every gentleman in this House is prepared to vote on the question of reproving or reprimanding Secretary Guthrie for his appointment of Mr. Washington, or on the question of removing Mr. Washington. I will move the previous question, so as to bring the House to a direct vote, and give every one a chance to know who is for and who against the Administration.

Mr. DISNEY. I request the gentleman will withdraw that motion.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I am willing to do so, but gentlemen all round me insist upon our taking the vote to-day.

The previous question was not seconded.

Mr. DISNEY. I had not intended, Mr. Speaker, to have meddled with the debate which has sprung up in regard to the resolution now pending before this House; but that debate has taken a course which seems to me to require some remarks. They shall be but a few words, in relation to the position of the matter now presented before us for our consideration. And here, once for all, and definitely, let me protest against the suggestion of any action that may be taken with reference to this resolution being interpreted either as for or against the Administration. I proclaim myself to be a friend of the existing Administration of the Government of these United States. But, while I am such friend, no consideration growing out of this friendship, or relations of that kind, shall deter me or prevent me from the discharge of any duty which I may believe devolves on me as a representative of a free and independent constituency.

Objections, sir, have been made, that there are constitutional questions involved in the existing appointment of the officer named in this resolution. Now, it is perfectly obvious that if these objections are well taken, the suggestions in the amendment proposed to the action of this body, with reference to supposed difficulties to occur hereafter, are out of place. If the Congress of the United States have passed a law, which, in its vital functions, is in conflict with the Constitution, the remedy should be applied at once, and not be left to any hereafter. If there be no constitutional difficulty in the way, the whole matter is narrowed down to the single question of expediency. If it be merely, then, a question of expediency, let us so treat it; but if it be a question of constitutional difficulty, or of constitutional objection, there should be no hereafter to the action of this House; but we are imperatively called upon to apply the remedy, as I have said, at once.

For myself, sir, I had supposed that the reading of the Constitution would have satisfied gentlemen in every quarter of the House. I confess, sir, I was surprised, when I heard the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. PHILIPS], who last addressed the House, take the ground and give the construction which he did to this clause of the Constitution. What was the object of the framers of that instrument in adopting the language which we find there? Is it not upon the face of the instrument, that in order to guard the public interests of the country, in order to secure a faithful, a full, and prompt execution of the various duties which might devolve, by the Legislature of the country, upon the various officers to be appointed, that the men should be selected with care—with exceeding care? The public interest demanded that sort of care, and the framers of your Constitution undertook to provide for it. They provided that in the appointment of all public officers to discharge the multifarious and important duties which might be imposed upon them by the Congress of the Union, men should be selected by the exercise of the discretion of the President, subject afterwards to the supervision of the Senate. It was a double supervision they required, in order to secure the proper and the right persons. Such is the substantial meaning of that clause of the Constitution. How does it read, sir? It says:

"He shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, Judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law."

The clause is punctuated in the book before me with exceeding care; and we are bound to take it for authority as we find it. It does not even leave to Congress itself to provide for the appointment of these officers; but says that the President shall make all these appointments, except in cases where the Constitution itself has otherwise ordered.

Having established this as the rule, having laid down this as the practice, having in view the general subject of which I have spoken, upon further reflection, foreseeing that this might be construed to extend, in the language of the Constitution, to all inferior officers of the country, and throw great labor upon the Senate without any corresponding benefit, they added an additional provision, by way of exception, as follows:

"But the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments."

As to the objection which the gentleman from Alabama has intimated, that question suggests itself: What is an inferior officer? It is a question which presents itself to the judgment and discretion of every man when the particular case arises. It is one of those kind of things about which it is impossible to lay down a general rule; and yet, though like the line which divides instinct from reason, it is hard to tell where the one ends and the other begins; but yet there are cases where we can say this is instinct and this is reason. Each case must be decided by itself.

So it is in regard to the question of "inferior," as described and alluded to in that passage of the Constitution. Can he be said to be an inferior officer who exercises a large discretion in the administration of the Government? He an inferior officer, who, like the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, is invested with the power coördinate with the Secretary himself—who is daily and hourly called upon to exercise the highest attributes of the Government of the United States? An officer of that kind cannot be confounded with the thousand others of an inferior grade who hang around the Departments. He is not to be confounded with a messenger, a clerk, or other officers, who are not vested with any power of discretion, who are mere ministerial agents, and can but execute the orders of others.

I ask if the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, who is vested with high discretionary power, is to be confounded with the petty officers of whom I have spoken? Can any other construction be given by an unbiased judgment to that section of the Constitution which I have read than the one I have presented?

Mr. HIBBARD. I call upon the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DISNEY] for information. I wish to ask the gentleman whether the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury can do any act for which he is not subject to the entire and complete direction of the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. DISNEY. The question is easily answered. I do it by asking another. Can the Secretary of the Treasury himself be a party to hardly any act for which he is not subject to the order and control of the President?

Mr. HIBBARD. I say he can.

Mr. DISNEY. The officers of the Government are all inferior to the Executive; and, according to the argument which we have heard, they are all inferior officers, within the meaning of the Constitution; and thus every officer in the Republic—the President, and the officers specially enumerated in the Constitution alone excepted—are all inferior officers, and their appointment does not require the advice and consent of the Senate. In my judgment, the true construction of the Constitution is perfectly plain. The constitutional rule is to require the advice and consent of the Senate in the appointment of all the officers of the United States. The exception is in regard to those inferior officers who are inconsiderable in point of importance. The Assistant Secretary of the Treasury is not one of these. He does not come under the exception, but under the rule. As I said when I arose, I had intended not to mingle in this debate; but the singular construction given to our organic law has impelled me to these remarks.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I do not intend to detain the House but a minute or two in relation to the amendment. I suggest that we make this appointment subject to the decision of the Senate in all cases hereafter, simply for the reason that the existing officer was appointed under the law as it stood upon the statute-book at the time of his appointment. His appointment was perfect and complete; and I do not think that justice requires, or even permits, us to subject that officer, whose appointment was perfect and complete, to another and additional appointment. In my opinion, the States would have no more right to prescribe a new mode of election for any member upon this floor, and recall him home to try the result of another election for a seat here, than we would have to change and alter the appointment of this officer, as it now exists under the law. That is the only reason why I am in favor of the amendment.

I believe myself the construction of the bill as it comes from the Senate would not justify the sending of the name of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury to the Senate for confirmation; but as there seems to be a doubt about the matter, it is better to have it settled, and let us say whether it shall be a prospective or retrospective action. If the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama shall be adopted, there can be no mistake about its operation. It will then operate upon all appointments hereafter to be made. Gentlemen who have been here for some time, and particularly my friend from Virginia, [Mr. BAYLY], seem to have forgotten when and how this office was created. The law creating the Home or Interior Department, was passed by a Whig House, if not a Whig Congress, upon the last night of the session which closed on the 3d of March, 1849. When the act came in here, it had not been printed, and I do not believe it had even been read by a member of the House, unless, perhaps, by those constituting the committee who reported it. I say it was brought here, and without being referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union—without being discussed—it was passed on the last night of the last session (I think it was) of the Thirtieth Congress.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. Will the gentleman from Tennessee allow me to correct his statement?

Mr. JONES. Certainly.

Mr. BAYLY. The gentleman says I seem to have forgotten the circumstances under which this law was passed. Sir, I have not forgotten them. On that occasion, as on most occasions, the gentleman from Tennessee and myself acted together. I opposed the law; and being opposed to its enactment, but knowing that a majority of the House were in its favor, I wished to leave it as weak as it could be left.

But if the gentleman will refer to the legislation of subsequent Congresses—if he will refer to the legislation of the last Congress, when he himself possessed, as he deserves to possess, a large influence on the Committee on Ways and Means—in relation to the offices of Assistant Postmasters General, new Registers, and Receivers, Surveyor General for California, Assistant Secretary of State, and the additional Appraisers General, he will find that in every one of these instances the unconstitutional feature, against which I have argued, in the law of 1849, to which he has referred, was corrected, except in the case of the Assistant Secretary of State, where the omission was not corrected, because it was not made, the law creating that officer having undergone the careful supervision of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, of which I was at that time the chairman. But such has been the uniform action of Congress, in reference to the Assistant Postmasters General, the new Registers and Receivers, the Surveyor General for California, and the additional Appraiser General.

Mr. WALSH, (interrupting.) I rise to a point of order. As there has been a good deal of outside talk—which I do not pretend to indorse—about the prescriptive right of Virginians to hold office, I wish to know whether they are to enjoy a monopoly of the speaking in this House? I would like to know how often one gentleman may be permitted to speak upon the same question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] is entitled to the floor, but yielded to the gentleman from Virginia for the purpose of explanation.

Mr. BAYLY, (resuming.) I do not desire to interrupt my friend from Tennessee, and I will do so only for a moment. I mean, however, to say, that during the last Congress, in which my friend from Tennessee was so deservedly an influential member, the action of the Senate was provided for in the appointments to the offices of Assistant Postmaster General, new registers and receivers, surveyor general for California, Assistant Secretary of State, and the additional appraiser general.

Mr. JONES. I am in favor of having this officer pass the ordeal of the Senate; but I shall vote to make the law prospective, and not retrospective. I have no reference to Mr. Washington whatever. It is not necessary upon this occasion for me to say what would have been my course, if I had been consulted, or had had anything to do with his appointment; but I say that justice requires that when laws are passed—yes, sir, in all cases—their effect should be prospective, and not retrospective; and it is for this reason, and this only, that upon the present occasion I shall vote to make this law prospective only in its effect. My course would be the same, no matter who was in the office; no matter whether he were my political friend or opponent; whether my personal friend or adversary, I should vote in the same manner.

Sir, reference was made here by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WENTWORTH,] particularly to the Committee on Ways and Means, and to the power which he thinks that committee can exercise. It is, sir, a position, as none know better than yourself, which the individual who now addresses you never desired. But I think the gentleman has wholly misconceived the powers and duties of that committee. If that committee should grasp all the power of this House, perhaps they may bring their recommendations here; but gentlemen should remember that although they may do this, something more is necessary to their being passed. If that committee will confine itself to its legitimate and prescribed duties, the members of it, as such, will be the mere drudges of this House. What are these duties? To originate measures for the action of this House? By no means, in my opinion. The great duties assigned to that committee, and which they should perform with care and attention, are to take the estimates for appropriations which you send to them from the Departments; to look to the existing laws of the country; to mark the provisions of existing treaties; to see what are the liabilities of the Government; to ascertain whether the estimates submitted and recommended are required or necessary to meet, and comply with, existing laws and obligations; and to report the facts to the House. It is not the business of that committee, in my opinion, to originate the great measures—the plundering schemes that are brought into this House—but to confine themselves strictly to the duties prescribed in your rules: that of reporting the appropriations necessary to meet existing liabilities. If they will do that, they will have sufficient labor to perform.

The gentleman from Illinois said that that committee was eating up all the other committees of this House. So far as my experience goes, I am inclined to think the reverse is the fact. It is the other committees of this House that are breaking down the appropriation bills, by failing in the early part of the session to digest and prepare and report their measures on the days appropriately belonging to them, and bringing them here that we may have time to deliberate upon and discuss them, and pass or reject them, as the House may think proper, and not wait till the very close of the session to be passed in an appropriation bill. If these things were considered early, and not crowded upon us at the very last moment, by way of amendments to those bills which are necessary to be passed to meet the exigencies of the public service, we should see a very different state of things here; and these appropriation bills would not be made to bear all the odium of all the legislation of Congress.

The business of the Committee on Ways and Means is to recommend appropriations—not for new measures, but to carry on those already in existence—to defray the expenses for which the Government is liable. Take for instance the recommendation to increase the Navy—and there is a recommendation of that kind now before the House to increase it to a considerable extent by means of steam propellers—I think that properly belongs to the Committee on Naval Affairs; and if they think there should be an increase, they should report a bill to that effect, and let Congress act upon it. When that has been done, when they shall have reported, and when Congress shall have determined what the amount of the increase of the Navy shall be, then it will be for the Department to estimate, and then for the Committee on Ways and Means, in the legitimate discharge of their duty, to report what appropriation is needed to carry out the law passed to increase the Navy. And so with regard to the increase of the Army. Let Congress determine whether they will have this increase—these augmented expenditures of the Government.

Mr. MACDONALD. I rise to a question of order. I desire to know whether it is legitimate to discuss the whole matter of legislation on a mere question of reference?

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. JONES. I know it is not strictly in order; but as the Committee on Ways and Means was referred to, I merely wished to state what I think the duties of that committee are.

[Many Voices. "Go on!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order. The remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee are not strictly in order.

Mr. JONES. I have no disposition to detain the House longer.

[Cries of "Go on!"]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE obtained the floor.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. Will the gentleman give way for a motion to adjourn? It is now late in the afternoon.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I prefer to go on now, as I do not propose to detain the House five minutes; and I do hope that this matter will be disposed of before we adjourn. I do not intend to go into the discussion which has been opened up here this evening. I do not intend even to defend the occupant of the chair from the assault which has been made upon him, even though he occupies a position which prevents him from replying to that assault. I have the satisfaction to know that the House and the country are familiar enough with the public character and distinguished public services of the Speaker to make it unnecessary. Nor do I intend to enter into the discussion of the constitutional question which has been brought up this afternoon, nor to discuss the question whether the Administration is on trial before the House of Representatives upon the matter of the appointment of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. It would be a weak and staggering Administration, indeed, that would depend upon the settlement of that question in any form. It would be a weak and staggering Secretary of the Treasury who would depend upon the settlement of that question in any form.

The proposition before the House, submitted by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Houston], the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, is to put the joint resolution from the Senate upon its passage, with such an amendment as to make the confirmation by the Senate of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury prospective, and not to affect the present officer. I say to the gentleman from Alabama, that, in my opinion, from what I have seen this afternoon, if a vote is taken upon the question now, and with the information at present in the possession of the House, his amendment will be voted down. I do not know but that the amendment ought to be voted down. I am not prepared to say. I think that the proper course will be to pursue the ordinary mode, and refer the resolution from the Senate to the Committee on Ways and Means, so that they may report to the House, and then the House may act upon this as they do upon other questions. Why make this an exception? There are other officers of this Government of equal grade with the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, who have not been confirmed by the Senate; but under the operation of laws recently passed, when hereafter vacancies occur, and these offices are to be filled, the appointees are to be confirmed by the Senate. It may be proper that these officers should all be put upon the same footing, and it may be proper that the present Assistant Secretary of the Treasury should undergo the ordeal of the Senate. If so, the Committee on Ways and Means, to whom, I suppose, this resolution would be appropriately referred, may report back the Senate resolution with an amendment applying its provisions also to the officers in the Post Office Department and others.

Mr. DISNEY. It should go to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I confess I do not attach so much consequence to the constitutional question as my friends from Virginia and Ohio, [Messrs. Bayly and Disney;] and the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Phillips] strike me as perfectly conclusive on that point. I am sure I have no particular desire that this resolution should be referred to the Ways and Means Committee; and if it is the general sense of the House, I will move to refer it to the Committee on the Judiciary.

[Several Voices. "That's right."]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. It is proper that I should say that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] originally proposed to refer the resolution, and yielded to the suggestions of others in asking for action upon it at once. I now move that the joint resolution from the Senate be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and upon that motion I demand the previous question.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. GROW. I appeal to the gentleman to withdraw his motion for a moment.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I would do so with great pleasure at any other time; but it is now very late, and I think the House ought to adjourn.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I rise to a privileged question. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The question was then taken on Mr. CAMPBELL's motion, and it was agreed to.

The House then adjourned.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, December 19, 1853.

Prayer by the Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of Thursday was read and approved.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. CLAY presented the credentials of the Hon. BENJAMIN FITZPATRICK, elected a Senator from the State of Alabama, by the Legislature of that State, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of the Hon. WILLIAM R. KING, which, during a portion of the last session, he filled by Executive appointment.

The oath prescribed by law having been administered to Mr. FITZPATRICK, he took his seat in the Senate.

DEATH OF THE HON. C. G. ATHERTON.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce resolutions in relation to the death of my late colleague, the Hon. CHARLES G. ATHERTON.

Unanimous consent was given.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, before offering the resolutions, which, by the kind indulgence of the Senate, I am enabled to present at this time, I will submit a few remarks in connection with the subject.

During the four years I have been honored with a seat in this Chamber, often has the attention of the Senate been arrested from its ordinary business to the contemplation of the solemn scenes of death. Of those who have been associated with us here during that brief period, no less than nine have passed to their final account. The most distinguished minds of the land—I might well say of the world—have been removed from us by the hand of death. Their wisdom to counsel—their eloquence to inspire—live only in the history of the past. It seems to me that if ever there was a body of men taught by the admonitions of an all-wise Providence the utter emptiness of the highest earthly places of honor and trust, that body is the Senate of the United States. While the pathway of death has been thronged by our fellow-countrymen who have conferred upon us the high places we occupy, that dark pathway has also been trod by an unprecedented number of our associates, all hastening to, and mingling together in the same common resting-place—the grave.

The last on the catalogue of the fated number of our associates was my esteemed and lamented friend and colleague, CHARLES GORDON ATHERTON, who at the time of his recent death was a member of this body from the State of New Hampshire. He died suddenly at Manchester, in that State, on the 15th of November last, of paralysis. On the morning of the 10th, he came into the court-room in that city, where he had been actively and laboriously engaged some two or three weeks in the discharge of professional duties, apparently as full of health and spirits as any of us now enjoy, and with the brightest prospects of a useful and distinguished future. Soon after coming into the court, while conversing with a member of the bar, his countenance suddenly changed, and his tongue refused its utterance. His left side was paralyzed. He was immediately removed to his lodgings, and the ablest medical aid procured. During the remainder of that day (Thursday) and the next he seemed fully conscious of his condition, and communicated with his friends; but on Saturday he sunk into a state of unconsciousness, from which he never awoke, but continued to sink gradually under the force of the attack until Tuesday, the 15th, at one o'clock p. m., when he breathed his last.

Thus, abruptly, has been stricken down in an unexpected moment, our late esteemed associate, in the meridian of physical and intellectual manhood.

He left us at the close of the last special session with as well-founded expectations of being here to-day as any member of this body—but, alas! that seat has been vacated. How suddenly does Providence, by his inscrutable decrees, blast our fondest anticipations, and teach us the true tenure of man's estate—the true, yet frail tenure of all earthly honor and station, and of life itself. Indeed, what are all these but an empty inheritance, except so far as they are made subservient to individual and the public prosperity—to the happiness and permanent good of the race?

Mr. Atherton left no children. His parents, indeed the whole of his father's family, had gone before him to the tomb. Nevertheless, he died amid a large circle of ardent and cherished friends, who sincerely mourn his death. He was descended from ancestors distinguished in the history of his State. His grandfather, Joshua Atherton, was a lawyer of much eminence, and settled early at Amherst, the Shire town of Hillsborough county—was a member of the Convention which ratified the Constitution of the United States, and subsequently a Senator and Attorney General of New Hampshire. His father, Charles H. Atherton, was also a thoroughly-read and accomplished lawyer, a man of brilliant genius, and a fine orator. He was frequently a member of the State Legislature, and a member of the House of Representatives in the Fourteenth Congress.

The subject of my present remarks was born at Amherst, Hillsborough county, in the State of New Hampshire, the residence of his father and grandfather, on the fourth day of July, 1804. He exhibited, at a very early age, a strong taste for classic literature, and a capacity to master, with remarkable quickness and ease, the fundamental elements of a classic and liberal education. He entered Cambridge University in 1818, being then only fourteen years of age, and graduated in 1822, beloved and esteemed both by the faculty and his fellow-students. His college life was exemplary, and his standing as a scholar was among the first of his class.

After leaving college, he studied law in the office of his father, and was admitted to the bar at the age of twenty-one years, and established himself in his profession at Nashua, in his native county, where he resided until his recent death.

Mr. ATHERTON had been much in public life, a circumstance showing better, perhaps, than any other test, the high estimation in which he was held for fidelity and capacity, by the people of his State. In 1830 he was chosen a member of the Legislature, and in 1831 he was elected Secretary of the Senate. He was again chosen a member of the Legislature in 1833, and continued a member until 1836, and was the Speaker of the House of Representatives for three successive years. He was a member of the House of Representatives of the United States, for the Twenty-Fifth, Twenty-Sixth, and Twenty-Seventh Congresses. In the year 1842 he was chosen by the Legislature of the State of New Hampshire a member of this body for the term of six years. After having served out his term, he retired from public life and resumed the practice of his profession. In 1850 he was elected to the Convention called to revise the Constitution of the State of New Hampshire. In 1852 he was again elected to represent his State in the Senate of the United States for six years, and took his seat here on the fourth day of March last. From the tasks of the school-room to the high duties of a Senator, he well and ably acted his part. As a scholar, he was thorough, enthusiastic, and accomplished; as a lawyer, a master in the profession, quick of perception, yet always safe and judicious in council; as an advocate, forcible and logical, oftentimes soaring into the highest regions of forensic eloquence; as a statesman, he was fearless and just, enlightened and able. While tenacious of the interest of his own immediate constituents, he was always liberal and just towards the interests of every other section of the country, taking the Constitution as the great chart to guide and limit his action. As a patriot, his views were as broad as the Confederacy, adhering with inflexible firmness to those conservative and constitutional principles which secure to every section of our common country the rights peculiar to each. He acknowledged no political law higher or more sacred for his rule of conduct here than that sacred instrument which we are all sworn to support. As a friend, he was ever faithful and true.

The death of such a man is not merely a sad bereavement to the State whose immediate representative he was, but a calamity coextensive with the Union, reaching as deep as the foundation of those great principles of republican liberty on which our prosperity and happiness as a united people depend.

This lamentable event again teaches us the all-important and solemn lesson to be "also ready," for we know not the moment when we, too, shall be called to our final account.

Sir, while we, in common with his numerous friends, lament his death, let us not forget that there is one of his own immediate family circle left behind with whom we can only sympathize: I mean the loved and chosen partner of his youth—the amiable and accomplished companion of his maturer manhood—who, with stricken heart and a soothing care that none but woman can bestow, watched with anxious solicitude the fitful pulsations of sinking nature, and bathed his aching head with her tears. While we extend to her our deepest sympathies, it is God alone can heal the crushed heart.

I offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate deeply laments the death of the Hon. CHARLES GORDON ATHERTON, who, at the time of his decease was a member of this body from the State of New Hampshire, and tenders to his widow a sincere sympathy in this most afflictive bereavement.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of the foregoing resolution to the widow of the deceased; and further, that he communicate these proceedings to the House of Representatives.

Mr. HUNTER. I rise to second the resolution which the Senator from New Hampshire has offered, and to which he has spoken so feelingly and eloquently. This is the second time within the brief period of our session that the Senate has been called upon to pay funeral honors to the dead. A while ago it was to one, who, ripe with years and honors, descended to the tomb when life had fulfilled its promises, and seemed to have reached its natural and appropriate close. Now, sir, we are to pay them to one stricken down in the prime of life, with his hopes and aspirations fresh and growing around him. He had already won a high position before the country, and had possessed himself of great opportunities for future usefulness, which, in hands able to use them, are, perhaps, to be reckoned among the chief of earthly blessings.

Trusted by his friends, respected by his opponents, and honored by his State, a thousand favoring circumstances invited his reappearance upon the political arena, and a bright and promising future seemed to be opening before him. And yet, in an instant of time, with the untasted cup beside him, without forewarning or foreshadow of the fatal event which was coming so swiftly upon him, he was stricken down in mid-career. The mind was smitten in its fastness, and the stream of life stood still at its spring. The living spirit which sometimes "o'er-informs its tenement of clay," had loosed the connecting link between mind and body, and the oracle was hushed whilst the earth-built walls of its sanctuary still remained. Under such circumstances continued existence could have been no blessing; and our regrets are more due to the first than to the second blow, which completed the ruin after the grace and charm of life had fled.

Mr. President, my acquaintance with CHARLES G. ATHERTON commenced in 1837, when I first entered the House of Representatives, of which body I found him an ardent, active, and efficient member. Even at that early day he was a marked and trusted man in his party. Here, sir, I afterwards served with him in more intimate relations upon the Committee of Finance, on which he was chairman. I can safely testify to his fidelity to principle, and the efficiency with which he discharged the duties of that trust. He was upright and honorable in all the relations of life. As his colleague has well said, he was an eminently safe man in council, and one, I may add, who pursued his purposes, when once they were formed, with firmness and ability.

Mr. President, when we look to a life thus cut short in its midst, as it were, we feel as if we had heard some half-told tale, and the imagination is on the stretch to fill up the vacuum, and supply the loss. What is lost we cannot restore; and yet we have enough of his history to warrant the belief that, with the last sigh of his physical existence, there passed away thoughts, conceptions, and aspirations which constituted a noble scheme of life. The objects of pursuit of such a man must have been pure and elevated, and we have every reason to believe that his expectations were founded upon a just confidence in his own high character and abilities. That he did not live to fulfill this scheme, his friends most deeply deplore; but who, sir, shall undertake to reason upon the decrees of Providence, unless he is also acquainted with his secrets?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, such has been my acquaintance with our friend whose death has been announced by my colleague, that I cannot refrain on this, to me, unexpected occasion, from adding my humble but heartfelt tribute to his memory. My first acquaintance with Mr. ATHERTON commenced in 1830. He was then a member of the New Hampshire House of Representatives; and I was connected with him as a member of the House or State Senate for seven successive years. Three years of that time he was Speaker of the House, and by a dignified, impartial, prompt, and correct discharge of duty, distinguished himself as an efficient and accomplished presiding officer.

The next four years, during the administration of Mr. Van Buren, I was associated with him as a member of the House of Representatives in the other end of this building. In that body, very few, if any, brought to its service more integrity of purpose, more clear and discriminating judgment to settle questions of difficulty, or more ready powers in debate, or greater legislative knowledge, skill, and ability. It was my happiness generally to concur with him on all important national questions, and to share so liberally in his personal friendship, as to be able to estimate his personal, as well as his public character. He was not only distinguished for high qualities in the discharge of public duty, but equally distinguished for his humane, sincere, generous, and kind feelings, which endeared him to his friends. The perfect respect and friendship then formed for his character I shall fondly and gratefully cherish for his memory till I am gathered with him to the silent tomb.

In his manners, Mr. ATHERTON was naturally reserved, quiet, and unobtrusive, but affable and courteous, gentlemanly and polished. He was incapable of deceiving by false or hypocritical professions, and by keeping his faith with all, gave a beautiful exemplification of the incorruptu fides, in a life devoted to fidelity, justice, and truth, which left among the living not a single resentment or unkind feeling to be buried in his grave. The deceased was a graduate of Harvard College, an accomplished scholar, of varied and extensive literary attainments, possessing a mind quick, clear, and vigorous, highly cultivated, and remarkably well balanced.

Of his eminent talents, public character and services, it is unnecessary for me to add to what has been eloquently and truthfully said by those who have preceded me. These are the property of the country, and belong to the bright pages of its history. It belongs to me now only to say, that in every position to which the deceased was elevated, he discharged his duty acceptably, and with marked fidelity and ability.

In his native State, which he represented here, he shared, as he richly deserved, largely in her confidence and support, and was regarded by her citizens as the head of their bar, and one of their most able lawyers and eloquent advocates. His constituents admired his high, noble, and patriotic character, and often felt a glow of exultation and State pride, in view of the signal ability with which he maintained an honorable position here amidst the assembled galaxy of the master-minds of the nation. He loved his country, and nobly maintained those principles on which its prosperity and security depend. Happy will it be for us if our footsteps are guided by the calm and steady light of his example, which brightly shines along the pathway of duty and usefulness.

His accomplished and worthy partner, to whom he was ever devoted in his kindness and affection, and whose hand assuaged the bitterness of his parting life, lives to mourn her irreparable loss. To her stricken bosom should our sympathy and consolation be addressed. If her constant, abiding, and self-sacrificing affection, her cares, sympathies, and efforts triumphing over fatigue and exhausted nature, could have availed, her husband would long have been spared to her and to his friends, who now deplore his loss. But, alas! he has gone the road all must once pass. Calcanda semel via lethi. Talents and wealth, position and power, could not avert the arrows of death. In the prime of life and vigor of intellect, and mid-career of his usefulness, he has been stricken down, and a great light extinguished forever—leaving a seat here which cannot be filled with equal ability and devotion to principle, and a nation to mourn a sad and melancholy bereavement.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and
The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 19, 1853.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m.

Prayer by the Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of Thursday was read and approved.

Mr. MURRAY. I desire to present a report from the Committee on Printing.

CREDENTIALS OF JOSE MANUEL GALLEGOS.

Mr. BENTON. I rise to a question of privilege. I ask to present the credentials of Señor José Gallegos, a delegate from the Territory of New Mexico; and that he may be sworn and take his seat.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire that the commission under which it is proposed to introduce Mr. Gallegos may be read; and before any action is taken upon it, I desire to call the attention of the House to what I conceive to be the state of the case under this presentation—that neither of the contestants is prima facie entitled to a seat upon this floor.

The credentials were read at the Clerk's table as follows:

*United States of America,
Territory of New Mexico:*

I, David Meriwether, Governor of the Territory of New Mexico, do hereby certify, that on the twentieth day of September, A. D. one thousand eight hundred and fifty-three, and in my presence, William S. Messervy, Secretary for said Territory, proceeded to open and count the returns of votes given at a general election held in the several counties of said Territory, on the fifth day of the present month, for a Delegate to the Thirty-Third Congress of the United States, and that counting the entire vote, as returned by the several prefects, the result stands as follows: José Manuel Gallegos received.....4,971 votes.
William Carr Lane received.....4,526 "

Majority for José Manuel Gallegos..... 445 votes.
And, that after throwing out of the count such returns as were not made in strict accordance with law, the result stands as follows:
José Manuel Gallegos received.....2,806 votes.
William Carr Lane received.....2,367 "

Majority for José Manuel Gallegos..... 539 "
Therefore I, the said David Meriwether, Governor as aforesaid, do declare and make known that the said José Manuel Gallegos was and is duly elected Delegate from said Territory to the Thirty-Third Congress of the United States, according to law.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto signed my name, and affixed the seal of the Territory of New Mexico, this twenty-first day of September, A. D. one thousand eight hundred and fifty-three.
D. MERIWETHER.

By the Governor:
WILLIAM S. MESSERVY, Secretary of Territory.

*United States of America,
Territory of New Mexico:*

I, William S. Messervy, Secretary of the Territory of New Mexico, do hereby certify, that on the 20th day of September, A. D. 1853, and in the presence of the Governor of said Territory, I proceeded to count the returns of votes given at a general election held in the several counties of said Territory, on the fifth day of September last, for a Delegate to the Thirty-Third Congress of the United States; and that counting the entire vote as returned to this office by the several prefects, the result stands as follows: José Manuel Gallegos received.....4,971 votes.
William Carr Lane received.....4,526 "

Majority for José Manuel Gallegos..... 445 "

And that after throwing out of the count such returns as were not made in strict accordance with law, the result stands as follows:

José Manuel Gallegos received.....2,806 votes.
William Carr Lane received.....2,267 "

Majority for Don José Manuel Gallegos..... 539 "

Therefore, I, the said William S. Messervy, Secretary as aforesaid, do hereby certify that the said José Manuel Gallegos was and is duly elected the Delegate from said Territory to the Thirty-Third Congress of the United States, according to law.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto signed my name and affixed my seal of the Territory of New Mexico, this second day of October, A. D. 1853.

WM. S. MESSERVY, Secretary of Territory.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It seems that Mr. GALLEGOS's credentials are covered by two certificates, which, of course, presents a prima facie case. I must state, however, in explanation of the position I took, that previously the Secretary of the Territory issued a certificate in conflict, as I conceive, with the one just read. So far as any investigation I could make, it appeared that Mr. GALLEGOS came under the certificate of the Governor. The papers before me show that the Secretary had given a certificate under his seal, and not that of the Territory, to the contestant, WILLIAM CARR LANE. Mr. GALLEGOS, being armed with certificates from both of the officers of that Territory, presents himself, in compliance with the law; and I shall interpose no further objection to his being sworn in. The case will be sent hereafter, I presume, to the Committee on Elections.

Señor GALLEGOS was then presented to the Speaker by Mr. BENTON, and took the usual oath to support the Constitution.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I rise to what I conceive to be a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. MURRAY] is entitled to the floor, having given way for the presentation of the credentials of the Delegate from the Territory of New Mexico, [Mr. GALLEGOS.]

Mr. MURRAY, from the Committee on Printing, to whom the subject was referred, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That the members of the House Committee on Printing cause to be published and bound in pamphlet form, in such manner as may seem to them appropriate, for the use of the House, thirty thousand copies of the proceedings of the Senate and House of Representatives, and the addresses of the members, in regard to the death of the late Vice President of the United States, the Hon. WILLIAM R. KING, together with so much of the President's message of the present session as relates thereto, and the proceedings of the Supreme Court of the United States on the same subject.

The question was taken, and the resolution was adopted.

EXCUSE FROM SERVING ON COMMITTEE.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I was honored with a position on the Committee on the Territories by the Speaker, and what I now request is simply that the House will excuse me from serving on that committee.

Mr. CULLOM. I am totally ignorant of the cause for which the gentleman asks to be excused from serving on that committee. If he has given any to the House, we upon this side of the Hall have not heard it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The gentleman from Virginia has given no reason why he should be excused.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I did not suppose that it was necessary to offer to the House any reason why I desired to be excused from service upon that committee. I thought, as the committee was so entirely unimportant, and its duties required so little labor, the simple expression of a desire on the part of a member, especially when his place could be so easily supplied, would address itself to the courtesy of this House, and be sufficient to obtain an excuse, without any assignment of reasons for the request. I do not desire to state any reasons, but respectfully ask the House to allow me to be excused from service upon that committee. I could state my reasons, if required. I should deem it a personal accommodation if the House will excuse me, and therefore I will leave it with them, without consuming further the time of the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. So far as it would be a personal accommodation I should be very glad to excuse the gentleman. But the gentleman is mistaken as to the amount of labor to be performed by that committee, as also in reference to its importance. There are now, I believe, some seven Territories. The business for all those Territories passes through that committee. That business is important, and requires experience. My friend from Virginia, [Mr. SMITH,] has that experience, and we very much need the benefit of his counsel and advice upon that committee. I trust, therefore, he will withdraw his application to be excused.

Mr. SMITH. I trust that the privilege which I ask of the House, of being excused, will be accorded. I do not suppose, sir, that my experience is so much appreciated by others as it appears to be by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON,] and hence I desire to be excused from service upon that committee. I am out of place upon that committee, and wholly unacquainted with its duties, and have no experience to bring to the discharge of them. I beg that the House will excuse me, as I have requested, and allow me to content myself with an outside position in reference to that committee.

Mr. BOCK. My colleague from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] assigned as one, and the principal reason, why he desired to be excused, that the duties of that committee were entirely unimportant. I am as much disposed as any member of this House to grant any reasonable request of my colleague; but I differ entirely from him in regard to the position he takes in relation to the importance of the Committee on the Territories. So far from being entirely unimportant, it is at this time one of the most important committees constituted by the Speaker of this House. I fear that my colleague has not given to the business of that committee that reflection and attention which he usually gives to subjects upon which he is called to act. If the reason assigned be the only excuse of my colleague, however much I may desire to grant a personal accommodation under other circumstances, I shall be compelled to vote against his request.

The question was then taken, and there were, on a division, ayes 103; noes not counted.

So Mr. SMITH was excused from service on the committee.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to present to the House, for the purpose of reference to the Committee on Elections, the evidence and poll-book in the contested election case from New Mexico. The documents in this case are voluminous, and I desire to send them to that committee.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF GENERAL LAND OFFICE.

Mr. DISNEY. I offer the following resolution, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That five hundred extra copies of the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with accompanying documents, be printed for the use of said office.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I object.

The SPEAKER. The resolution, under the rules of the House, will go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Will not the gentleman from Ohio amend his resolution by increasing the number of copies?

Mr. DISNEY. I simply desire to say to the House that I offer the resolution at the request of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and that the number named was suggested by himself. My object is simply to have the resolution referred to the Committee on Printing, conformable to the rules and practice of the House.

The SPEAKER. If there is no objection, the resolution will go to the Committee on Printing.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

Mr. PERKINS, of New York. I rise to a privileged question. The congressional district which I now represent is, in part, composed of the county of Herkimer, formerly represented by Alexander Buell. There is a large share of the documents printed for that congressional district that remain with the Clerk. I desire to offer a resolution that they shall be delivered to me for distribution in that district.

Several MEMBERS. It is not a question of privilege.

Mr. DISNEY. I desire to offer the following resolution—

Mr. WALSH. I object. Resolutions are not in order now.

Mr. DISNEY. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of introducing the resolution which I wish to present.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Read it for information. The resolution was then read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be authorized to employ a clerk at a compensation not exceeding four dollars per day.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman can reach his object when committees are called for reports. The SPEAKER. Reports are now in order from committees.

APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. HOUSTON, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported the following bills; which were severally read by their titles and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed:

A bill making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th June, 1855;

A bill to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th June, 1854; and

A bill making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States, for the year ending the 30th June, 1855.

CLERK FOR COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

When the Committee on Public Lands was called,

Mr. DISNEY said: I now desire to introduce from the Committee on Public Lands the resolution in regard to which I asked the unanimous consent of the House a few minutes ago. I offer, in behalf of that committee, the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be authorized to employ a clerk at a compensation not exceeding four dollars a day.

Mr. PRATT. I ask the gentleman whether it has been customary for that committee to employ a clerk?

Mr. DISNEY. It is, perhaps, proper for me to say to the House, in connection with this subject, that I should not have asked for the adoption of a resolution of this sort if, in my opinion, it were not imperatively required. The amount of labor imposed upon that committee is, perhaps, familiar to a majority of the members of this House.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana, (interrupting,) I wish to inquire whether this resolution comes up in order as a report of a committee?

The SPEAKER. It was introduced by the gentleman from Ohio as a report from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DAVIS. I will only say that I should object to its introduction out of order.

Mr. DISNEY. To illustrate, if the House will permit me: at the first meeting of our committee we found referred to us forty-five petitions; and the history of the labors of that committee shows that in a single Congress they have had as many as between four and five hundred bills upon their calendar. These bills require a vast amount of investigation, and the constant attention of the members of that committee; the whole forming a mass of labor utterly impossible for them to perform, and, at the same time, pay any sort of regard to their other legislative duties. To impose the duties of clerk upon the secretary of that committee would be denying to him entirely the privilege of exercising his legislative functions.

It is true the committee might employ a clerk at the expense of the individual members; but I apprehend that it is hardly becoming the dignity of this Congress to impose upon any one of its members labors which require him to sacrifice his other duties, or employ assistance at his own expense.

So far as I am individually concerned, the duties of clerk do not affect me; and so far as this resolution applies to myself, I do not care a feather whether it is adopted or not. But, sir, it is to impose a wrong upon other members of the committee not to grant this request. It is wrong to require any member of this House to perform labor that will compel him to neglect his duties as a Representative upon this floor. I repeat, it is beneath the dignity of this House to impose upon its committees, labors they cannot perform without either foregoing all participation in the labors of the House or defraying the expenses of employing assistance from their own pockets.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. Will my colleague allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. DISNEY. Certainly, I will; but before doing so will my colleague allow me one remark? He is my friend, and, I am sure, will not take offense at what I intend to say. I allude to a practice which has grown up here until it has become the grossest abuse. It is a common—almost universal practice—that whenever a gentleman rises to speak upon this floor he cannot be allowed to proceed for three minutes without being interrupted. I do not say this to any particular individual, and should not say it to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CAMPBELL,] if he were not my friend; but what I say is true, and it is a practice which I utterly detest.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am very willing to receive any suggestion from my colleague in relation to this system of interruption which he may be pleased to give, although I think that perhaps he is as much in the habit of violating the rule which he seeks to lay down as any gentleman upon this floor.

Mr. DISNEY. Oh, no! oh, no!

Mr. CAMPBELL. I did not rise to interrupt my colleague, but merely to suggest to him in the kindest manner possible a defect in his resolution; and, if he is not prepared to receive it in a kindly spirit—

Mr. DISNEY. Certainly; I will receive it in that spirit.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then we may debate its propriety.

Mr. DISNEY. I will receive any suggestion from my colleague.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Now, sir, we had a little trouble the other day in relation to a matter of this kind. If it is necessary to employ a clerk for this committee, I do not wish to throw any obstacles in the way. The resolution offered by my colleague authorizes the committee to employ a clerk at a fixed salary per day, without limiting the time; and hence, if it should pass in its present shape, that committee would be authorized to employ a clerk all the time, even during the whole year, at the salary therein named. I rose, therefore, to suggest to my colleague that he should amend his proposition by adding to his resolution that the committee be authorized to employ a clerk at a rate of compensation not to exceed four dollars per day for the time he may be actually employed during the session; because, if the resolution is not so modified, I shall vote against it. Gentlemen will find that the resolution passed the other day, giving a clerk to the Committee on Ways and Means, was restricted; and for one I never will consent to give the Committee on Public Lands a greater privilege in this respect than the Committee on Ways and Means, whose duties are known to be greater, and involve more responsibility than those of any other committee. I would, therefore, suggest to my friend that he would modify his resolution; and if he is not disposed to do so himself, I hope he will yield the floor, so that some other member may have an opportunity of doing so.

Mr. DISNEY. In conformity with the usual practice of the House, I have had a speech made within my speech. My friend over the way [Mr. CAMPBELL] is a warm personal friend of mine, and I take all the remarks which he has made on this occasion in good feeling. I was not, however, complaining of him, but of the practice which has grown up in this House, and of which I must take this opportunity of expressing my abhorrence.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio will state his point of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The gentleman is not discussing the proposition before the House, but is complaining, if I may say so, in rather a petulant manner of the general conduct of this body.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DISNEY] will confine himself to the subject-matter before the House.

Mr. DISNEY. My colleague knows full well that I am not the man to make any remark in a petulant spirit. I think he will, if he reflects, be ready to admit that I am about as sweet a tempered man as any in this House.

But, sir, let that pass. I come back to the subject of the resolution. The suggestion made by my colleague may perhaps be well enough in the end if it did not involve a charge against the discretion and judgment of the committee itself.

I think that the House should presume that in all such cases, the committee will exercise a fair and just discretion in the appointment; in the first place, that they will not employ a clerk, unless the state of business really requires the services of one; in the second place, that they will endeavor to select such an individual as will best discharge the duties; and finally, that when the services of such an officer become unnecessary, they will discharge him from their employment. That is the reasonable presumption in the case. But, sir, if the House are unwilling to trust to the discretion of the committee in this particular case, or in any other, let them, by express words in the resolution, limit the power of the committee to employ a clerk to such time as they may think proper. That there is a necessity for a clerk in this particular case, I know. That the committee will not undertake to retain the services of a clerk longer than the necessities of the case seem to require, I believe, and hence I have reported the resolution precisely as it was adopted by the committee, and I now leave it for the decision of the House.

Mr. COBB. I avail myself of this occasion, as it is perhaps as appropriate as any other will be, to define my position in regard to these matters. I invariably vote against the employment of a clerk by any committee, and I am opposed to the employment of a clerk for the Committee on Public Lands, of which I am a member. Inasmuch, however, as a majority of our committee deemed it necessary that we should have a clerk, and as it is a delicate subject, so far as my colleagues and myself are concerned, I shall not state any reasons why I am opposed to it, but will only add that I am opposed to this motion, as I am to all propositions of a similar character.

Mr. DISNEY. It is probably right that I should state that the gentleman from Alabama, who has just taken his seat, voted in the committee against this resolution, and he was the only member of the committee who so voted. He stated then, as he states now, that he was opposed to allowing clerks to any committees.

Mr. PRATT. Some minutes since I asked the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DISNEY] a very civil question in a very respectful manner, or, I intended it, at least. I inquired of him if it had been usual to employ a clerk for this committee—

Mr. DISNEY. I ask the gentleman's pardon; I had forgotten it.

Mr. PRATT. The gentleman did not see fit to answer the question; but a gentleman in front of me, who was also a member of the last Congress, answered my question in a gentlemanly manner, that such had not been the practice.

Now, sir, I am opposed to granting any such privilege as this to a committee. If one committee is entitled to a clerk, why, I ask, are not all the committees of this House entitled to similar assistance? For what object are the committees constituted? They are to furnish legislation for this House. It is well known that a large portion of legislation is done by the committees at the present day; and if they are to have an assistant—some one employed at the expense of the Government, to draw up their bills, resolutions, and so forth, why they can have very little to do themselves. As a matter of course, I take it for granted that gentlemen come here to serve their constituents and their country, and are prepared to devote their time to that service. With that view of the matter, I am opposed, utterly opposed, to the appointment of clerks for any committees.

Mr. COBB, (interrupting.) I should have said, whilst I was up just now, that if any committee of this House deserves a clerk, it is the Committee on Public Lands. If the labors to be performed this session are such as we have had to perform during former Congresses, I say, without fear of contradiction, that there are more cases to be considered by that committee than by any other committee of the House. I know that such was the case during the last Congress.

Sir, I am opposed to the general principle of the thing; but if a clerk is to be allowed to any committee, none deserves it better than the Committee on Public Lands, in view of the labors of that committee.

Mr. PRATT. I will admit that what the gentleman from Alabama says is true. The duties of that committee are doubtless arduous. I voted the other day in favor of allowing the Committee on Ways and Means a clerk, at four dollars per diem, because it is customary for that committee to have a clerk. I was opposed to allowing that committee a clerk at a salary of fifteen hundred dollars per annum. I have since had occasion to regret that I voted to allow them a clerk at all—even at four dollars a day.

I deem it the duty of every committee of this House to attend to the discharge of its legitimate functions. I have understood that members have sought places upon certain committees. If the members of the Committee on Public Lands have sought their places on that committee, they ought to be willing to discharge the duties incident thereto. I propose now in regard to that committee—and I know but little about it—indeed, I only know two gentlemen upon it, the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. COBB,] and the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DISNEY,] that if they have onerous duties to perform, and are unable to perform them, and will say so, there are other gentlemen in this House who will readily take their places. [Laughter.] I hope that the resolution will not pass.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Believing that the debate has taken up time enough, I call for the previous question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I trust that the gentleman will withdraw his call for the previous question until I make a single remark.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I withdraw my call for the previous question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I think that the Committee on Public Lands ought to have a clerk, but with restrictions.

Mr. DISNEY. With the gentleman's permission, I modify my resolution so as to limit its operation to the present session.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is my sincere conviction that any young man who has the least prospect before him in the world, and comes here and accepts a clerkship, is on the sure road to ruin. I regret that this is so. The amount paid these clerks while employed—four dollars per day—is a matter of no consideration; but you make loafers of them, as a general thing, when they are out of employment.

Mr. LETCHER. I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. DISNEY. Let us have a direct vote upon the resolution.

Mr. LETCHER. The sense of the House, in respect to the matter, can be as well tested on a motion to lay upon the table as in any other way. I demand the yeas and nays upon my motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered; 18 only voting in the affirmative.

The question was then taken, and the House refused to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. DISNEY. I call for the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The call for the previous question was then seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

At the request of Mr. ORR, the resolution, as modified, was read.

Mr. WALSH. I understood that the modification was to limit the pay to the time actually employed.

Mr. HOUSTON. That was put in the original resolution.

The question was then taken upon the adoption of the resolution as modified, and there were, upon a division, yeas 101; noes not counted.

So the resolution was adopted.

Mr. HENN moved to reconsider the vote just taken, and also to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

DEATH OF HON. C. G. ATHERTON.

A message was here received from the Senate, by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., its Secretary, communicating to the House the following resolution passed by that body:

"Resolved unanimously, That the Senate deeply lament the recent death of the Hon. CHARLES GORDON ATHERTON, who, at the time of his decease, was a member of this body

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

NEW SERIES....No. 5.

from the State of New Hampshire; and tenders to his widow a sincere sympathy in this most afflictive bereavement."

"Ordered, That the Secretary communicate a copy of the foregoing resolution to the widow of the deceased, and, further, that he communicate these proceedings to the House of Representatives."

Mr. HIBBARD rose and said: Mr. Speaker, the tones of eloquent eulogy which announced the death of the illustrious statesman of Alabama have hardly ceased to linger in these halls ere the message from the Senate reminds us of the decease of an eminent member of that body—the Hon. CHARLES G. ATHERTON, of New Hampshire. And while I am glad to pay my humble tribute to his memory, the duty is yet sad and painful. It awakens anew our recollections of the public bereavement. It thrills, alas, but too keenly, in many hearts, the freshly sundered ties of domestic affection and personal friendship.

It was said by one of the gifted of ancient days, that no man's life should be accounted happy until it had ended. For we know not what clouds may darken the setting of the most brilliant meridian sun. Tried by this rule even, the life of ATHERTON must be deemed a most prosperous one. Learning, intellect, wealth, and distinction, all were his. His public career was one ascending series of honors, fairly won and worthily sustained. Quiet and unostentatious in private life, he enjoyed the respect and good will of all; while those so fortunate as to be numbered among his familiar friends, were bound to him as with hooks of steel. He was a gentleman of unsullied probity, and a high sense of personal honor. No serious illness is known ever to have afflicted him, until that fearful stroke which consigned him so suddenly, though with little apparent agony, to an untimely grave—retaining his entire consciousness for most of the time until the final moment. He knew from the first attack that his end was nigh. He met it like one prepared. Calmly, and without fear,

"—he sank to rest,
By all his country's wishes blest."

The family of Atherton has long been noted in New Hampshire for talent and accomplishment. But it has become extinct, in the direct line, with the subject of these remarks.

CHARLES GORDON ATHERTON was born at Amherst, in Hillsborough county, New Hampshire, July 4, 1804. He graduated at Cambridge University, with unusual reputation for ability and scholarship, at an early age. He studied law in the office of his distinguished father, Hon. Charles H. Atherton, was admitted to the bar at the age of twenty-one, and established himself in business in the town of Dunstable, now Nashua, in his native county. In his profession his success was decided, and his rise rapid. His mind clear, logical, and strong, with the ballast of excellent common sense, the adornments of a quick fancy and a cultivated taste, was admirably adapted to the studies and the labors of the law. So far as was permitted by the interruptions of political life he continued to the last in the active practice of his chosen profession. As a lawyer, it is not too much to say of him that he stood in the front rank of a bar which has always been fruitful of legal strength and acumen. His place was side by side with such peers as Pierce, Woodbury, Parker, Bartlett, and Bell—following, not unworthily, in the path of those earlier "giants of the law," Webster, Mason, and Jeremiah Smith.

In 1830, if I rightly remember, he commenced his public career as a representative from Nashua in the New Hampshire Legislature. In this office he was continued for a period of several years. He was Speaker of the House of Representatives for the last three of those years. In March, 1837, he was chosen one of the Representatives of New Hampshire, in the National Congress, where he remained for three successive terms. At the expiration of that period he was transferred to the Senate of the United States for the term of six years. In November, 1852, he was again elected to the Senate, and occupied a seat in that body during the Executive session succeeding the inauguration of President Pierce, in March last.

At a term of court held at Manchester, in November, Mr. ATHERTON was present, actively engaged in professional business. While standing in his place in the bar conversing with another counselor, respecting the disposition of a cause, he was stricken with paralysis. He was carried to his rooms, where he lingered a few days in a lethargic state, and, on the 15th of November he breathed his last.

I shall not, Mr. Speaker, dwell in detail upon the events of his public life. They are part and parcel of the records of the legislative bodies in which he served. As was said the other day of the lamented King, he was a party man. With his earnestness of conviction, and decided habits of action, he could not have been otherwise. But he was free from that spirit of acrimony which often adds asperity to the discussions and struggles of political life. He was slow to censure, and dealt not in harsh invective. The general character of his speech was clear, terse, and convincing, rather than impassioned or fervidly eloquent. But there were times when his lips seemed touched as with a coal from the very altar of truth, and poured forth "thoughts that breathe and words that burn." He was a statesman of the Jeffersonian school—a fair exponent of that political faith to which our State has been, for a long period of years, so firmly and uniformly devoted. He was a rigid economist of public finance, a strict observer of the provisions of the Constitution, strictly construed; a stern and unflinching defender of THE RIGHTS OF THE STATES. No feature of his political life was more distinctly marked than his active and uncompromising opposition to all assaults upon the rights and institutions of the several States; from what source soever they came, and to whatever quarter they were directed. Reproach and obloquy were liberally showered upon him for this cause, in times of excited sectional controversy. But it moved him not. Cool and self-reliant, confident of the future, and regardless of present consequences, he steadily pursued the path his judgment had marked out.

The timid good might stand aloof,
The sage might frown, yet bleached he not.

His straightforwardness of conduct commanded respect, if it did not always produce agreement. He trusted to time to make manifest the purity of his motives and the propriety of his acts. If it would not savor too much of partisan discussion for this occasion, I would say that the day of clear and triumphant vindication to which he looked forward HAS ALREADY COME.

But a few weeks ago, I saw him in the scene of his last professional labors. Of all those present there was no one who would not have been selected as the first probable victim of the great Destroyer as soon as he. Absorbed in professional engagements, his mind yet found time to dwell upon the anticipated duties of his senatorial station, to which he was proposing soon to repair—the chosen representative of his beloved State—largely honored with the friendship and confidence of the Chief Magistrate of the nation. A few days, and the tidings came that death had touched him with his palsying hand. Another interval of painful suspense, and we knew that he slept the sleep which knows no waking. "The silver cord was loosed; the golden bowl was broken; the pitcher was broken at the fountain." The mourners had gone about the streets, and he had gone to his long home.

"Can storied urn, or animated bust,
Back to its mansion call the fleeting breath?
Can honor's voice provoke the silent dust,
Or flattery soothe the dull, cold ear of death?"

It was not his fate to waste by slow decay. No gradually-advancing decrepitude, nor torturing malady, nor faltering of the outworn faculties gave premonition of his approaching end. Suddenly and without warning, "ere his eye was dimmed, or his natural force abated," he was stricken down in the maturity of his intellect, the vigor of his manhood, and the pride of place and power. His voice will be heard no more in yonder Hall.

His familiar presence will no longer adorn the social circle, nor gladden again the bereaved one who mourns his loss in the pleasant home his departure has made desolate. But his name will live among us in the recollections of his well-spent life. His cherished memory will beam and brighten with an effulgence not soon to fade away.

In conclusion, sir, I offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, unanimously, That, as a testimonial of respect for the memory of CHARLES G. ATHERTON, late a member of the United States Senate, now deceased, the members and officers of this House will go into mourning, and wear crape on the left arm for thirty days.

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to communicate a copy of these resolutions to the widow of the deceased.

Resolved, As a further mark of respect, that the House do now adjourn.

The resolutions having been read,

Mr. ORR rose, and said:

Mr. SPEAKER: I rise, sir, to second the resolutions of my honorable friend from New Hampshire. I have been a participant in the felicitations resulting from the political triumphs of New Hampshire's sons; and now, when the heavy hand of affliction sorely oppresses them, I come to mingle my tears with theirs, and to soothe their grief by heartfelt sympathy in their sorrow.

The death of Mr. ATHERTON—so sudden and untimely—is well calculated to arrest our attention, and teaches us how precarious and evanescent is life and its pursuits. When the heart, with all its glowing affections—the intellect, with all its noble powers—are congealed by the chilling embrace of death, what a striking illustration is presented of the emptiness of worldly renown and the vanity of earthly honor.

But yesterday he was in our midst, full of life, and hope, and promise; enjoying physical and intellectual vigor—modestly wearing the high honors of his loving and beloved State—a brilliant senatorial career opening to his view—a proud intellect, enriched with the treasures of learning and experience—sustained by a confiding, generous constituency, and with the laudable ambition of a noble heart fully gratified, how hopeful and promising to him was the future.

But to-day the scene is sadly changed. The fires of his intellect are quenched; his body is cold and lifeless; his future blighted; and all his hopes, and those of cherished friends, blasted. He is dead!

The living and the dead statesmen of New Hampshire have imbued her loyal sons with pure sentiments of justice and constitutional right, and wherever patriotism has demanded a service or a sacrifice in the face of hostile armaments, or in the councils of the country, the call upon her sons has been never made in vain. That inflexibility and integrity of political purpose which signalizes the character of any people is, in a high degree, the result of the upright and fearless public conduct of those whose position, education, experience, and virtue designate them as the fit exemplars for popular imitation. Political licentiousness in public men soon devastates the morals of the people. But ATHERTON, WOODBURY, and a host of others whose genius has illuminated every page of her history, and whose names are already inscribed on the rolls of an honorable fame, have preserved the political morals and principles of New Hampshire uncorrupted in the past, and incorruptible, we trust, in the future.

Let the honest historian who toils for posterity exonerate the granite bound State from the suspicion of selfishness and venality. Let the honest historian tell our children with what fidelity she stood by the Constitution and its compromises. And finally, let the honest historian deal justly with the memory of CHARLES G. ATHERTON, by telling that no man lived within her borders who devoted his energies and talents more sedulously as a legislator and citizen than he to the prosperity of the whole country, and to the dissemination of elevated political ethics.

He knew no sectionalism—the Constitution was his chart. He was faithful to his own constituents, and yet his vision was broad enough to see, and his heart generous enough to concede, every right due his brethren in this great political household.

He illustrated the annals of his congressional career at an early day with an exposition of principles which has withstood the assault of time—"the only test of truth;" and if they had been sacredly observed our fraternal concord and domestic repose could not have been shaken or disturbed. It was bold and manly in him, and evinced the highest moral courage; and were I now called upon to indite the inscription on the plain granite obelisk which kind affection will rear to his memory, I would make it brief and simple:

THE MORTAL REMAINS OF THE AUTHOR OF ATTERTON'S RESOLUTIONS.

This fact, so honorable to his head and heart, which the epitaph would commemorate, will live in the records of his country, though the shaft that points heavenwards from his mouldering clay may crumble into dust.

The loss of such a man, sir, at any time is a national calamity. It is especially heavy now, when death has stricken down in a few brief years so many "stars of the first magnitude" from the political firmament.

If the ordering of human events had been committed to frail man he would have been spared to adorn the high place he so worthily filled. But for the goodness and justice of the Ruler of nations we might murmur at the sad decree, when we remember the tempestuous sea through which we have passed; and now that the sun of domestic peace has just arisen, with genial rays, to warm fraternal affection sadly chilled, he is suddenly summoned away without partaking the felicity of restored friendship which he contributed so much to consummate."

I will not invade the hallowed precincts of that grief-stricken family circle where he so lately stood as a shining center, dispensing light and joy; but now, alas! made so dark and cheerless. Time alone furnishes a soothing balm where the heart bleeds. Outside of that circle there is one whose sensibilities have been deeply wrung by the event. Our honored Chief Magistrate has lost one of his earliest and truest friends. The arm which he had fondly hoped to lean upon in the trying responsibilities of his situation is now cold and pulseless—that tongue, always devoted to truth, upon which he trusted to vindicate his motives and his honor, is silent in death. The learning and wisdom which were to counsel him in his troubles have sunk, like bright lights, to rise no more. Oh, what sad havoc has not death recently made with those around whom the President's affections have been entwined! Let not the solemn admonition be lost upon him or upon ourselves.

The question was then taken, and the resolutions were unanimously adopted.

The House accordingly adjourned till to-morrow at twelve o'clock.

REGENTS OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

In compliance with the provisions of the act for the establishment of the Smithsonian Institution "for the increase and diffusion of knowledge among men," the Speaker, on the 14th day of December, appointed Messrs. JAMES MEACHAM of Vermont, WILLIAM H. ENGLISH of Indiana, and DAVID STUART of Michigan, the Regents of the said Institution on the part of the House.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 20, 1853.

Prayer by the Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of Thomas T. Fauntleroy and others, officers of the Army, and the petition of W. A. Nicholls and others, officers of the Army, praying an increase of compensation; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SHIELDS presented five petitions from officers of the Army, praying an increase of compensation; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of Albert Hart, praying an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, the memorial and accompanying documents of Franklin Chase, late Collector at the port of Tampico, praying to be paid his proportion of the proceeds of the sale of the schooner Oregon, seized at Tampico during the late war with Mexico, for a violation of the revenue laws; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WADE presented the petition of E. G. Chambers and others, proposing to construct a wagon road between the Mississippi river and the Pacific ocean, upon certain conditions; which was referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. HAMLIN presented the petition of Sarah Harmon, formerly widow of Timothy Murray, who was killed in the military service of the United States during the last war with Great Britain, praying to be allowed half pay and bounty land; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SEWARD presented the petition of citizens of Rochester, New York, remonstrating against the ratification of an international copy-right treaty with Great Britain; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Also, the petition of the Oneida Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, praying the recognition of the independence of Liberia; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Also, a petition of the inhabitants of Detroit, citizens of the United States, praying for aid in the construction of a ship canal around the Falls of Niagara; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, a petition of the Central Canal Company of Indiana, asking for a grant of land in aid of the construction of the said canal; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WELLER. I desire to present a memorial of officers of the United States Army serving in California, praying for an increase of the compensation of officers and soldiers on duty on the Pacific coast. I may be allowed to say that I sincerely hope it will receive the early and favorable consideration of the Committee on Military Affairs. It is utterly impossible for United States officers to subsist on the pay that is now allowed them under the law. I believe that a colonel of one of the regiments on the frontier receives less compensation than is paid to a brick-mason in the city of San Francisco. I think it requires as much mental and physical ability to command a regiment on the frontier as to construct a brick wall. I believe there is less paid to a captain than to a common hod-carrier; and that a lieutenant receives less compensation than a city scavenger. I do sincerely hope that a legislative act will apply the appropriate remedy. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER presented a petition of a committee of the clerks in the Executive Departments at Washington, praying an increase of the salaries of the clerks, messengers, packers, laborers, and watchmen employed in those Departments; which was referred to the Committee on Retrenchment.

Also, the petition of Mary A. M. Jones, widow of Brevet Major General Roger Jones, late Adjutant General of the Army, praying a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin, presented the petition of Alexander Waugh, administrator of George Waugh, an officer in the militia during the revolutionary war, praying a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, the petition of Benjamin Burton, administrator of Major Burton, of the Army of the Revolution, praying an increase of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FITZPATRICK presented a petition of the Alabama and Mississippi River Railroad Company, and a petition of the Alabama and Tennessee River Railroad Company, praying to be allowed a credit for the duties on rails to be imported for those railroads; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FISH presented three petitions of citizens of the State of New York, praying an extension of the patent granted to Uri Emmons, for a planing machine; which were referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Also, a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of New York, complaining of the duties, &c., imposed on the commerce of the United States with the Baltic sea, and asking the adoption of measures by the Government of the United States, with the view of abating such imposition; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. CLAYTON presented the petition of Henry La Reintrie, praying compensation for services as interpreter and acting secretary of legation, at St. Jago de Chili, and as bearer of dispatches; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, presented the memorial of the Mayor and Aldermen of the city of Dubuque, praying a donation of a lot of ground in that city set apart as a cemetery; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. ADAMS. I have been requested to present the memorial of the Mississippi Baptist State Convention, addressed to the President of the United States and the Senate, asking that steps may be taken by which religious liberty, or liberty of conscience, may be secured to citizens of the United States resident in the different countries with which we have intercourse, to the same extent that the citizens of other countries have in the United States. I had the honor at the last session to introduce a petition from the same respectable religious denomination, and it was referred to the Committee on Commerce. I ask that this memorial may have the same reference.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. JOHNSON presented the memorial of certain officers of the United States Army, praying for an increase of compensation; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JOHNSON also presented the petition of Pierre Menard and Joseph Bogy, for advances made by them to the Illinois regiment, in the service of Virginia, in the years 1779 and 1780; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. BRIGHT presented the petition of William W. Gitt, as assignee of lost land warrants, praying the passage of an act authorizing the Commissioner of the General Land Office to issue other warrants in his favor; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. PRATT presented the memorial of Captain William Chapman and other officers of the Army, praying additional compensation; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BENJAMIN presented the petition of Charles Derbigny and others, praying the confirmation of their land claim to a tract of land situated in the Bayou des Allemands, in the south-east land district of Louisiana; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Also, the petition of Hewitt, Norton & Company, and other merchants of New Orleans, praying an extension of the port of New Orleans; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BRODHEAD presented documents in relation to the claim of the administrator of the estate of the surviving partner of the late firm of Curtis & Peter Grubb, praying the payment of a certain final-settlement certificate; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Also, the memorial of Margaret Barnitz, only daughter and heir of Lieutenant Colonel David Grier, praying commutation and the payment of moneys due her late father, on account of advances made by him during the revolutionary war; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Also, the memorial of Frances Ann McCauley, praying remuneration for losses and expenses incurred by her late husband, while United States consul at Tripoli; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BADGER submitted additional documents relating to the claim of Samuel Mickum, which, with his memorial on the files of the Senate, were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SLIDELL presented the memorial of J. A. Ragan, proposing a plan to reclaim the inundated lands upon the Mississippi and its tributaries; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, the petition of Joseph Reynes, representing that his father purchased a certain tract of land of the General Intendancy of the Province of Louisiana, in 1803, the title to which has been decided by the Supreme Court not to be in him, and praying relief; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GWIN presented the memorial of the Rev. John Reynolds, chaplain in the army, stationed in California, praying to be allowed extra pay and traveling expenses; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of G. A. Dabney and others, mechanics enlisted in the service of the United States, praying to be allowed for transportation from California to the Atlantic States of the Union; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Also, the petition of Isaac Swain, praying remuneration for losses caused by the failure of the agents of Government to comply with the terms of a contract with him for the transportation of certain commissariat stores from Valparaiso to Benicia; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Also, the petition of Martha L. Downes, widow of Lieutenant Downes, commander of the United States schooner Grampus at the time she was lost, praying that the same allowance of pay money may be made to the widows and orphans of persons belonging to that vessel as have been made in similar cases; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, presented a memorial of the packers in the General Land Office, praying an increase of compensation; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Also, the memorial of Thomas S. Russell, praying compensation for services during the war with the Seminole Indians in Florida in 1836; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the memorial of a convention of the people of Iowa, asking a grant of lands for the Fort Madison, Keosauqua, and Bloomfield railroad, Iowa; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. FISH, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the petition of Thomas M. Tayloe, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to a second reading.

The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill, for the relief of Francis B. Stockton; which was read and passed to a second reading.

The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for the relief of Joseph Gideon; which was read and passed to a second reading.

The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill for the relief of Joseph Mitchell; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. CHASE, from the Committee on Claims, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill, for the relief of the legal representatives of Major Caleb Swan, deceased; which was read and passed to a second reading.

The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred a bill for the relief of Benjamin S. Roberts, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; which was agreed to.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. SHIELDS gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a joint resolution, authorizing the President of the United States to confer the title of lieutenant general by brevet for eminent services; and

A bill for the benefit of locators and purchasers of swamp lands.

Mr. STUART gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill granting to the State of Michigan the right of way and a portion of the public lands to aid in the construction of the Oakland and Ottawa railroad, with branches from Corunna and Grand Rapids to Mackinaw Straits, and from thence to the Montreal river.

Mr. DIXON gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill for the relief of the heirs at law of Lieutenant Charles A. Wickliffe, Jr.

Mr. BAYARD. I give notice that I intend to ask leave to introduce a bill to provide for the execution of the public printing, engraving, and binding. I do not intend that such bill shall affect the arrangements for the public printing of the present Congress.

Mr. FOOT gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill making a grant of public lands to the several States and Territories of the Union for the benefit of indigent insane persons.

Mr. HAMLIN gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to remunerate the States of Maine and Massachusetts for lands taken to satisfy stipulations of the treaty of Washington.

Mr. FITZPATRICK gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to authorize the payment of certain claims for losses sustained during hostilities with the Creek and Seminole Indians in the years 1836 and 1837.

Mr. BRIGHT gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to amend the third section of an act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1854, approved March 3, 1853.

Mr. CHASE gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to divide the State of Ohio into two judicial districts.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to sell the lands heretofore reserved for military purposes and the use of Indian tribes in Iowa; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HAMLIN, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to provide for the ascertainment and satisfaction of the claims of American citizens for spoiliations committed by the French prior to the 31st of July, 1801.

The bill was read a first time.

Mr. HAMLIN. I now ask that the bill be read a second time, and that it, together with the papers on the files of the Senate relating to the subject, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HUNTER, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to extend the warehousing system, by establishing private bonded warehouses, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The bill was ordered to be printed.

Mr. EVERETT, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill making provision for the accommodation of the Courts of the United States and their officers, in the district of Massachusetts; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. JOHNSON, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill granting to the State of Arkansas the right of way, and making a grant of land to aid in the construction of a railroad from Gaine's Landing, or some point on the Mississippi river, to the Texas boundary, near Fulton, in Arkansas; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill was ordered to be printed.

He also asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to grant to the States of Arkansas, Louisiana, and Missouri, the right of way and alternate sections of the public lands, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Shreveport, in Louisiana, via Washington, Fort Smith, and Van Buren, in Arkansas, and by Springfield and Independence, to St. Joseph's, in Missouri; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill was ordered to be printed.

Mr. EVANS, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to indemnify the State of South Carolina for money expended for the United States in the war with the Seminole Indians in Florida; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to provide for the unpaid claims of the officers and soldiers of the Virginia State and Continental lines of the revolutionary army; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. BADGER asked and obtained the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a bill for the relief of M. K. Warrington and C. St. John Chubb, executors of Captain Lewis Warrington; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

OPEN EXECUTIVE SESSIONS.

Mr. CHASE submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the following rule be adopted for the regulation of proceedings in the Senate, and that so much of the 39th, 40th, and 41st rules as may be inconsistent with the rule hereby established be rescinded:

All sessions and all proceedings of the Senate shall be public and open, except when matters communicated in confidence by the President shall be received, and in such other cases as the Senate by resolution, from time to time, may specially order.

RIGHTS OF CITIZENSHIP.

Mr. SEWARD submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary inquire whether any provision by law is necessary to secure the rights of citizenship to children of American citizens born in foreign countries.

BAKER A. JAMESON.

Mr. CASS. I desire to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That Baker A. Jameson, who is now doing duty as a messenger, be paid in that capacity so long as he may be continued by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

I would merely observe, that the young man named in that resolution was brought up in the Senate, and has behaved exceedingly well. His term as a page has expired, and he is now employed in doing duty at one of the doors. The only object of the resolution is to allow the Sergeant-at-Arms to pay him while he continues to be thus employed. I think that those who have been faithful in the service of the Senate should be promoted when there is any opportunity of doing it with propriety, for the sake of an example and encouragement to our employees.

Mr. PRATT. I concur altogether in what the Senator from Michigan has said; but there is one difficulty to which the Senator has not adverted. It is, sir, that at present we have no fund from which we can legitimately order the payment to be made. The contingent fund of the Senate has not yet been appropriated, and we have no means of paying this officer. If I understand the resolution, it is that so long as he shall be employed he shall be paid; and being a direction that he shall be paid, it is a direction to do that which we have no authority to do, so long as we have no fund with which to make the payment.

Mr. CASS. I do not conceive that that is any objection at all. We very frequently pass bills providing for the payment of claims out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. This will be in the same situation with all other claims before the Senate to be paid when there is an appropriation. That is the only effect of it. I am perfectly willing, however, in order to remove the objection of the honorable Senator from Maryland, to insert in the body of the resolution that the money shall be paid when there is an appropriation which can be used for the purpose; though, without those words, it will stand on the same footing as any other payment which is authorized to be made.

Mr. WALKER. I have no objection to the resolution; but there seems to me to be something curious about it. If this young man is employed, why is there not power now to pay him? If he be a supernumerary, how does it happen?

Mr. CASS. The necessity for the resolution is, that he is employed for a special service. It is a temporary employment for a temporary purpose, and the resolution merely authorizes him to be paid while he is employed in that capacity by the Sergeant-at-Arms. That is all.

The resolution was agreed to.

CHEAP OCEAN POSTAGE.

Mr. SUMNER offered the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be directed to inquire, whether the present charges on letters carried by the ocean steamers are not unnecessarily large and burdensome, operating as a check upon commerce, as a barrier between the two hemispheres, and especially as a grievous tax upon European emigrants seeking a home in the United States, and whether something may not be done, and if so, what, to secure the benefits of cheap ocean postage?

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the report of the Superintendent of the Census; which, on motion by Mr. ADAMS, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.

The Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, which was submitted by Mr. SEWARD on the 5th instant; and it was agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not in his opinion incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to the Senate any correspondence that may have taken place between the Government of the United States and his Majesty the King of the Sandwich Islands.

RAILROAD TO THE PACIFIC.

On motion by Mr. CHASE, the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, submitted by him on the 14th instant:

Resolved, That the Committee on Roads and Canals be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing for the construction of a railroad from some point on the western line of one of the existing States to some point on the eastern line of California.

Mr. GWIN. Inasmuch as that resolution will probably lead to some discussion in reference to the committee to which the subject ought properly to be committed, I hope the Senate will postpone its further consideration until to-morrow, and proceed now to the consideration of Executive business. There are a number of important Executive communications on the table from the President of the United States. I move, therefore, that the consideration of the resolution be postponed until to-morrow, in order that we may proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

Mr. CHASE. I should like to know what objection there can be to the reference proposed to be given to the subject by the resolution now before the Senate? If the Committee on Roads and Canals is constituted for any purpose, it seems to me to be the very committee to which an inquiry of this sort should be directed. I hope the resolution will be disposed of at present, and not postponed to a future day.

Mr. GWIN. The Committee on Territories has heretofore reported on the same subject, and therefore it was that I presumed there might be discussion as to the proper reference. I do not myself intend to participate in any such discussion; but I presume some discussion will arise as to the appropriate committee to take charge of the subject. I hope my motion will be agreed to. It is that this subject be passed over for the present, in order that we may proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I wish to state, that so far as the Committee on Territories is concerned, I have no objection to the resolution. I am very willing that the Committee on Roads and Canals should take charge of the subject, if they so desire.

Mr. GWIN. I insist on my motion to postpone the further consideration of this resolution.

The motion was agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF A MAP.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I wish to withdraw from the files of the Senate a map of the public survey of a reservation adjoining the city of Chicago. The map was filed here as the basis of action by this Government in authorizing the widening of the harbor. I wish it withdrawn merely in order to have a copy of it made, so that it may be known there what is the meaning of the bill which was passed, and then I shall bring back the original, and place it upon the files again. I move that leave be granted to withdraw the map referred to.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. GWIN, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message was received from the President of the United States, transmitting certain documents in answer to a resolution of the Senate of the 6th of April last, requesting information in regard to certain transactions between Captain Hollins, of the Cyane, and the authorities of San Juan de Nicaragua; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

Also, a message communicating a copy of the correspondence relative to the claim of the brig General Armstrong; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

INDIAN LAWS.

Mr. SEBASTIAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be instructed to consider the expediency of providing by law for the appointment of a commission to prepare a code of laws for the government of the country in possession of the various Indian tribes within the limits of the United States, upon the basis of the existing "Intercourse laws," and other laws of the United States, applying to the different portions of the Indian country, containing in such code all that is valuable in existing laws, and rejecting all that is useless or obsolete, supplying all existing deficiencies in such laws, carefully defining the jurisdiction of the different courts of the United States over the Indian country, so as to prevent conflict of jurisdiction, or exercise of doubtful power, and especially designating all offenses to be punished under such laws; and report such code to Congress for its final action, in order that it may take the place of all existing laws upon such subject.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 20, 1853.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m.

Prayer by the Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE HARBOR OF MOBILE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the War Department, transmitting, in compliance with the resolution of the House of the 12th instant, which called upon the Secretary of War "to report to the House any report or plan existing in his Department, showing the cost and practicability of deepening the harbor of Mobile," a letter of the Chief Engineer, inclosing a report of Major William H. Chase, of the Corps of Engineers, giving the information desired.

Mr. PHILIPS. I move that that communication and the accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

PRIVILEGE OF THE HALL.

The SPEAKER. If it be the pleasure of the House, I would be glad to communicate to it the fact that, for the better protection of the Doorkeeper in the discharge of his duties, and to prevent the inconvenience and difficulty which frequently arises in the discharge of those duties, believing that the power to do so was full and complete in me, as the Presiding Officer of this body, I have directed the Doorkeeper to open a register, and to cause to be entered therein the names of such persons, other than members, as are entitled to the privilege of a place upon this floor. Understanding that some question has arisen in regard to the power of the Speaker so to direct, I shall be pleased to have the sense of the House on the subject. Those who have been here with me know very well the trouble that the Doorkeeper of the House has had in reference to questions growing out of claims to the privilege of the Hall by persons not members of Congress.

Mr. EWING. I submit the motion, that the register alluded to by the Speaker, be ordered to be kept by the Doorkeeper.

Mr. HOUSTON. I understand that the proposed register will not at all vary the rules of the House.

The SPEAKER. It will not vary the rules in the slightest degree.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is simply, as I understand, a means designed for the purpose of enforcing those rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had no doubt at all that the power was in his hand to direct as he has done; but as it has been questioned, he would be pleased to have the sense of the House on the subject.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. EWING, and it was agreed to.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONER OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE.

Mr. RUSSELL from the Committee on Printing, to whom the subject was referred, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That five hundred copies of the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, with the accompanying documents, be printed for the use of said office.

The resolution was adopted.

ELIJAH BEEBEE.

Mr. EASTMAN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill for the relief of the widow and heirs of Elijah Beebee; which was read by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and ordered to be printed.

NEW STEAM FRIGATES.

Mr. BOCOCK, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill to authorize the construction of six first-class steam frigates, and for other purposes; which was read by its title, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

FAILURE OF STEAM FRIGATES.

Mr. BOCOCK. I have in my hand a report of certain officers appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, to investigate the causes of the failure of certain steam frigates. The Committee on Naval Affairs, before whom the information has been laid, have considered it of sufficient importance to authorize the printing of the same for the use of the House, in order that they may know, when that subject shall come up for their investigation, the causes of such failure. By instruction of the committee, I therefore move that the report be printed.

The question was then taken, and the motion was agreed to.

ISAAC T. SIMONTON.

Mr. MACE, from the Committee on Claims, reported a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Isaac T. Simonton, deceased; which was read by its title, and referred to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and ordered to be printed.

MADISON PARDON.

Also, a bill for the relief of Madison Pardon; which was read by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and ordered to be printed.

THOMAS B. KING.

On motion by Mr. FULLER, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the petition and papers of Thomas B. King, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. FULLER, it was Ordered, That the same committee be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of sundry citizens of the State of New York, and that the same be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

CHAIRMAN OF THE LIBRARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. BENTON. I have to give the same information, with respect to the Library Committee, that I had with respect to the Committee on Military Affairs. Being the first named as chairman of the Library Committee, the members of that committee have been kind enough to release me from the duties of chairman, although I still remain a member of the committee, and elected Mr. CHANDLER, of Pennsylvania, in my place.

PURCHASE OF MOUNT VERNON.

The SPEAKER. The question first in order is the motion to lay upon the table the resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Interior, (provided first he obtain the consent of the State of Virginia,) to contract with the proprietor or proprietors for the purchase of the estate of Mount Vernon.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. Were the yeas and nays ordered upon the motion?

The SPEAKER. They were not.

Mr. BAYLY. Then I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I ask my friend from Virginia if he will not withdraw his demand for the yeas and nays, and then let us, by common consent, send this subject to a committee, so that they may bring in a bill?

Mr. BAYLY. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I am willing to oblige the gentleman; but I want to kill this thing in the most emphatic manner possible.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TAYLOR. I ask my friend from Virginia to withdraw his motion for a moment, to allow me to make a short statement, which I am authorized to make by the proprietor of the estate of Mount Vernon.

Mr. BAYLY. No, sir.

The question was then taken on laying the resolution upon the table; and there were—yeas 88, nays 85; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Benton, Boccock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Brooks, Lewis D. Campbell, Chamberlain, Clingman, Cobb, Cox, Craig, Dawson, Dean, Dowdell, Dunbar, Eastman, Edgerton, Ewing, Fuller, Gamble, Giddings, Goode, Green, Grow, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hastings, Hens, Hibbard, Houston, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Kidwell, Kittredge, Lamb, Latham, Leitcher, Lindsey, Macdonald, McMullin, McQueen, Mace, Macy, Maxwell, Mayall, Morrison, Nichols, Orr, Packer, Peckham, Bishop Perkins, Phelps, Powell, Pratt, Richardson, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Ruffin, Sapp, Seymour, Shaw, Singleton, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, William R. Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Straub, Andrew Stuart, Wade, Walsh, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, and Hendrick B. Wright—88.

NAYS.—Messrs. Abernethy, Aiken, Willis Allen, Appleton, Ball, Benson, Bugg, Carpenter, Chandler, Chase, Chastain, Clark, Cook, Corwin, Crocker, Cullom, Curtis, Cutting, John G. Davis, Dent, Dick, Drum, Eddy, Edmunds, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Florence, Franklin, Greenwood, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Hendricks, Hill, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Knox, Kurtz, Lane, Lilly, Lindley, McCulloch, Meacham, Middleswarth, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Morgan, Noble, Norton, Parker, Peck, Pennington, John Perkins, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, David Ritchie, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Seward, Simmons, Sollers, Hester L. Stevens, John L. Taylor, Tracy, Trout, Tweed, Vail, Walbridge, Warren, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburne, Wells, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Zolliecoffer—85.

So the resolution was laid upon the table.

Pending the announcement of the vote—

Mr. STRAUB said: I understand the object of this resolution is for the purpose of assisting a few individuals in a speculative way; but for patriotic purposes, I vote aye.

Mr. PENNINGTON. If I had been in the bar when my name was called, I should have voted aye.

Mr. KIDWELL. If I had been in the bar when my name was called, I should have voted aye.

Mr. BAYLY. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was laid on the table, and to lay that motion upon the table.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BAYLY. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I move to reconsider the vote just taken.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CAMPBELL,] having voted in the majority, moves to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was laid upon the table.

Mr. DEAN. I move to lay that motion upon the table.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and the result was—yeas 97, nays 84; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. James C. Allen, Ashe, David J. Bailey, Thos. H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Benton, Bissell, Boccock, Boyce, Brooks, Caskie, Chamberlain, Chrisman, Churchill, Clingman, Cobb, Cox, Craig, Dawson, Dean, Dickinson, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Dunham, Eastman, Edgerton, Edmundson, Ewing, Faulkner, Fuller, Gamble, Giddings, Goode, Green, Grow, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hens, Hibbard, Houston, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kittredge, Lamb, Latham, Leitcher, Lindsey, Macdonald, McMullin, McQueen, Mace, Macy, Maxwell, Mayall, Morrison, Nichols, Orr, Packer, Peckham, Bishop Perkins, Phelps, Powell, Pratt, Richardson, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Ruffin, Sapp, Seymour, Shaw, Singleton, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Stuart, Frederick P. Stanton, Straub, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, Thurston, Vansant, Wade, Walker, Walsh, Walsh, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, and Hendrick B. Wright—97.

NAYS.—Messrs. Abernethy, Aiken, Willis Allen, Appleton, Ball, Benson, Bugg, Lewis D. Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Chase, Chastain, Clark, Cook, Corwin, Crocker, Cullom, Cummings, Cutting, John G. Davis, Dent, Dick, Drum, Eddy, Edmunds, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Flagler, Florence, Franklin, Greenwood, Aaron Harlan, Andrew J. Harlan, Harrison, Haven, Hendricks, Hill, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Knox, Kurtz, Lane, Lilly, Lindley, McCulloch, Meacham, Middleswarth, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Morgan, Noble, Norton, Parker, Peck, Pennington, John Perkins, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, David Ritchie, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Seward, Simmons, Sollers, Hester L. Stevens, John L. Taylor, Tracy, Trout, Tweed, Vail, Walbridge, Warren, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburne, Wells, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, and Zolliecoffer—84.

So the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

[Loud cries of "No, no."]

Mr. CLINGMAN. I hope the gentleman from Alabama will not insist upon his motion, but let the States be called for resolutions.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope the motion will prevail, and that the President's message will be taken up and referred. It is important that it should be referred, and that the several committees should have the subjects contained in it to act upon.

The question was taken, and the House refused to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union—ayes 64, noes 84.

CALL OF THE STATES FOR RESOLUTIONS.

The States were next called for resolutions, commencing with the State of New York.

CAPTAIN INGRAHAM.

Mr. DEAN presented a joint resolution—previous notice having been given—of the following title:

"Joint resolution of the thanks of Congress, and for the presentation of a sword to Captain Duncan N. Ingraham."

Mr. DEAN. As I presume no one desires to debate this resolution, I call the previous question upon its passage.

[Cries of "Oh, no!"]

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I move to refer the resolution to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must inform the gentleman from Virginia that the previous question having been demanded cuts off all motions to refer or to amend.

Mr. BAYLY. I am aware of that, but I hope the House will vote down the motion for the previous question, and then I will move to refer.

Several MEMBERS. Read the resolution.

The joint resolution was read through by the Clerk. It provides for presenting the thanks of Congress to Captain Ingraham, and the officers under his command, for their gallant conduct, on the second day of July last, in asserting and maintaining the rights of American citizens, whether native or adopted, and for the presentation of a sword to that officer.

Mr. DEAN. I now call the previous question upon the passage of the resolution.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that the resolution do lie upon the table.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I hope the resolution will be allowed to go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Several MEMBERS. Vote down the motion to lay on the table.

The question was taken, and the House refused to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. WALSH. I appeal to my colleague from New York, [Mr. DEAN,] to postpone the consideration of this matter for a few days, as another colleague of mine, [Mr. Lyons,] who is exceedingly desirous to take part in this little piece of Buncombe, is now absent. He wishes to move an addition to the resolution providing for presenting Captain Ingraham with a medal and a pair of epaulettes, and perhaps some other additions. [Laughter.] I hope the consideration of the matter will be postponed until he may be here.

Mr. DEAN. As several gentlemen around me seem desirous that this resolution should go to a committee, I will withdraw the motion for the previous question, and move to refer to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and upon that motion I demand the previous question.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. Is it in order to make remarks upon the subject of the resolution at the present time?

The SPEAKER. Not until the motion for the previous question is disposed of.

Mr. SMITH, of Alabama. I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Is that motion in order, having just been voted down?

The SPEAKER. It is—business having intervened.

Mr. SMITH. I call the yeas and nays upon my motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was taken; and the House refused to lay it upon the table.

The previous question was then seconded, and the main question ordered to be put; and, under the operation thereof, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

MINT IN THE CITY OF NEW YORK.

Mr. TWEED, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce the following bill; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means: "A bill to establish a Mint of the United States in the city of New York."

RELATIONS WITH DENMARK.

On motion by Mr. WALKER, it was

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to the House, as far as the public interest may permit, the state of the negotiations between this country and Denmark in relation to the imposition of "sound dues" upon our commerce to the Baltic, together with such correspondence as may have passed between the two nations upon that subject.

PROOFS IN PENSION CASES.

Mr. HUGHES offered the following joint resolution; which was read twice, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions: "A joint resolution in relation to proofs in pension cases."

RIGHT OF CITIZENSHIP.

Mr. CHANDLER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be, and it is hereby, instructed to inquire whether any, and if any, what legislation is necessary to secure the right of citizenship to children born out of the United States, whose parents, at the time of such births, are citizens of the United States, and that the committee report at as early a day as possible, by bill or otherwise.

The resolution was adopted.

HOMESTEAD BILL.

Mr. GROW. I desire to offer a substitute for House bill No. 37—the homestead bill—and to have it referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and printed.

The SPEAKER. Is the bill for which the gentleman desires to offer a substitute, before the body in any form?

Mr. GROW. The bill is before the House in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. RICHARDSON. It is not before the House.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not before the House at this time for action.

Mr. GROW. I desire only to introduce the substitute, and have it printed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the substitute and have it printed.

[Cries of "Object!"]

Mr. GROW. I appeal to gentlemen to allow me to introduce the substitute, and have it printed.

Mr. SAPP. I object.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Has the gentleman from Pennsylvania given notice of his bill?

Mr. GROW. I have.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then the gentleman has a right to introduce the bill under that notice.

Mr. GROW. Notice has been given of this bill, and I only ask that I may be allowed to move it as a substitute, and that it may be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and printed.

The SPEAKER. It is objected to.

Mr. GROW. I again appeal to the gentlemen to withdraw their objections, and allow the substitute to be referred and printed.

Several MEMBERS. "No, no," and "object."

BOUNTY LANDS.

Mr. FLORENCE. In pursuance of previous notice, I beg leave to introduce a bill "extending the provisions of the several laws granting bounty land to the officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States."

The bill was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. FLORENCE. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, which is, I believe, the appropriate committee to which to send it.

Mr. COBB. I object to that reference, and move to refer the bill to the Committee on Public Lands. The gentleman has already referred a thick batch of petitions upon this subject to that committee, and I presume that the bill ought to have the same reference.

Mr. FLORENCE. I certainly have no objection to the reference of the bill to the Committee on Public Lands, although I confess I fear it is digging a grave for it, and covering it up pretty well; but I believe that it ought to receive, and will receive, full and fair consideration at the hands of any committee of this House. I am sure I have no feeling in the matter. I believe that any committee to which the bill may be referred will report favorably upon it, and I am very willing that it shall go to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. COBB. I am sorry that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has thought proper to predict that the reference of his bill to the Committee on Public Lands would be digging a grave for it, and covering it up.

Mr. FLORENCE. I said I feared that would be the result.

Mr. COBB. I understood the gentleman to say that it would be so. Does not the gentleman know that the original bounty land bill came from that committee, that it was acted upon by that committee favorably, and reported back to the House? What right has he then to make such an assertion relative to the action of the committee? Why, sir, he has ventured to refer all his petitions upon this subject to us, thus giving us all possible light upon it, and now he seeks to give the bill itself a different direction.

Mr. FLORENCE. I trust I may be permitted to make a few remarks, by way of explanation. There is certainly a great deal of force in the argument of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. WHEELER. I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. What is the point of order which the gentleman desires to raise?

Mr. WHEELER. I wish to know how many times a gentleman is allowed to speak upon one subject?

The SPEAKER. If any other gentleman had desired to speak the Chair would have assigned the floor to him; but no other gentleman rising to speak, the Chair, in conformity with the practice of the House, recognized the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FLORENCE. If the gentleman wishes to advocate the bill, I will yield him the floor for that purpose. I have no desire to make a speech upon the bill now. I shall probably make a speech in favor of it when it comes before the House for action. I merely wish to say, in explanation, if it may be considered any apology for the remark which I made, that I had forgotten that the petitions upon this subject had been referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and I was fearful that the immense amount of business referred to that committee would prevent this bill from receiving that consideration to which it is entitled. I certainly did not desire nor intend to reflect upon the character of that committee for integrity, candor, and industry; and I am very willing, without detaining the House further, to make the motion, if it has not been already made, that the proposition be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, with instructions to report favorably upon it, if that be in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraws his motion to refer to the Committee on Military Affairs, and moves that the proposition be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, with instructions to report favorably thereon.

Several MEMBERS. Let us have the motion without the instructions.

Mr. FLORENCE. I modify my motion so as to strike out that portion of it in regard to instructions.

The question was then taken, and the proposition was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

CREDIT TO IMPORTERS OF RAILROAD IRON.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I ask leave to introduce a bill entitled "A bill to give credit to importers of railroad iron;" of which previous notice has been given.

There was no objection, and the bill was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. CLINGMAN. This is a subject, Mr. Speaker, which we frequently had before the last Congress, but which was not acted upon. I do not know what is the present feeling of this House, but I think there is a strong necessity for the passage of such a law at this time. In the last Congress it may, perhaps, be remembered that the proposition failed by a single vote on one occasion. At that time there were five members out of the House who had promised me on the previous day that they would be present to vote for the proposition. I only mention this fact to show it was a mere accident that a provision similar to the one of the bill I submit did not take effect at the last Congress.

You will also recollect, Mr. Speaker, that during the last Congress we allowed several companies credit on the terms proposed in this bill; but we did not succeed in passing any general law. It is a simple matter, and I presume that every member of the House has an opinion upon it now.

I beg leave to remind gentlemen, that within the last eighteen months there has been an enormous rise in the price of railroad iron. Less than two years ago it could be had for forty dollars per ton in this country, after paying all the duties and charges, and now it is worth nearly eighty dollars per ton to the consumer here. The consequence is, that many of the States and companies which began to execute works with sufficient capital two years ago, find, owing to this great rise, that it is difficult, if not impossible, for them to proceed.

I also understand, Mr. Speaker, that the money is not needed at this time in the Treasury. We have a large surplus on hand. My bill proposes a credit of four years. In all probability at the end of that period, the Government may need the money very much. If the duty goes into the Treasury now, instead of what I propose, it will be expended before that time, when it may be wanted.

I think therefore, as a financial measure, it would be a wise policy to throw the receipt of this money four years ahead, leaving the present surplus in the Treasury to be exhausted, for the construction of national vessels, or for any other purpose which the House may propose; and if it turns out that at the end of four years, we are involved in some war—and we are getting to be a war-like people, and need all the means we can lay our hands upon—this money will come in very opportunely. I think it would have been well, perhaps, for the Secretary of the Treasury to have recommended this as one of the means by which to get rid of the surplus revenue which we are now receiving from year to year. If the proposition which he has made in his report should be adopted and carried into effect, the reduction of the revenue would not take place until a year from next January, and, in the mean time, there will have been a large accumulation. I propose, then, with a view of trying the sense of the House, to move—

Mr. SKELTON, (interrupting.) I would ask the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLING-

MAN] whether it would not be well to include in the bill the importing merchants of the United States?

Mr. CLINGMAN. That raises a question which I will discuss, with great pleasure, with the gentleman from New Jersey at another time. There are two reasons why that should not be done. First, the price of goods, generally, has not undergone any great rise during the last eighteen months, and in the next place, these importations by merchants are importations for private purposes, while the other is an importation for railroads, which are made by the States and companies for the benefit of the public, and especially the great agricultural interests. I have no doubt the farmers of the country are willing to pay taxes whenever the Government stands in need of them. I submit, however, that they ought not to be compelled to pay cash duties when they are not needed for any purpose whatever. I know there is a certain interest in this House which is represented with more fidelity than any other interest under the Government; and notwithstanding it has a large number of representatives upon this floor, who are faithful, diligent, and zealous, it also has a large outside representation here, which is operating more strongly—

Mr. SKELTON, (interrupting.) I am not here as the representative of the iron interest, by any means; but I desire to have an eye to all the interests of our common country.

Mr. MEACHAM. I rise to a question of order. It is that the gentleman has no right, during the call upon the States for petitions, to present this bill and discuss the question, before it comes before the House.

Mr. CLINGMAN. The question is upon the engrossment of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the question of order.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I did not intend to detain the House long. I was saying that we have had, for the last few years, a remarkable condition of things. There is no necessity for collecting these taxes from the farmers, and yet this iron interest is not willing that the Government should indulge the tax payers, when it does not need the money. Its representatives come up here from time to time, and insist that the Government shall collect its taxes forthwith. They fight this matter as though I proposed to get into their private purses. They claim a sort of prescriptive right to have the whole country taxed for their benefit; and hence, when any proposition of this kind comes before them, gentlemen identified with that particular interest, throw all manner of obstacles in its way; not being content merely that the whole country should be heavily taxed for their benefit, they also insist that the taxes shall be collected without delay. I ask for the reading of this bill, and then I propose to move the previous question, and put it on its passage.

The bill was then read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in all cases of the importation of railroad iron for the period of two years from the passage of this act, upon its appearing to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that said iron has been imported bona fide for the use of some railroad in the United States, it may be lawful for those importing the same, if they desire it, instead of paying in cash the duties now levied, to give bonds with approved security, conditioned to pay the said duties with interest, at the end of four years from the date of the importation: Provided, That if, at any time hereafter, it should appear any importation had not been made bona fide for the use of some railroad, then, besides the duties then due, fifty per centum additional shall be payable to the United States.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the benefits of this act shall be extended to all cases when iron for the use of railroads has been imported, and on which the duties have not already been paid.

Mr. C. It will be seen that this bill is similar in its provisions to several other bills which were passed at the last session of Congress for the benefit of particular companies. I think there is no impropriety in the action asked for in regard to this proposition. We shall assist the railroad companies, and in four years, when they have laid down their rails, they will be in a condition to dispense with such assistance, and the moneys received for transportation of the mails will most probably be sufficient to pay off the duties. I have submitted this resolution with a view of ascertaining the sense of the House, because I know that many members are very anxious that such a provision should be adopted at once. I hope, therefore, that there will be no objection to the adoption of the bill. I appeal to my friends who represent particularly the iron interest, and I trust that they will allow this credit to be given; and, whether the tariff be modified or not, let the people take the chance of the benefit of any changes which may be made in their favor. If not, we shall, at any rate, get the money when we want it. It is not needed now. I hope that all who are favorable to the proposition will assist me in relieving railroad companies of the duties upon iron. If the bill goes to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, or the Committee on Ways and Means, we will never reach it. I hope all who are for relief, in any form, will come up at this time, and help to pass this as a temporary measure, leaving the question of repeal or reduction of duties to be investigated hereafter. I therefore move the previous question.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask the gentleman if he will not withdraw the demand for the previous question, in order that I may suggest a slight modification of his bill? The gentleman's argument is, that within the last eighteen months or two years a great rise has taken place in the price of railroad iron. The railroads in my own State, and particularly the railroad in my own district, have been importing and paying duties within the last twelve or eighteen months, and I desire to have them relieved by the same process by which others are relieved.

Mr. CLINGMAN. The railroads of which the gentleman speaks are in the same condition with some of my own State that have already paid. The bill which I have introduced, however, covers all cases where duties are not paid, this being as much as I suppose it practicable to accomplish.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to lay the bill upon the table. I am opposed to this manner of reducing the tariff.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I demand the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken and there were—yeas 81, nays 104; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Appleton, David J. Bailey, Belcher, Benson, Bliss, Carpenter, Chandler, Chrisman, Cox, Crocker, Cunningham, Curtis, Cutting, Dawson, Dean, Dent, Drum, Duham, Eastman, Edgerton, Everhart, Farley, Faulkner, Flagler, Florence, Franklin, Fuller, Gamble, Giddings, Grow, Hastings, Hibbard, Howe, Hughes, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, MacCulloch, Macdonald, Mayall, Meacham, Middlesworth, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Andrew Oliver, Packard, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pringle, David Ritchie, Robbins, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Seymour, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, William Smith, Stratton, Straub, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Vail, Vansant, Wade, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, and Hendrick B. Wright—81.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, Ball, Barksdale, Barry, Benton, Bissell, Biscoe, Brooks, Bugg, Lewis D. Campbell, Caskie, Chamberlain, Chase, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Cook, Corwin, Craig, Cullom, John G. Davis, Edd, Edmondson, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Ewing, Eddy, Edmundson, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Ewing, Faulkner, Goode, Greenwood, Hunt, Johnson, Keitt, Kidwell, Knox, Lane, Lindley, McMullin, McQueen, Mace, Macy, Maxwell, May, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Noble, Norton, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Parker, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Puryear, Ready, Reese, Riddle, Thomas Ritchey, Rogers, Ruffin, Sapp, Seward, Shaw, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Sollers, Frederick P. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Andrew Stuart, Tracy, Tweed, Walbridge, Walsh, Warren, Ellihu B. Washburne, Wells, John Wentworth, and Zollicoffer—104.

So the House refused to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. COBB. I ask the gentleman from North Carolina to accept a modification.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I will do so with pleasure, and had made a modification myself, but prefer to take his modification.

The amendment, as proposed by Mr. Cobb, was then read as follows:

Provided further, That in all cases of extension there shall be paid at the rate of six per cent. interest per annum by such person thus extending.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If the House refuse to second the demand for the previous question, the bill can be then referred.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Let the modification be made.

The SPEAKER. The bill having received its first and second reading is open for amendment; but the gentleman from North Carolina has not withdrawn the demand for the previous question.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I have a right before any vote is taken to modify my resolution under the rules.

Mr. PECK. Is it true, that the gentleman has a right to amend the bill?

The SPEAKER. The bill has received its first and second reading, and the gentleman has a right at this stage to amend it.

Mr. JONES. Is not the demand for the previous question still pending?

Mr. CLINGMAN. I withdraw the demand for the previous question, in order that the gentleman from Alabama may offer the amendment he has suggested.

Mr. COBB. I then offer the amendment which has already been read; and upon it I move the previous question.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I would be glad if the gentleman from North Carolina would withdraw his demand for the previous question. It is not right that he should make a speech in favor of his proposition, and then deprive others of the privilege of speaking in opposition by a call for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand that any motion for the previous question is pending.

Mr. COBB. I moved an amendment, and then called the previous question.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Did the gentleman from Alabama demand the previous question before the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Smith] obtained the floor?

Mr. COBB. I did.

Mr. JONES. Then I move to lay the bill and amendment upon the table.

Mr. PECK. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken, and the result was—yeas 86, nays 95; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Appleton, David J. Bailey, Belcher, Benson, Bliss, Carpenter, Chandler, Chastain, Chrisman, Cox, Crocker, Cunningham, Curtis, Cutting, Dawson, Dean, Dent, Drum, Duham, Eastman, Edgerton, Everhart, Farley, Faulkner, Flagler, Florence, Franklin, Fuller, Gamble, Giddings, Grow, Hastings, Hibbard, Howe, Hughes, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, MacCulloch, Macdonald, Mayall, Meacham, Middlesworth, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Andrew Oliver, Packard, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, Pringle, David Ritchie, Robbins, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Seymour, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, William Smith, Stratton, Straub, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Tweed, Vail, Vansant, Wade, Walbridge, Walker, Walsh, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, and Hendrick B. Wright—86.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, Ball, Barksdale, Barry, Benton, Bissell, Biscoe, Boyce, Brooks, Bugg, Lewis D. Campbell, Caskie, Chamberlain, Chase, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Cook, Corwin, Craig, Cullom, John G. Davis, Dowdell, Dunker, Eddy, Edmondson, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Ewing, Goode, Greenwood, Aaron Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Hendricks, Henn, Hill, Houston, Hunt, Johnson, Keitt, Kidwell, Knox, Lane, Latham, Lindley, Lindsey, McMullin, McQueen, Mace, Macy, Maxwell, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Noble, Norton, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Parker, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Puryear, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, Thomas Ritchey, Rogers, Ruffin, Sapp, Seward, Shaw, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Hester L. Stevens, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, Tracy, Warren, Ellihu B. Washburne, Wells, John Wentworth, and Zollicoffer—95.

So the House refused to lay the bill and amendment upon the table.

Mr. STRAUB. Is it in order now to move to amend?

The SPEAKER. It is not, the previous question having been demanded.

Mr. PECK. Is it in order to move to refer the bill to one of the standing committees of the House?

The SPEAKER. It is not until the motion for the previous question is disposed of. The effect of that motion is to cut off all motions to refer and to amend.

Mr. FLORENCE. Is it in order to demand the yeas and nays upon the call for the previous question?

The SPEAKER. It is not. If the previous question be seconded, it will be competent for the House to order the yeas and nays upon ordering the main question.

Mr. COBB. I made the demand for the previous question under a promise made by me to the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN.]

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Has the demand for the previous question been withdrawn?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. JONES. Then debate is not in order.

Mr. COBB. I was going to say, that, with the consent of the gentleman from North Carolina, I would withdraw the demand.

The demand for the previous question was not seconded, only forty members having voted therefor.

Mr. PECK. I now move to refer this bill to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. STRAUB. Is it now in order to move to amend this bill?

The SPEAKER. There is already a motion to amend offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. COBB] pending. There is, however, a motion also pending to refer the bill to the Committee on Ways and Means, and until that motion is disposed of, no motion to amend can be acted on.

Mr. DAWSON. Upon the motion to refer I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The bill, with the amendment, was then referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. HOWE. I move that the vote last taken, by which the bill was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, be reconsidered, and that the motion to reconsider do lie upon the table.

The question was taken, and the latter motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Mr. HOUSTON. For the purpose of again testing the sense of the House, I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

[Cries of "No, no," and "Let us go through the call of the States."]

The question was put, and the motion agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ORR in the chair.)

The first business in order being the consideration of the President's message,

Mr. HOUSTON. I now desire to submit a series of resolutions for the distribution of the President's message among the several committees. I submit the following:

1. Resolved, That so much of the annual message of the President of the United States to the two Houses of Congress as relates to our foreign affairs, together with the accompanying correspondence in relation thereto; to the claims of the subjects of Spain for losses in the case of the schooner Amistad; making the boundary line between the United States and the British Provinces on the northwest, as designated in the convention of the 15th June 1846, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

2. Resolved, That so much of said message and accompanying papers as relates to the existing tariff, and recommends a revision and change of its provisions; so much as relates to the condition of the Treasury and finances of the Government; to the public debt and its payment; the estimated receipts and expenditures for the ensuing fiscal year, be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

3. Resolved, That so much of said message and accompanying papers as relates to the condition and operation of the Army of the United States, and recommends an increase or modification of the same; also, all recommendations for new arsenals, magazines, and barracks, together with the report of the Secretary of War, be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

4. Resolved, That so much of said message and accompanying papers, as relates to the Navy of the United States, its condition and operation, and recommends an increase of the same, together with the report of the Secretary of the Navy, be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

5. Resolved, That so much of said message and accompanying documents, as relates to the enlargement and modification of the present judicial system of the United States, and to the prevention of frauds upon the pension bureau—be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

6. Resolved, That so much of said message and accompanying documents as relates to the intercourse with the Indian tribes, be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

7. Resolved, That so much of said message and accompanying documents as relates to the Post-Office Department, its condition and operation, together with the report of the Postmaster General, be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

8. Resolved, That so much of said message and accompanying documents as relates to commerce and tonnage duties, be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

9. Resolved, That so much of said message and accompanying documents as relates to the public lands, their survey and sale, the extension of the present land system over the Territories of Utah and New Mexico, the extension of the preemption principle, and free grants of land in aid of the construction of railways, be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

10. Resolved, That so much of said message and accompanying documents as relates to the District of Columbia, be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

11. Resolved, That so much of said message and accompanying documents as relates to a survey and construction of a railroad from the river Mississippi to the Pacific ocean, be referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

12. Resolved, That so much of the said message and accompanying documents as relates to the public buildings, be referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

13. Resolved, That so much of the said message and accompanying documents as relates to patents, the operations of the Patent Office, and the modification of existing patent laws, be referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I move that the committee do now rise. I desire to address the committee on some points involved in these resolutions, but the House perceives that I am entirely too harse to do so now.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Perhaps the gentleman from Virginia will give way. If he is not ready or able to address the House at this time, some other member may be.

Mr. BAYLY. I may not be able to get the floor again.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia, that the committee do now rise.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will not press his motion.

Mr. BAYLY. I am surprised at such a request coming from the gentleman from Ohio. He knows, as well as any gentleman in this House, how difficult it is to obtain the floor. I have got it now, and if, through courtesy to him, I yield it, I have no assurance that I shall be able to get it again.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Will the gentleman allow me to assign a reason why I desire him to withdraw his motion?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the committee do now rise.

The question was then taken, and a division being demanded, there were—ayes 65, noes 64.

Mr. BAYLY. As the vote is so close, sir, I withdraw my motion that the committee rise, and surrender my right to the floor.

Mr. SMITH, of New York, obtained the floor, and addressed the House, presenting his views in the Koszta affair; lauding the conduct of Captain Ingraham; but arguing that he should have demanded the immediate release of Koszta without consulting the French consul. (See Appendix for the speech.)

Mr. S. having concluded—

Mr. PRESTON said: I have listened, Mr. Chairman, not without a certain degree of interest, to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SMITH,] who has just addressed the committee; and I now desire its indulgence for a brief response, though nothing could have been further from my intentions than the design of offering any remarks to-day in relation to any subject that engages the legislative attention.

Living, as I do, in a State recognizing slavery, and firmly convinced, as I am, of the propriety of protecting our property in slaves, yet I do not desire to reply in any intolerant spirit to the views which have been advanced by the gentleman from New York. I feel conscious that the great and wise men who ushered our Government into existence, and laid its foundations deep in truth and justice, were not inferior in religion or philanthropy to those who assail the rights of the southern members of the Confederacy, assail their institutions, and decry their people. And although I may feel, with a strength of conviction that my language cannot adequately express, the injustice of assailing those rights, yet it is far from me to desire to evade or strangle discussion by denunciation or violence. I trust to the power of truth to show that the men of the South are not the representatives of a people enduring the odious tyranny that the gentleman asserts; that they are not men tolerating and fostering a wrong against every dictate of humanity and justice, but entertaining far wiser and more practical views than those misguided enthusiasts who would shake to its center a Government planned by patriots and statesmen, and cemented by the public prosperity.

Enthusiasm, sir, is respectable even in error. It is attractive when clothed in the fullness of appropriate language, and marked by eloquent delivery; but this should not blind us to the pernicious sentiments contained in the remarks we have heard

The gentleman from New York has sought to institute a parallel between the principles of abolition and those contained in the letter of the Secretary of State to the Chevalier Hülsemann in relation to the surrender of Martin Koszta. To institute a comparison which would unite principles so dissimilar, would be to create a monster in the political world more deformed than the Siamese twins in the physical world.

The sum of the doctrine in the Koszta letter, as asserted by the American Secretary, is, that Martin Koszta, having taken the initiatory steps to become a citizen of the United States, and having filed his declaration of intention in our courts, became clothed with such a nationality that, having gone into the city of Smyrna, in the peaceful pursuit of business or of pleasure, that he was still under the protecting power of the American flag, and beyond recapture by the power of Austria. But, let me ask the gentleman, if a treaty had existed between Austria and the Government of the United States, by which the solemn faith of the American Government were pledged to restore such refugees, as we stipulate for the extradition of felons with Great Britain under the Ashburton treaty, whether, without a violation of faith, we could have refused to surrender the fugitive? There can be but one solution to the question. Yet, have not the States of the American Union something more solemn and more obligatory than a mere treaty to compel the extradition of fugitive slaves; something more than a compact, as Webster expounded it, in his memorable reply to Hayne; something more solemn and more binding than treaty or compact—the very Constitution itself, upon which our Government exists. A sovereign can recede from a treaty or a compact, and no tribunal on earth but itself can judge it; but in our Constitution—the most solemn form of obligation that society knows—a tribunal, the Supreme Court, is established to assist in the enforcement of the rights of the people composing the Confederacy. This Constitution, solemnly ratified, guarantees to the slaveholding States the protection of their property, and the extradition of fugitive slaves, when they escape into sister States where the institution is not recognized. Shall those solemn promises be fulfilled?—or shall the pseudo-philanthropist, with the Bible in his hand—the Bible upon which the founders of our Government, and the two hundred and thirty-eight gentlemen here assembled, were sworn to support the Constitution—invoke our body to disregard its precept, and commit meditated perjury by violating its provisions? Yet, such is the morality that fanatical enthusiasm proposes.

The logic of the Secretary of State has been assailed, upon the ground that he has chosen to place an unwarranted limitation upon the divine injunction that you should "do unto others as you would they should do unto you;" yet I would ask of the gentleman who has so keenly criticised the expression, if it is not a plain matter to an unsophisticated mind, that we should fulfill the promises that we make to others? and if, under this principle, the people of the North are not morally bound to fulfill their promises to their southern brethren?

The correspondence in relation to the seizure of Koszta does honor to the Administration and the Government; but while the Secretary sustained his views with great ability, I trust I may be pardoned the digression if I remark that, in my opinion, the acts of Congress in relation to naturalization still further fortified his position. Our whole theory of the right of expatriation is in conflict with the English, and, I believe, the general European law, which maintains that a subject has no power to divest himself of the allegiance due to the Government under whose jurisdiction he is born. It is clear that if Koszta had received his final letters of naturalization, that, according to our theory, it was undoubtedly our duty to protect him. Until the year 1848, our naturalization laws required an alien to reside in the United States continuously for five years before the final letters were granted. Any non-residence or absence from our jurisdiction vitiated his right. In the year 1848, an act was passed by Congress permitting the time to be computed during the absence of the alien, which, by implication, authorized him to go abroad during the period of his acquiring citizenship. This act, as I conceive, gave full authority to Koszta to visit Smyrna; and the United States were as much bound to afford him the protection of our Government as they would have been to an alien fully naturalized, or to a native citizen.

The gentleman from New York, Mr. Chairman, has not only criticised the letter of the Secretary, but has chosen to make this the occasion for a general denunciation of the institution of slavery in the southern States. I know, sir, that the subject is trite and exhausted; but I feel unwilling that the remarks which he has uttered should pass without some reply.

The southern States, since their earliest colonial history, have been peopled by two races, of different color and of different civilization. We hold them in bondage because we are unwilling to amalgamate with them, and desire to keep our Teutonic blood pure and uncorrupted by any baser admixture; because we prefer that their untutored labor should be directed by the superior intelligence of our race to useful industry, rather than that they should be freed from all wholesome restraint, and left without coercion to pollute our blood and destroy our progress. It is not within our comprehension to divine the cause which has made the Ruler of Nations establish this order of things.

The wisdom of man cannot foresee or penetrate the means by which the civilization of nations is directed by Him. We see ourselves surrounded by three millions of the African race, who, under the dominion of the white race, has, in two hundred years, made greater advances in religion and civilization than they have made in four thousand years in their aboriginal condition. If, at this hour, the angel of death were to breathe upon the face of our people, as it did upon the hosts of Sennacherib, the surviving black race would exhibit a picture of civilization more remarkable than any that Africa has ever exhibited. But the African is not the only race which has been subject to slavery. Eight hundred years since our boasted Saxon ancestors endured a slavery as abject as that of the southern negro. The history of all savage races who have attained the blessings of civilization, show that they have marched to freedom through the portals of slavery. Where two races of widely different civilization exist together, the superior exterminate or enslave the inferior. The indocility of the Indian will cause him to be swept from the face of the earth. Slavery seems to be the price that ignorance pays to intelligence for its tuition in the arts of civilization.

Nothing can be more disastrous to a State than the premature enfranchisement of an enslaved race. They gangrene upon the face of its society, until it perishes under the affliction. It is a singular historical fact, and worthy of note, that the first Abolitionist was the first person who introduced African slavery upon the shores of America. Las Casas, the Bishop of Chiapas, after Cortez conquered Mexico, felt the deepest compassion for the Indians who were allotted as slaves to his Spanish adventurers. He petitioned the King of Spain that these Indian slaves should be enfranchised; and that the more robust and hardy negroes of the African coast should be imported. His prayer was granted; and it is to him the thralldom of the African in America is to be first attributed. The misfortunes of Mexico at this hour are, in my opinion, attributable, in a great measure, to the indiscreet philanthropy of Las Casas. The barriers which separated the races were cast down, the Castilian blood no longer ran pure and unpolluted in the veins of the people. The great preponderating Mestizo, or mixed race, was engendered; and he who will walk through the streets of Mexico will see all the horrid results of a debased amalgamated race, as he sees the Mexican of pure Spanish descent spurn from him with his foot, as he would some beast, the loathly Mestizo that obstructs the way.

But let me turn for a moment from a consideration of this picture, and ask if our forefathers had framed the wise and beneficent government we enjoy; if to-morrow the Ohio were the military line of demarcation between the North and South, as the Rhine between Germany and France; if forts were erected, custom-houses established, and armies posted; if union were proposed to remedy all these evils, would it be accepted? If we were assembled as delegates, and the South were to demand the same terms our Constitution guarantees, and the regulation of our own domestic institutions, can we for a moment doubt, that after all the benefits we have experienced, the North would not be willing and anxious to accede to its provisions? Or would we of the South, forgetful of the gallant spirit of our forefathers who planted the southern colonies, and whose descendants, surmounting the crests of the Alleghanies, bore civilization and religion into the primeval forests of the West, until they were borne over Kentucky and Missouri, even to the golden shores of California, prove recreant to the glorious memories of the past, and submit to dishonorable dictation?

I respect the generosity of emotion that seems to move the gentleman from New York, decisively as I differ from every sentiment he utters; but I must say, that the abolition of African slavery, and its agitation, are fraught only with the most pernicious consequences to our common country. I live in a State in which the institution of slavery exists, in which we have stood by our southern brethren, and will stand by them in the defense of our rights; and that if slavery be not perpetual, the hand of time will do more for the cause than the misdirected efforts of philanthropy or fanaticism. We may aptly say, when we point to the ameliorations wrought already by time in the condition of our slaves,

"Turne, quod optanti Divam promittere nemo Auderet, volvenda dies en attui ultro."

I trust, Mr. Chairman, that this topic may no longer be the subject of agitation; for I feel assured that, if it is continued, it will overwhelm the institutions we have inherited from our wise and patriotic ancestors in irretrievable ruin.

Mr. DEAN obtained the floor, but yielded to Mr. McMULLIN, who moved that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman [Mr. ORR] reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly the annual message of the President of the United States, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

On motion by Mr. EASTMAN,

The House then adjourned until to-morrow.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 21, 1853.

Prayer by the Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. CHASE presented the petition of C. Son-tag, a citizen of Cincinnati, praying indemnity for spoiliations committed by the French prior to 1801; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BRIGHT presented the petition of certain citizens of Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, praying that they may be incorporated as a company for the manufacture of gas; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey, presented joint resolutions passed by the Legislature of New Jersey, requesting the Senators and Representatives from that State to use their influence to obtain an appropriation for the purpose of constructing a light-house on Absecon beach, and anchoring a bell buoy outside of Absecon bar; which were read, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Also, joint resolutions of the Legislature of New Jersey, requesting the Senators and Representatives from that State to endeavor to procure an appropriation for the construction of a break-water at Cape May; which were read, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, presented the petition of the Lyons Railroad Company, asking a grant of land to aid in the construction of their railroad from Lyons, on the Mississippi river, to the Missouri river, in said State; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, additional documents in support of the claim of Mrs. Caroline Nichol; which, with the papers already on file, were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. WALKER, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of James M. Crane be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. WADE, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of John Devlin be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. WADE, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Nancy Scott, and the papers of the heirs of Daniel Landon, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, for the purpose of being presented in the House of Representatives.

On motion by Mr. SEWARD, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Reeder, Johnson, and Jones be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

On motion by Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Mary C. Hamilton be withdrawn from the files, and be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion by Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers relative to the claim of Jonathan H. Carter be withdrawn from the files, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

On motion by Mr. FITZPATRICK, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Hugh Wallace Wormley be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

On motion by Mr. PRATT, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Erkskine and Eichelberger be withdrawn from the files, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. CASS, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers relative to the claim of Hezekiah Miller be withdrawn from the files, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. MASON, it was Ordered, That Nathaniel Kuykendall have leave to withdraw his petition and papers from the files of the Senate.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. HAMLIN gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill authorizing the construction of a line of telegraph from the Mississippi river to the Pacific ocean.

Mr. SLIDELL gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill granting the right of way and a portion of the public lands to the State of Florida, to aid in the construction of a railroad across the peninsula of that State.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHIELDS, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill for the benefit of locators and purchasers of swamp and overflowed lands; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CHASE, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to divide the State of Ohio into two judicial districts, and to provide for holding the district and circuit courts of the United States therein; which was read twice by its title, laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DIXON, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill for the relief of the heirs at law of Lieutenant Charles A. Wickliffe, Jr.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. HAMLIN, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to remunerate the States of Maine and Massachusetts for lands conveyed to enable the United States to fulfill stipulations of the treaty of Washington; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FITZPATRICK, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to authorize the payment of certain claims for losses sustained and depredations committed during hostilities with the Creek and Seminole Indians, in the years 1836 and 1837.

The bill was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. FOOT, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill making a grant of lands to the several States and Territories of the Union for the benefit of indigent insane persons.

The bill was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

FRENCH SPOILIATION BILL.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be discharged from the further consideration of the bill to provide for the ascertainment and satisfaction of the claims of American citizens, for spoiliations committed by the French prior to the 31st day of July, in the year 1801, and that the bill, together with all matters relating to the subject, be referred to a select committee of five, to be appointed by the President pro tem.

REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. HAMLIN. The Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the memorial of the Mississippi Baptist State Convention, praying that adequate measures may be taken to secure to American citizens religious liberty abroad, ask to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that it be referred, together with all papers in regard to that subject, to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of Noah Miller, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief, entitled "A bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Noah Miller."

The bill was read and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WADE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the petition of Priscilla C. Simonds, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill, for her relief. The bill was read and ordered to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PRATT, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the petition of the legal representatives of Doctor William Somerville, deceased, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for their relief. The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BENJAMIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the petition of merchants of New Orleans, praying an extension of that port, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill to extend the limits of the port of New Orleans. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRODHEAD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the memorial of Cornelius Macauley, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which the subject was referred, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for the relief of Mary E. D. Blaney, widow of the late George Blaney; which was read and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the memorial of Daniel Winslow, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read a first time, and passed to a second reading.

The report was ordered to be printed.

INCREASE OF THE NAVY.

Mr. GWIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported that the committee had had under consideration that portion of the report of the Secretary of the Navy recommending an increase of the navy, in which he asks for authority to have constructed, at least, six first-class frigate propellers, and suggests that if the authority be granted, the appropriation should be made at an early date to enable the Department to build them with dispatch; and that the committee fully concurred in the suggestions and recommendations of the Secretary of the Navy, and would give its attention to the bill, making appropriations for this object, which is expected at an early day from the House of Representatives.

The report was read.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, the subject embraced by that report was earnestly presented to the consideration of Congress by the Secretary of the Navy, and the Committee on Naval Affairs has acted upon it promptly, so far as the principle is concerned. The Committee on Naval Affairs of the House has reported a bill to provide for the construction of six steam frigates, and I notify the Senate that, as soon as that bill comes here, I shall move for an early consideration of it.

BRIG KATE BOYD.

Mr. SEWARD. The Committee on Commerce, to which was referred a joint resolution for the relief of the owners of the brig Kate Boyd, have directed me to report the same back to the Senate, with the recommendation that it do pass. The subject of the joint resolution arises from an application by the owners of the Kate Boyd, of Boston, for indemnity for losses sustained by the detention of the vessel at New York by order of the officers of the Government, in 1850. The case was at the last session the subject of correspondence between the committee and the Departments of State and the Treasury.

The joint resolution proposes to refer the subject for adjustment to the Departments, namely, to the Secretary of State and the Attorney General. I will ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider it at this time.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct that the petition and papers of the owners of the brig Kate Boyd, formerly owned chiefly by Gregorson & Sumner, of Boston, praying for indemnity for losses sustained in consequence of its seizure at New York, by the district attorney of that district, under the authority of the President, be referred to the Secretary of State and the Attorney General to adjust the same; and if the legal rights of the petitioners were violated, whereby they received damage, to allow such indemnity as to them shall appear to be just; and that the Secretary of the Treasury shall cause such allowance, if any be made, to be paid to the owners.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed. The report of the committee was ordered to be printed.

WAREHOUSING SYSTEM.

Mr. HUNTER, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill to extend the warehousing system by establishing private bonded warehouses, and for other purposes, reported the same back without amendment, and recommended its passage.

SMALL NOTES IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. NORRIS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred a bill to suppress the circulation of small notes as a currency in the District of Columbia, reported the same back with an amendment.

Mr. ADAMS. I desire to ask the Senate to consider the bill at this time.

The PRESIDENT. It requires unanimous consent.

Mr. ADAMS. I hope there will be no objection.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill. It proposes to forbid the making, issuing, emitting, signing, drawing, or indorsing of any paper as a currency in the District of less amount than five dollars; that for every violation of the provision, the party violating it shall forfeit ten dollars, one half for the use of the person who shall sue therefor, and the other half for the use of the county of Washington; that it shall be unlawful for any person, or body politic, or corporate, to pass such paper as currency, under the penalty of forfeiting not less than five, nor more than ten dollars for every offense; that on failure of any person or body issuing such paper, to redeem the same when presented, they shall forfeit twenty dollars for every offense; that the penalty shall be recovered in an action of debt, before any justice of the peace in the District; that all contracts, whether written or verbal, to pay or deliver money, or any valuable thing, the consideration whereof may be wholly or in part any circulating medium under five dollars, shall be held illegal; that it shall be lawful for the court before which the suit may be brought, to cause to be examined as witnesses any defendants to such suit, touching the matter in controversy; that where evidence sufficient to prove the nature of a contract, above specified, cannot be obtained, it shall be lawful for the court to require the plaintiff to be sworn to testify the truth in regard to the transaction; that when any one in business, under a license, shall either receive or pay out such paper, it shall be the duty of the attorney of the United States for the District to institute proceedings in the circuit court, requiring the offenders to show cause why their license should not be forfeited; and that, on proof of such charge, the license shall be forfeited; and that the act shall be in force from and after the passage thereof; and any parts of former acts which may be repugnant to it, shall be repealed.

The amendment of the committee was to insert in the fifth section, after the word "verbal," the words "hereafter made," so that it will read:

"All contracts, whether written or verbal, hereafter made to pay or deliver money, or any valuable thing, or thing purporting to be a valuable thing, the consideration whereof may be either wholly or in part any paper currency or circulating medium under five dollars, or other paper or currency prohibited by the act, shall be deemed and held to be illegal."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BRIGHT in the chair.) If there be no further amendment, the bill will be reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. PEARCE. The subject embraced by the bill is an important one, and one which I think should not be hurried through the Senate in this manner. I would suggest that it should have a more mature consideration on the part of the Senate, and that its further consideration should be postponed for a few days.

Mr. ADAMS. As the consideration of the bill is objected to, I will not press it at this time, but ask that it be made the special order for some future day. What day will the Senator suggest?

Mr. PEARCE. I will suggest Tuesday week, and at the same time move that the bill, as amended, be printed.

Mr. ADAMS. I move then that the bill be postponed until next Tuesday week, and be made the special order of the day for one o'clock.

Mr. GWIN. The bill is an important one, and should be acted upon at an early period. The Senator from Maryland only asks for a short delay. I therefore suggest that it be made the special order of the day for Tuesday next. I make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BRIGHT in the chair.) The question will be put on the longest period first.

Mr. ADAMS. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. Gwin's motion was agreed to, and the bill was ordered to be printed.

LIEUTENANT GENERALCY.

Mr. SHIELDS, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution, authorizing the President of the United States to confer the title of lieutenant general by brevet for eminent services; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SHIELDS. I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DAWSON. I trust the resolution will not be referred. It has often been before the Senate at previous sessions, and has been passed more than once. I think it would be better for the Senate to designate a day on which to take up and act upon the resolution. I hope that course will be pursued.

Mr. SHIELDS. The honorable Senator is correct when he says that this joint resolution is precisely similar to the one which was passed by the Senate at the last session, by a very decisive vote, and without any very serious opposition.

Mr. SEWARD. Why not pass it now?

Mr. SHIELDS. If there be no objection, I should be very much pleased to have the resolution acted upon at this time. But I anticipated some opposition to that course, and therefore I proposed the reference. I ask, however, if there be no objection, that the resolution may be considered at this time.

Mr. PETTIT. I object to the consideration of the resolution at this time.

Mr. DAWSON. Then let it be referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BRIGHT in the chair.) The question will now be on the motion to refer.

Mr. SHIELDS. I withdraw the motion, so as to let the joint resolution take its place on the Calendar.

PIONEER MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

Mr. PRATT. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to report a bill to incorporate the Pioneer Manufacturing Company of Georgetown. I presume there can be no objection on the part of any one to the passage of the bill at this time. It was considered by the Senate, and passed unanimously at the last session.

The bill was read twice by its title, and considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to incorporate Thomas Wilson, Evan Lyons, Esau Pickerell, Thomas Brown, their associates, successors, and assigns, as a body-politic and corporate, for the purpose of manufacturing cotton, woolen, and silk goods at Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, and authorizes them to have a capital stock of $200,000, divided into shares of $100 each. It further proposes to give the company the usual privileges of incorporated companies, and restricts them from the exercise of banking powers; and reserves to Congress the right to alter or repeal the charter, whenever the public good may require it.

Mr. PETTIT. I would ask the honorable Senator from Maryland whether the bill contains the individual liability clause? Whether it makes the stockholders liable individually for the indebtedness of the company?

Mr. PRATT. It does not.

Mr. PETTIT. I desire to prepare and offer an amendment providing that the stockholders shall be individually responsible for the liabilities of the company.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the Senator from Maryland will consent to let this subject go over, if it is to lead to debate. Certainly a debate on the subject was not expected.

Mr. PRATT. I did not anticipate that there would be any objection to the bill.

Mr. PETTIT. Has the bill been reported from a committee?

Mr. PRATT. Yes, sir; and in precisely the same form in which it passed the Senate at the last session.

Mr. GWIN. I move to postpone the further consideration of the subject until to-morrow.

Mr. PRATT. If the Senator from Indiana insists on his amendment, I suppose the bill must go over.

Mr. PETTIT. I shall insist upon it. I shall vote for it myself, but I do not know the feeling of the Senate in regard to it.

Mr. PRATT. Then let the bill go over.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN. I move that the bill, as reported, and the proposed amendment, be ordered to be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

REFERENCE OF JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS.

Mr. SEWARD. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary inquire whether, consistently with the Constitution, provision can be made for referring causes instituted according to the course of the common-law, to referees, and whether such provisions, if they could be constitutionally made, would be expedient.

Mr. President, I hold in my hand communications from a judge of the Supreme Court, and from some professional gentlemen, upon the subject involved in the resolution. I ask, if there be no objection, that the resolution be now considered, and that the communications which I hold in my hand be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The resolution was agreed to, and the communications were so referred.

CENSUS PRINTING.

Mr. BRODHEAD. During the last session of the last Congress, the House of Representatives ordered the publication of one hundred thousand copies of the "Abstract of the Census," for the use of that body. The Senate has not yet ordered the abstract to be published. I think it will be necessary for us to have some fifteen or twenty thousand copies of that document. We have daily applications for the Abstract of the Census. I beg leave, therefore, to offer a resolution ordering the printing of twenty thousand copies of the Abstract of the Census, being the report of the Superintendent, which was published by the House of Representatives. I hold in my hand a copy of the document; perhaps Senators have seen it. I offer the resolution, and ask for its consideration at this time:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the Senate, twenty thousand copies of the Abstract of the Seventh Census, being a report of the Superintendent of the Census as published by the House of Representatives at the last session of the last Congress.

Mr. HAMLIN. Is the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania before the Senate for consideration? Do not the rules require that all such resolutions shall go to the Committee on Printing?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be any objection, the resolution must go over as a matter of course.

Mr. HAMLIN. I make no objection to the consideration of the resolution at this time. I only desire to say that a resolution, similar in its import, was submitted to the Senate at the last session, and I believe that the Committee on Printing came to the conclusion not to report favorably upon it, for the reason that they believed there were such inaccuracies in the abstract that they would not be warranted or justified in recommending its publication. I now desire to say, that the subject of printing an additional number of the census, as finished under the superintendence of Mr. De Bow, together with abstracts of the same, and other matters connected with that subject, are now before the Committee on Printing; and with that matter before them, I do not myself see the necessity for ordering an additional number of the old abstract which has already been printed.

Mr. GWIN. I am in favor of printing additional copies of the census, but not of the abstract. I think that the number of the census which has been printed is entirely too small. As a member of this body, I have received numerous applications for copies of the census, as taken by the officers of the United States. I am in favor of printing it in large numbers, and distributing it among the people. Therefore, I object to this resolution, and hope the Senate will order the publication of an additional number of the census.

Mr. CASS. What is the number of copies of the census which has been printed for the Senate?

Mr. HAMLIN. Eight thousand, I believe.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If objection be made, the resolution must go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. PRATT. Mr. President, the abstract which has been prepared, and one copy of which has been laid on the table of every Senator, is a document which I cannot wish to see printed for the Senate, although I believe that a proper abstract of the Census would be a document which should be printed, for the purpose of being more generally distributed amongst our constituents than the Census at large will be. But I agree with those Senators, who think that the abstract of the Census which has been prepared, is not such a document as is worthy to be printed and sent abroad. I have looked over it, and I do not think that there is more than a single table, containing about half of a page, which would be of the least practical utility to the public, if printed and sent amongst them. I refer to the last table in the book. That would be useful, but it does not cover more than half of one page.

I think that the subject—being before the Committee on Printing—should be allowed to rest there for the present, that they may cause, in some way, such an abstract to be made of this immense volume as will be useful to our constituents; and that a sufficient number of it may be printed by us to give it a general circulation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution being objected to, must go, as a matter of course, to the Committee on Printing, under the rules.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 21, 1853.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m.

Prayer by the Rev. Mr. MILBURN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. ROLAND JONES, a Representative from the State of Louisiana, appeared, and was qualified by taking the customary oath to support the Constitution of the United States.

SEAMEN IN THE MERCHANT SERVICE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of State, containing an abstract of the returns made to the Department by the collectors of customs, showing the number of seamen registered in the several ports of entry in the United States, during the year ending September 30, 1853.

On motion by Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, the communication was laid upon the table and ordered to be printed.

CENSUS REPORT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, inclosing the report of the Superintendent of the Census, dated the 14th instant, to which brief allusion was made in the annual report of said Secretary; which was ordered to lie upon the table and be printed.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER then proceeded to call the committees for reports.

On motion by Mr. PECKHAM, the Committee on Revolutionary Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the following petitions; and the same were referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions:

The petition of Hannah Reed, of Pennsylvania, asking for an increase of revolutionary pension;

And the petition of the heirs of Michael Shaver, of Virginia, asking for a pension on account of their father having been killed at the battle of Camden.

RICHARD W. MEAD.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and ordered to be printed;

"A bill for settling the claim of the legal representatives of Richard W. Mead, deceased."

DELEGATE FROM NEBRASKA.

On motion by Mr. RICHARDSON, the Committee on the Territories was discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of Thomas Johnson, praying to be admitted a Delegate in Congress from the Territory of Nebraska; and the same was referred to the Committee on Elections.

SAMUEL COLT.

Mr. THURSTON, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, reported the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and ordered to be printed:

"A bill for the relief of Samuel Colt."

The SPEAKER then proceeded to call the States for resolutions.

BOOKS ORDERED BY CONGRESS.

Mr. ORR. I offer the following resolution, and upon it I demand the previous question:

Resolved, That the House members of the Joint Committee on the Library be instructed to inquire into, and report what books have been ordered to be printed by authority of Congress which have not been completed; the progress made with the respective works; the time when they will probably be completed; the names of the contractors, and the work each one is to print; the contract prices stipulated to be paid for editing and publishing; and such other facts as may inform the House fully on the subject.

The previous question received a second, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the affirmative.

So the resolution was adopted.

POST OFFICE IN SAVANNAH.

Mr. SEWARD. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency and necessity of erecting a post office building in the city of Savannah, Georgia, and to report upon the same by bill or otherwise.

Mr. FLORENCE. If it be in order I would like to have an amendment attached to the gentleman's resolution, that the same inquiry be made by the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads in regard to the city of Philadelphia. Perhaps it would be well enough to ask the committee to inquire into the expediency and necessity of affording better accommodations for post office purposes in all the principal cities of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman please submit his amendment in writing?

Mr. FLORENCE. I shall have to prepare it; and not desiring to interrupt the gentleman's resolution, I now give notice that, when the opportunity is afforded me, I shall submit a resolution covering the whole ground of my suggestion.

The question was then taken on the resolution of Mr. SEWARD, and it was adopted.

OBSTRUCTIONS IN THE SAVANNAH RIVER.

Mr. SEWARD. I ask leave to introduce a bill, entitled "A bill to provide for the removal of obstructions in the river Savannah, in the State of Georgia, and for improvement of the same; and to reimburse the city council of Savannah for such sums as said city authorities may have heretofore expended for that purpose," of which previous notice has been given.

There was no objection, and the bill was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

NAVY-YARD AND DEPÔT ON THE COAST OF GEORGIA.

Mr. S. also asked leave to introduce a bill, entitled "A bill to authorize the establishing of a navy-yard and depôt on the coast of Georgia, at the city of Brunswick, in Glynn county," of which previous notice had been given.

There was no objection, and the bill was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

CHAPLAINS TO CONGRESS AND THE ARMY AND NAVY.

Mr. DENT. I desire to present a memorial of sundry citizens of Georgia, praying the abolition of the office of Chaplain in Congress and the Army and Navy of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can send his memorial to the Clerk's table, to be filed under the rule.

Mr. DENT. I know that, sir; but I desire to move a special reference of this petition, as it involves constitutional questions. I move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can order it to be so referred when filing it with the Clerk.

SELMA AND GADSDEN RAILROAD.

Mr. DOWDELL. I ask leave of the House to introduce a bill, entitled "a bill granting the right of way to the State of Alabama, and a portion of the public lands to aid in the construction of a railroad from Selma, on the Alabama river, to Gadsden, on the Coosa river, in said State," of which previous notice has been given.

There was no objection; and the bill was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. PHILIPS offered a resolution; which was read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the propriety of continuing and completing such of the river and harbor improvements as were appropriated for at the last Congress, and which, in the opinion of the committee, are within the constitutional powers of this Government, and of general interest and importance; and that they report at an early day of the session by bill or otherwise.

Mr. PHILIPS. Upon that resolution I demand the previous question.

Mr. DUNHAM. I would request the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PHILIPS] to withdraw his demand for the previous question, until I can offer an amendment.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. DUNHAM. I desire, if the gentleman will withdraw the call for the previous question, to so amend the resolution that it shall be referred to the appropriate committee.

Under the rule of the House that resolution should go to the Committee on Roads and Canals. My purpose is, if the call for the previous question is not sustained, or if the gentleman withdraws it, to make the amendment I have indicated.

The SPEAKER. Is the call for the previous question withdrawn?

Mr. PHILIPS. I do not withdraw it, as I understand that the Committee on Commerce is the appropriate committee to which the resolution will be referred, under the rule of the House.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I ask for tellers upon the call for the previous question.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HARRIS and MACE appointed.

Mr. DUNHAM. Before the question is taken, I desire to have the 98th rule read.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the rule will be read.

There being no objection, the rule was read, as follows:

"98. It shall be the duty of the Committee on Roads and Canals to take into consideration all such petitions and matters or things relating to roads and canals, and the improvement of the navigation of rivers, as shall be presented, or may come in question, and be referred to them by the House; and to report thereupon, together with such propositions relative thereto, as to them shall seem expedient."

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 76, noes 44.

So the previous question received a second.

The main question was then ordered.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I demand the yeas and nays upon the passage of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The resolution was again read by the Clerk.

Mr. MACDONALD. I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and the result was—yeas 55, nays 112; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, David J. Bailey, Thos. H. Bayly, Bocoek, Boyce, Brooks, Chastain, Cobb, Craig, Cutting, John G. Davis, Dean, Dent, Disney, Dunham, Edmundson, Faulkner, Goode, Greenwood, Grow, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Kidwell, Kittredge, Kurtz, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, Macdonald, McQueen, Mace, Mayall, Morrison, Murray, Olds, Andrew Oliver, Orr, Packer, Bishop Perkins, Powell, Singleton, Skelton, William Smith, Snodgrass, Richard H. Stanton, John J. Taylor, Tweed, Vail, and Walker—55.

NAYS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Appleton, Belcher, Benson, Bissell, Bugg, Lewis D. Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Chase, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Cullom, Cunningham, Curtis, Dawson, Dick, Dunbar, Eastman, Eddy, Edgarton, Edmunds, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Everhart, Farley, Fenton, Flagler, Florence, Franklin, Giddings, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Henn, Hill, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, Roland Jones, Kelt, Knox, Lane, Latham, Lindley, Lindsley, McCulloch, McMullin, Macy, Meacham, Middlesworth, John G. Miller, Morgan, Nichols, Noble, Norton, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, John Perkins, Phillips, Pratt, Preston, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, Reese, Richardson, Riddle, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seward, Seymour, Simmons, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Straub, Andrew Stuart, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Vansant, Wade, Walbridge, Walsh, Ellihu W. Washburne, Israel Washburne, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Hendrick B. Wright, Yates, and Zollcoffer—112.

So the House refused to lay the resolution upon the table.

Pending the call of the roll—

Mr. DISNEY said: I am in favor of this reference, though I was opposed to the river and harbor bill of the last Congress.

The question then recurred upon the passage of the resolution upon which the yeas and nays had been ordered, and being taken, the result was—yeas 111, nays 54; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Appleton, Belcher, Benson, Bissell, Bugg, Lewis D. Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Chase, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cook, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Cullom, Dawson, Dick, Dunbar, Dunham, Eastman, Eddy, Edgarton, Edmunds, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Everhart, Ewing, Farley, Flagler, Florence, Franklin, Aaron Harlan, Harrison, Hastings, Haven, Henn, Hill, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Johnson, Roland Jones, Knox, Lane, Latham, Lindley, Lindsley, McCulloch, Macy, Maxwell, Meacham, Middlesworth, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Morgan, Nichols, Noble, Norton, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Phillips, Pratt, Preston, Pringle, Puryear, Ready, Richardson, Riddle, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seward, Seymour, Simmons, Gerrit Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Trout, Tweed, Vansant, Wade, Walbridge, Walker, Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Hendrick B. Wright, Yates, and Zollcoffer—111.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Willis Allen, David J. Bailey, Thomas H. Bayly, Barkedale, Bocoek, Boyce, Brooks, Chastain, Christian, Cobb, Craig, John G. Davis, Dean, Dent, Disney, Edmundson, Goode, Greenwood, Grow, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Kidwell, Kittredge, Letcher, Lilly, McMullin, McQueen, Mayall, Morrison, Murray, Olds, Andrew Oliver, Packer, John Perkins, Powell, Reese, Rufin, Shaw, Singleton, William Smith, Snodgrass, Soliers, Richard H. Stanton, John J. Taylor, Vail, Walsh, and Wheeler—54.

So the resolution was passed.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move to reconsider the vote just taken by which the resolution passed; and, I believe, as the previous question has exhausted itself, the motion is debatable.

The SPEAKER assented.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Speaker, it is as well that this House should settle now the principle upon which they are to act in reference to the matter which is to be referred to the Committee on Commerce and the Committee on Roads and Canals, so that both committees may not feel themselves called upon to go into the consideration of the same subjects. The question which we are now called upon to decide is, whether this matter properly belongs to the Committee on Commerce or to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. CLINGMAN, (interrupting.) I beg leave to suggest this question of order. I agree perfectly in opinion with the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. DUNHAM,] that the previous question has exhausted itself, and that his motion is debatable. But I think it was decided the last session differently. I raise the point now, for the purpose of calling the attention of the Chair to the subject, so that the rule may be uniform. If I am not mistaken, the Speaker decided the last session that motions to reconsider, coming up under the circumstances similar to the present, were not debatable.

The SPEAKER. The recollection of the Chair is, that the practice has been uniform both before and during the last Congress, that the previous question had exhausted itself.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I think it will be recollected that during the last Congress, when motions to reconsider votes, taken under the operation of the previous question, were made, the decision of the Speaker was, that such motions were not debatable.

The SPEAKER. It is very often the case that incidental questions come up—the previous question resting upon the main question—which have been decided as not debatable; but it has been the uniform practice, according to the recollection of the Chair, that the previous question is exhausted whenever the final vote has been taken upon the main question to which it applies.

Mr. CLINGMAN. This resolution was adopted under the operation of the previous question, and I think the Chair now rightly decides that, when the question upon its adoption had been taken, the previous question was exhausted; but if he will consult the Journals of the House, I think he will find some decisions made the other way.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman will find that the distinction has always been made between motions incidental to, and motions directly affecting, the main question.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I am certainly satisfied with the decision of the Chair; I only desired to call his attention to the subject, so that a uniform rule may be adhered to with respect to it.

Mr. DUNHAM. I was proceeding to remark, that it is a matter of some importance that the House shall decide now, and decide definitely, in reference to the proper reference of this subject; for it is useless, certainly, for two of the committees of the House to undertake to recommend legislation upon the same subject. Of course I do not consider the action of the House this morning as an insinuation of impropriety upon the part of the committee to which I have the honor to belong, in the course they have pursued in reference to this subject. Nevertheless, if this subject does properly belong to the Committee on Roads and Canals, the action of the House in taking it from them and in giving it to another committee, indicates at least, a want of confidence in them.

Now, sir, if gentlemen will refer to the 83d rule of the House, prescribing the duties of the Committee on Commerce, they will see that that committee has nothing whatever to do with the improvement of the channels of rivers. Their duties are confined to matters of commerce itself—commerce, in the strictest sense of the term. Again, if gentlemen will turn to the ninety-eighth rule, defining the duties of the Committee on Roads and Canals, they will find that the subject of the improvement of the channels of rivers is placed under their charge. The two subjects are perfectly distinct, the one from the other.

Mr. PHILIPS made a remark, which was inaudible to the reporter.

Mr. DUNHAM. I will read the rule, if the gentleman desires it.

Mr. PHILIPS. To what rule does the gentleman refer?

Mr. DUNHAM. To the 98th. I will read it: "98. It shall be the duty of the Committee on Roads and Canals to take into consideration all such petitions, and matters or things relating to roads and canals, and the improvement of the navigation of rivers, as shall be presented or may come in question, and be referred to them by the House; and to report thereupon, together with such propositions relative thereto, as to them shall seem expedient."

Mr. PHILIPS. Will the gentleman undertake to say that the subject of light-houses does not properly go to the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. DUNHAM. The subject of light-houses is not included in the bill to which this resolution refers. There is no conflict, I apprehend, between the two committees in reference to the subject of light-houses. The control of that subject has always been conceded to the Committee on Commerce.

So far as the subject of harbors is concerned, I present this view of the case: The rule prescribing the duties of the Committee on Commerce certainly has no more reference to the subject of harbors than the one I have read. Now, if there are some matters in that bill which, by an express rule of the House, go to one committee, and none of them to the other, I submit it to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PHILIPS] if the bill should not go to our committee?

The 83d rule reads as follows:

"83. It shall be the duty of the Committee on Commerce to take into consideration all such petitions and matters of things touching the commerce of the United States as shall be presented, or shall or may come into question, and be referred to them by the House; and to report, from time to time, their opinion thereon."

There is nothing in that rule that refers either to harbors, or rivers, or canals, but there is something in the other rule which does refer to them, and I therefore apprehend that there is a subject embraced in this bill which does not properly, under the rule, go to either of these committees; and also, a subject which does distinctly go to one committee. I say that the whole thing should go to that committee which is pointed out by the rule.

Now, I think there can be no doubt as to what these rules mean. The one refers to commerce in the abstract—to matters and things relating to commerce, as between States, and also as between this nation and other nations. This rule merely refers to the channels of commerce, or the means by which it is to be carried on. The one question goes to the Committee on Commerce, the other to the Committee on Roads and Canals. And, sir, when this House undertakes to say that they will treat that matter which properly belongs to the Committee on Roads and Canals, and to give it to another committee—I will not say that the House so intends it—but it certainly carries with it the inference of a lack of confidence on the part of the House towards this committee.

Mr. YATES. Will the gentleman from Indiana allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DUNHAM. Certainly.

Mr. YATES. I would ask whether this subject has not heretofore been referred, indifferently, to either committee; and, secondly, whether the Committee on Commerce has not always reported the river and harbor bills, and not the Committee on Roads and Canals?

Mr. DUNHAM. I will answer the inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois. This matter has heretofore been a mooted question. It has always been usual to refer these bills to the Committee on Roads and Canals. This committee was raised for the purpose of having such questions as this referred to it; and it is well known in this House that it is frequently the case, that when a rule stands in the way of the accomplishment of any particular object, a majority of this House are usually to be found ready to override the rule; and under such a practice I am willing to concede that this subject has been sometimes referred to a committee to which it does not belong.

In reference to the other inquiry which the gentleman puts, I will say merely that the gentleman is mistaken. I believe that in all cases where a matter has been referred to the Committee on Commerce, that committee has reported bills in regard to rivers and harbors; and I am inclined to think, in no case has the subject been referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals; but that committee has sometimes reported bills of this kind. I recollect that in the Congress preceding the last, this subject was referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals, of which a colleague of mine was chairman; and I know that in that case a bill was reported to this House, and, with that exception, I think there has never been an instance in which the subject was referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

But, sir, that is neither here nor there. I apprehend, that even if that committee has not done its duty heretofore, no fair inference can be drawn from that fact that the present committee, now for the first time organized, and containing, as it does, perhaps, not a single member who ever served upon it before, will not discharge its duty to this House and the country. I apprehend that, because a man may have held an office under the Government, and have failed to do his duty and been discharged, you are not to infer from it that the man who may succeed him will not do his duty either. It is a wrong inference, and that is the very thing that I complain of here. The vote of this House seems to say to the House and the country, that they have no confidence in the Committee on Roads and Canals, and that that committee will not discharge the duty intrusted to it. It is a gratuitous charge, if so intended—but I do not apprehend that it was so intended—because we have had no opportunity to show our hands—whether we will discharge our duty in this matter or not.

I maintain, then, that so far as the rules of the House are concerned, this matter should go to the Committee on Roads and Canals. So far as the practice of the House is concerned, the practice has been, as I have already remarked, to refer this subject to the Committee on Roads and Canals, except in cases where a majority of the House has taken it from that committee, because they feared that committee, and referred it to some other committee, where they thought they would have a better chance of success.

Now, sir, whilst I am upon this point as to whether that committee will do its duty upon this subject, I wish to call the attention of the House to the organization of the committees. Will gentlemen just take their list of committees, and look over the two committees? Look at the gentlemen placed upon the committees—their localities and the interests they represent. I submit to them whether they see anything in the organization of the Committee on Roads and Canals that foreshadows that this subject of internal improvements will not receive fair, full, and ample consideration at the hands of that committee? If gentlemen will look at the organization of the two committees, they will find that one of them has been expressly organized with reference to the commerce of the country, chiefly of members from the sea-board, while the other has been taken from the whole country—not only from the sea-board, but from the interior, where these improvements exist.

I have no doubt that if members look at the organization of these committees, they will see that the Committee on Roads and Canals, from its locality, is by far the most appropriate committee to which this subject can be referred. You will find upon it members not only from the sea-board but the interior of the northwest, and other interior portions of every section of the country, and that the subject can have fair consideration at the hands of the committee.

I think, therefore, sir, that this vote ought to be reconsidered; that this matter should be referred to the appropriate committee; that that committee should not be condemned in advance without trial; that the matter should be referred to them, and then, if they fail to discharge their duty to the House, the House will have the power of coercion, either by express order, that the committee shall report the bill, or by taking the matter from the committee, and giving it to another.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I desire merely to say that I concur fully in the remarks which have been submitted by the gentleman from Indiana upon this subject.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. Has the gentleman from Indiana yielded the floor to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. WALSH. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee will first state his point of order.

Mr. WALSH. My point of order has reference to the gentleman from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state what it is.

Mr. WALSH. I understand that, by the rules of the House, a gentleman must rise from his seat when he wishes to speak, and address the Chair. Now, the gentleman from Tennessee has not risen from his seat.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the question of order. The gentleman from Tennessee is regularly on the floor.

Mr. JONES. I desire to know if the gentleman from Indiana has yielded the floor to the gentleman from Ohio?

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Indiana has yielded to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. JONES. Then, sir, I think it is high time to put a stop to this practice, which this House got into during the last Congress, of permitting one gentleman to hold the floor for an hour, and peddle it round the House. I believe the rule is that the floor can be yielded for explanation only, and not for debate.

The SPEAKER. It can be yielded for explanation only.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman from Ohio knows the practice which has prevailed heretofore, and I hope he will not, therefore, think that I make this point for the purpose of depriving him of the floor. My only wish is that the rules shall be enforced. The gentlemen are both old members, and know the abuses that grew out of this practice during the last Congress, and I hope they will unite with me in correcting them.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana can only yield the floor to the gentleman from Ohio for explanation.

Mr. DUNHAM. I will yield my right to the floor now. I can do that.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I should have concluded my remarks by this time, had I not been interrupted by the honorable gentleman from Tennessee; and I do not think it very properly becomes him to charge any of us with a disposition to peddle out the floor, and waste the time of this House.

I desire simply to say that I think there is great propriety in the suggestions made by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. DUNHAM.] I do not know that the great question of river and harbor improvements will find a sufficient number of friends in this House to carry any bill, if we may judge of the temper of the majority from the somewhat illiberal character of the recommendations of the President of the United States in his annual message; but whether we are in a majority or not, it is certainly due to the friends of that great system that this subject should have a proper direction at the outset. I agree with the gentleman from Indiana, that in view of the duties of these two committees, the Speaker, in their organization, has exhibited a great deal of prudence and discretion. If I understand the duties of the Committee on Commerce, they appertain particularly to the external commerce of the country more than to the improvements of the great thoroughfares of the commerce of the interior; and by looking at the list of the members of that committee, it will be seen that the Speaker, in view of this fact, has given to the sea-board a large representation upon that committee, whilst, on the other hand, he has given to the interior a large representation upon the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Then again, sir, the bill of the last Congress to which this resolution refers, made appropriations for a vast number of improvements in the basin of the Mississippi and for the northern lakes; and the inquiry directed to be made by this resolution is, whether it is expedient and proper to make appropriations for the continuation of those improvements? Now, sir, there are but two representatives of the great basin of the Mississippi upon the Committee of Commerce, and it is hardly to be presumed, from the locality of the members of the Committee on Commerce, that they will be so well-informed in regard to what is expedient and proper in relation to those appropriations as the men who represent that section of our country. And, sir, whether the system is to rise or fall, I appeal to this House, as one of the representatives of the Great West, whether it is not due to the friends of the system that such a reference should be made as will secure at least a favorable report, in order that this House may decide upon it?

Mr. Speaker, I have said all that I desired to say. I feel, although I may not have sufficient reasons for doing so, that if this great interest is to go into the hands of the Committee on Commerce, there is an end to all hope for the continuance of our great improvements in the interior; at least, I feel assured that the friends of the system ought to make the reference to the Committee on Roads and Canals. Although no pledge to call for the previous question was exacted from me as a condition to yielding me the floor, I now submit that motion, unless some gentleman desires to reply to what has been said.

Mr. PHILIPS. I would be obliged to the gentleman from Ohio if he would withdraw his call for the previous question, that I may submit a few remarks on the subject under consideration.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I withdraw the call for the previous question, if the gentleman will renew it when he concludes.

Mr. PHILIPS. Mr. Speaker, I do not desire that I shall be understood as making any imputation upon the Committee on Roads and Canals. It was not for any favor which I anticipated from the Committee on Commerce, or for any disfavor which I apprehended from the Committee on Roads and Canals, that induced me to frame the resolution as it now is. At the last session of Congress, the Committee on Commerce reported a bill making appropriations for works of internal improvement. The resolution before the House instructs that committee to inquire how far we should proceed with those works. What! is it not proper to refer to the very committee which appropriated money for the construction of works, the inquiry whether those works should be continued; or is it proper, as in the estimation of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. DUNHAM,] to take from a committee which commenced a system of internal improvements and refer it to another committee, an inquiry whether those works should be prosecuted or not?

Mr. CAMPBELL. With the gentleman's permission, I will say a word in relation to the internal improvement bill of the last session. Nearly all the appropriations in that bill for the West originated, not in the Committee on Commerce, but in the House and the Senate.

Mr. FULLER. I desire to correct the gentleman in relation to the distribution of the appropriations in the bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors, which came from the Committee on Commerce at the last session of Congress.

That committee, sir, after giving the subject a patient and careful consideration, agreed to report a bill upon the basis that it should be reasonable in its amount—about a million of dollars—which was all that the Government corps of engineers could expend in one year; and that it should be equally distributed, one third upon the Atlantic sea-board, one third upon the lake shore, and one third upon the Mississippi and its tributaries. In conformity to the result of that consideration, the bill was reported, and after having been so reported, and after having been passed by the House, it was sent to the other wing of the Capitol, and the friends of the bill in this House, and the committee, had the painful reflection of seeing it there loaded down with amendments, and converted into a most incongruous bill.

Mr. EWING. Will the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PHILIPS] allow me to say a single word? I shall not consume much of his time.

Mr. PHILIPS. If I should yield to the gentleman, I must yield to members all around the House, and the debate would run into the discussion of topics which are not at all germane to the subject under consideration, and I must therefore decline.

Mr. EWING. I should have finished what I had to say in the time which the gentleman has consumed in declining to yield.

Mr. PHILIPS. I was stating to the House the reason why I worded the resolution as it is. It was because the Committee on Commerce had reported the bill. They were, therefore, best prepared to say whether they could complete and execute all those works, or only a portion of them. They were better prepared to do so than any other committee. Besides, I stated, not upon my own authority—for I am but a new member here—but upon the authority of others, and upon the authority of my own reading of former proceedings of this House, that my motion, so far from being an unexampled one, properly conforms to the action of this House upon former occasions. As I understand it, the rule has been, for many years past, that the harbor and river bill should be reported from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DUNHAM. If the gentleman will allow me a word, I will say that I think he will find himself mistaken. I think that bill has never been referred, by unanimous consent, to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PHILIPS. I did not say it had been done by unanimous consent. I stated the action of the House, and not the means by which that action had been arrived at. I say that, generally, the bill for the improvement of rivers and harbors had proceeded from the Committee on Commerce, and I am sustained in that assertion by the oldest and most experienced members of this House. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. DUNHAM] says that committee is not the appropriate one, under the rules of the House, and that if the practice of the House was such as I stated it to be, the practice was in opposition to the rules of the House. But the gentleman has wholly failed to show any rule by which a bill for the improvement of harbors should be referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals. Now, sir, the improvement of harbors constitutes one of the most important portions of the jurisdiction of this Government. And yet, sir, the rule of the House to which he refers is entirely silent in reference to harbors; and if it was intended to embrace a matter of so much importance and dignity as the improvement of the harbors of the country, it would be extraordinary indeed that it should be omitted.

The gentleman seems to think there is no propriety in the idea of referring this to the Committee on Commerce. A large portion of the members of this House only maintain the constitutionality of this measure, as far as it is connected with the jurisdiction of Congress over the commerce of the country.

The mouths of rivers, which are to a great extent themselves harbors, are within the appropriate jurisdiction of this very committee; and I proposed to refer the subject to them, because standing, as I do with many others, in denying the constitutionality of any action of this Government in making roads and canals, I am compelled to admit the constitutional right of this House to regulate the commerce of this country, by erecting light-houses and building piers, and which I believe is justified by the contemporaneous history of the country at the time of the adoption of the Constitution. I therefore proposed the reference to the Committee on Commerce, because I considered it an appropriate reference. I hope, therefore, that the motion for reconsideration will not prevail.

Mr. ORR. I move the previous question.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. EWING. I hope the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] will withdraw the demand for the previous question for a single moment. I wish to make a brief statement.

Mr. ORR. I cannot.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, with the permission of the House, desires to state, that by the 25th rule, resolutions giving rise to debate must go over. This resolution was introduced, the previous question demanded upon it, and sustained by the House, which cut off debate, and brought the House to action upon the resolution. It was passed through the House without debate; for if debate had arisen upon its introduction, it must have gone over. The 56th rule reads as follows:

"When a motion has been once made and carried in the affirmative or negative, it shall be in order for any member of the majority to move for the reconsideration thereof on the same or succeeding day, and such motion shall take precedence of all other questions, except a motion to adjourn; and shall not be withdrawn after the said or succeeding day without the consent of the House, and thereafter any member may call it up for reconsideration."

This resolution, upon a motion to reconsider, gives rise to debate. The question is, whether or not it shall go over. The Chair thinks, to make these several rules consistent with each other, that it would have been better to have held that the motion to reconsider must be taken under the circumstances without debate. The House having declared its purpose to reconsider the resolution, the Chair in this case does not enforce the rule; but in all cases hereafter he will decide that motions to reconsider must be taken without debate.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was then taken upon Mr. WENTWORTH's motion, and there were—ayes 97, noes not counted.

So the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

Mr. HOUSTON. I wish to inquire of the Chair if the morning hour has expired?

The SPEAKER. It has expired.

Mr. HOUSTON. I then move that the rules of the House be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. COBB. I ask my colleague to withdraw his motion for a moment, to allow me to introduce a bill, of which previous notice has been given.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think the morning hour is sufficient for these things. The State of Alabama will be called in its order, and the gentleman will then have an opportunity to introduce his bill. I ask for the question upon my motion.

The question was put, and the motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ORR in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the President's message, the question pending being upon the adoption of the resolutions of Mr. Houston, providing for the reference of that document to the appropriate standing committees.

Mr. DEAN being entitled to the floor, rose and addressed the Committee as follows:

He said: Mr. CHAIRMAN: Having at an early day in the session given notice of my intention to offer some resolutions in reference to the conduct of Captain Ingraham, and having yesterday offered those resolutions, I stated at the time of offering them that I supposed they would give rise to no debate. I myself did not desire to debate them, and they were referred to a committee without debate. But almost immediately after this occurrence, a colleague of mine [Mr. SMITH] commenced a debate upon the President's message, and referred directly to Captain Ingraham's conduct, and referred to it in a party aspect. Sir, I regret this deeply. I regret that, upon a question of this kind—a question which has no party affinities—on a subject having reference to the conduct of an officer of our Navy, in relation to whom, I presume, not a man in the House knows to which party he belongs—I say I regret deeply, that upon a subject of this kind, any attempt should be made to connect it with party. For, sir, I undertake to say, that the American people—the will of the entire American people—has been represented by the conduct of the Government; and I say here now, although we may be divided upon some questions; although, in the dispensation of offices, party lines must be observed to some extent, yet the President is the representative of the whole people, and not the representative of any party; and in this act, which has challenged the attention of all men of all parties, and, indeed, of the whole world, more than any other single occurrence of the last quarter of a century, the conduct of our Government in sustaining its officers, has met the universal approval of every party in this country, and all classes of men throughout the world; and that the question which lies at the bottom involves a principle which should not be brought into the arena of party politics; and I thank the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PRESTON] for so gallantly coming forward and defending the conduct of Captain Ingraham and our Government in this affair.

Sir, I come not here to defend the Administration. I have nothing to do with that question now, and utterly disclaim any such motive; but I cannot permit a remark or two which my colleague from the Madison district [Mr. SMITH] made yesterday in reference to our Government to pass unnoticed. The gentleman told this committee, and through the committee has published it to the world, that although Austria is a despotism, yet this Government is a greater and a guiltier oppressor than even Austria—that the American Government, of which he forms a part, is a guilt-tier oppressor than Austria, and that this Administration owes its very being and existence to the slave power, and to the fact that it had been pledged in advance to that power.

Sir, upon that subject I shall avoid saying anything, except that this Administration, instead of being pledged to the slave power, or to any other power, is pledged only to those great principles which have been cherished and adopted by a vast majority of the American people—principles in reference to the action of the Federal Government on the subject of slavery in the States that have been understood for years, and affirmed and reaffirmed in every national convention, for the last twelve years at any rate. They have adopted the doctrine that this Government was a confederacy of independent States formed for definite and specified purposes; that the powers of Congress are limited by the Constitution which created Congress; that the institution of slavery in the States is a local institution, existing by virtue of municipal laws over which Congress has no control; that it existed at the time of the adoption of the Constitution; that such being the case, Congress had nothing to do in its creation, or with its existence in any of the States of this Union.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Will the gentleman allow me a single moment to explain?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield the floor to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. DEAN. I must decline to do so. These interruptions are very inconvenient.

My colleague [Mr. SMITH] said, yesterday, that this Government was a more guilty oppressor than Austria; and, by way of illustrating the position that he took, he made use of a very strong simile, which I shall not here repeat. Mr. Chairman, were it not for the well-known intelligence of that gentleman—were it not that he is known, not only throughout New York, but throughout the whole United States, as a man not only of enlightened philanthropy and entire sincerity—as a gentleman, and also as a scholar possessing the very highest intelligence—I should be inclined to impute to him ignorance of the subject on which he spoke, to imagine that he could not have known the system of government which prevails in Austria, or he never would have made such an assertion. He could not have known that in Austria the will of one man is law. He could not have known that the present Emperor, Francis Joseph, has wrested from the people a constitution which they compelled him to give them, only four or five years ago, and that now the police are authorized to arrest, without warrant, and imprison, any three men in Austria who may be found standing together. He could not have known that to-day, women—women of the highest rank, women of education, women of the purest character; ay, Christian women—are pining in the dungeons of Austria, merely for political offenses. The gentleman certainly must have forgotten, in his zeal, the celebrated proclamation of Haynau, a portion of which I beg leave to read. It is the proclamation of July, 1849, and was addressed to the Hungarians who were then engaged in a revolution, which excited the warmest sympathy, not only of the American people, but of every lover of freedom throughout the world. Haynau, in addressing them on that occasion, said:

“Although the greater majority of you are Germans by language and by habit, yet, led on by a rascally hero of words, you have participated in the chimerical project of forming a Republic.” * * * “But I conform to the magnanimity of my Emperor and master. Hearken, however, to the voice of an old soldier who has shown how he keeps his word. Death will be visited, without regard to condition or sex, without delay, and on the spot where the deed is committed, upon every one: 1. Who attempts to assist the cause of the rebels, by word or deed, or by wearing revolutionary emblems. 2. Who dares to insult, by word or deed, one of my soldiers, or one of the soldiers of my brave allies. 3. Who enters into treasonable connections with the enemies of the Crown, and who attempts to kindle the spark of rebellion by malignant reports. 4. Who dares to secrete arms—as was, unfortunately, formerly the case—and does not deliver them during the space of time appointed by another proclamation of mine.”

That proclamation, sir, ordered the death of every Hungarian who set up for a republican form of government, without regard to age or sex; and that proclamation did not proceed from Haynau; it was authorized by the Emperor of that country than which ours is said to be guiltier. But, sir, we need not go back to 1849. We have only to look at the position of Austria to-day in the struggle now going on between Turkey and Russia, which is a struggle for existence on the part of one of the acknowledged European nations. Austria, true to its instincts of despotism, refuses to allow the telegraph to be used for the purpose of transmitting intelligence of Turkish victories; liberty of the press does not exist there; and nobody is allowed to publish anything unless it is in favor of the Government, and approved by its appointed censors. I say, therefore, that I must differ from my colleague when he attempts to institute a comparison between our Government and that, which is favorable to the latter. But, sir, I shall dismiss that subject—it has no relevancy to the conduct of Captain Ingraham, or of our Government in sustaining him.

I desire now to call the attention of the committee for a few minutes to the reasons which influenced me in introducing the resolutions in relation to Captain Ingraham. They will probably come up for action in the House in a few days, and, as is often the case, there may then be no opportunity of debating them at all. I therefore ask the attention of the committee to the subject now.

The object of introducing these resolutions and passing them here is not for the purpose merely of glorifying Captain Ingraham, nor yet for the purpose of bestowing praise or casting censure upon this Administration; but it is simply as an act of justice to a man who, alone, thousands of miles from his country, has dared to be brave, prudent, and resolute; and who, in the assertion of a great principle, has been victorious without the shedding of blood; and who, by his conduct, has maintained the great principle of American law, the right of expatriation, the right of every man to select his own place of residence, no matter where he may have been born. It is for another purpose—it is to show the world that American citizenship is worth possessing. Pass these resolutions, and you say to our people engaged in commerce, and traveling in whatever country, that wherever American enterprise may lead them, there American valor will defend; and that there is no one entitled to the protection of our Government, no matter how insignificant, but its whole power, if need be, will be brought to his aid. And, sir, whether Koszta was a citizen, and entitled to protection as a citizen, or whether he was a mere stranger and sojourner, it matters not; he had a paper which led Captain Ingraham to believe he was a proper subject for the exercise of power; it was exercised, and he was rescued; the principle was established, even if the person had no right to claim its exercise in his case. But we are told that he should not be protected because he was not a citizen, that he had only declared his intention to become such. I submit that citizenship has nothing to do with the case. The question is whether, when a man is entitled to the protection of the American flag by having resided in this country, and obtained a domicile here, or having declared his intention to become a citizen of these States, or by passport, or in any other way has placed himself in the situation of a subject, whether our brave naval officers are not to be sustained in affording it, even though they may be compelled to do it at the cannon's mouth. We have voted swords to Generals Scott and Taylor, and to other officers of our army, and unanimously. We are now called upon, and, in concert with the President, who has sustained Captain Ingraham, and the Secretary of the Navy—we being a coördinate and independent branch of the Government, the war-making power—to uphold the great principle involved. It is our duty to do so by some plain and explicit declaration, and I know of no more appropriate and emphatic manner of doing it than by adopting the resolutions that have been proposed.

Now, sir, I shall not go into any argument to justify Captain Ingraham. That has been done already by abler hands than mine. If any arguments were needed to sustain his conduct, gentlemen can find them by reference to that world-renowned correspondence. If any precedents be needed, they are cited there; but no precedents, no arguments could make this case plainer. God made each of us a man before He made him a citizen; and one has only to refer to the heart that is within him to justify the act at Smyrna.

I shall detain the committee no longer, Mr. Chairman. I trust that whenever this matter comes before the House it will be promptly acted on, and that the resolutions will be unanimously passed, and go forth to the world to show that the American Congress is willing to sustain American officers in the defense of American rights, and the protection of American citizens, both native and adopted.

Mr. GIDDINGS replied to Mr. DEAN, and said, in the course of his remarks, that no man on this floor—no “free Democrat”—had ever asked Congress to interfere with slavery; but, on the contrary, they wished to wash their hands of the contagion, and leave it to the States in which it exists. This Government has not the constitutional right to involve him in the turpitude or disgrace in the traffic. Any man who seeks to involve the people of New York, or of any other State, in the traffic, is an enemy to the human race, and opposed to the very principles which Jefferson, Hancock, Adams, and others, proclaimed.

He then opposed the recommendation of the President to indemnify certain citizens of Spain, growing out of the Amistad affair, and gave a history of the case.

[His speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. WALSH next obtained the floor.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I ask the gentleman from New York to give me the floor a moment, for the purpose of explanation?

Mr. WALSH. I will yield for a moment.

Mr. BAYLY. I desire, then, to say that the speech just made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GIDDINGS] is full of errors, both of law and of fact; errors which, at some future time, will be exposed.

Mr. GIDDINGS. No threats. No threats.

Mr. BAYLY. I do not propose to make any threats. I only want to ask that the House will not prejudice the merits of this case; for, I repeat, that the argument so elaborately gone into by the gentleman from Ohio is full of errors, both of law and of fact.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Which I suppose the gentleman will pledge himself to show.

Mr. BAYLY. Yes, sir, I pledge myself to show it when the proper opportunity shall present itself.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WALSH,] who holds the floor, to give way for a motion that the committee rise.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the gentleman to allow me a moment for personal explanation.

Mr. WALSH. I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for that purpose.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to take no part in the discussion of the question now before the committee, and I should not have troubled the House with a word, but for an assertion, as I understood it, made by the gentleman from Ohio, who has just taken his seat, viz: that a statement made by a former member from the city of Philadelphia was a deliberate and willful misrepresentation.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I did not say precisely that. I said that I considered it as such, and that I would produce facts to prove that it was such.

Mr. CHANDLER. Not knowing who was chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs in 1844, and knowing who was the representative of the city of Philadelphia at that time, I felt anxious to interpose a word with reference to my immediate predecessor. I now understand that reference was had, not to that gentleman, but to his kinsman, who then represented a district of Philadelphia county, not adjoining that which is contained in the city.

The reference, however, is to a gentleman and a scholar, whose fault of being a Democrat of course I condemn and deeply deplore, but of whom, in his absence, such a charge should not be made. He is now one of my constituents, and without feeling that I need make myself his champion, I cannot, certainly with propriety, allow such an imputation—and to be made in the presence of so many new members—without expressing dissent. The statements and arguments of the report mentioned may be erroneous, but I cannot think that it is right, in the absence of the author, to designate them as willful misrepresentations. The discrepancies mentioned by the gentleman from Ohio, as occurring in the report, are too patent to warrant any supposition of intended error.

Mr. FLORENCE. And no other gentleman from Pennsylvania on this floor would willingly state what he believed to be untrue.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I hope the gentleman from New York [Mr. WALSH] will favor me with the floor for one moment. I trust he will extend to me the same courtesy he extended to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. WALSH. I feel under an obligation to decline the request.

[Loud cries of "Go on!" "Go on!"]

Mr. WALSH. I had intended to make some remarks at length on this question, but I have too much regard for the feelings of an already exhausted House, and too much respect for myself, to indulge in those remarks to-day.

I am not so desirous of making a speech that I will attempt to do so now, but shall confine myself to one or two suggestions in regard to the course which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GIDDINGS] has undertaken to-day. Among theologians, as a general thing, when a man undertakes to be pious, when he gets what, in theological parlance, is called religion, he is taken kindly by the hand and is prayed for, and encouraged. He is not repelled and repulsed. And when one of my Soft friends from New York, who is in what may be said to be a chrysalis state of Abolitionism, and is gradually softening, and becoming encouraged by the regularly-avowed Abolitionists, might be soon found, after the patronage of the President is entirely disposed of, and all the inducements for men to belie and falsify their humanity have passed—I say, when such men might be found gradually softening until they are dissolved in the political cess-pool of their Abolitionism, I think it is at least impolitic, not to say ungenerous, on the part of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GIDDINGS] to have met these attempts which the Softs of New York have been so studiously making, when freed from the contaminating influences of political partisans, to renew the coalition which they once formed with them in 1848. [Laughter.] Now, sir, the other day a couple of gentlemen stood upon this floor gratuitously to vindicate an Administration which has not been assailed in this House. They thought to draw the true men of New York from their position into an attack upon this Administration—which they never have contemplated; but we have proved ourselves too good tacticians to be caught by that dodge. It was not a little strange, it was not a little ominous, that this gratuitous, this uncalled-for defense of the Administration, should have come from men—the one a Free-Soiler and the other a Whig—both opposed to the principles on which Franklin Pierce was whirled into the White House. Sir, when the time comes—and it has not come yet—New York will utter her voice; but, thus far, I, and those who cooperate with me, have sat in our seats like orderly and respectable citizens, and like quiet and sincere Christians. [Laughter.]

We have sat still and watched and prayed, and the result of it has been a beautiful quarrel between the Abolitionists of the strongest grade and the incipient Abolitionists—a quarrel which I have no disposition to spoil. [Laughter.] But, sir, let me tell this House that when the time does come for New York to speak—when the time arrives for the true Democracy of New York to tell the Administration, or this House, or the country, what they think of its course, New York will speak in language that will admit of no two interpretations. New York will speak in language that nobody will misunderstand. Until that happy day arrives, I shall content myself with returning to my quiet and orderly position. [Laughter.]

Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania, obtained the floor, but yielded it to

Mr. RIDDLE, who moved that the committee do now rise.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman (Mr. ORR) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly the annual message of the President of the United States, and had come to no conclusion thereon.

On motion by Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana, The House then adjourned until to-morrow.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 22, 1853.

Prayer by the Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.
The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

FRENCH SPOILIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Messrs. HAMLIN, THOMSON, of New Jersey, DAWSON, PEARCE, and JOHNSON, the select committee to consider the bill "to provide for the ascertainment and satisfaction of the claims of American citizens for spoiliations committed by the French prior to the 31st day of July, in the year 1801."

CHRISTMAS HOLIDAYS.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I wish, before the call for petitions, to submit a motion which I believe is even now in order. It is in respect to the adjournment over. As next Sunday will be Christmas day, and as Monday will be devoted to the usual Christmas festivities, instead of submitting the usual motion for an adjournment over from Thursday to Monday, I move that when the Senate adjourns to-morrow, it will adjourn to meet on Tuesday next.

The motion was agreed to.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. FISH presented the petition of the heirs of Captain John Burnham, asking indemnity for losses sustained by their father during his captivity in Algiers; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. EVANS presented the petition of A. V. Toomer and others, praying remuneration for a church destroyed by the British army in the war of the Revolution; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

Mr. SEWARD. I move that the memorial and papers in the case of Horace Southmayd & Son, of New York, praying the return of duties imposed on a cargo of goods imported into Mexico during the late war, be withdrawn from the files and referred to the Committee on Finance. I am requested by the applicants to say that this memorial has been for six years before the Senate of the United States. It has every year been referred to the appropriate committee, but has never yet been reported upon. I take the freedom, therefore, under the circumstances of the case, to invite to it the attention of the Committee on Finance.

Leave was granted.

On motion by Mr. SEWARD, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of the heirs of John Morgan, deceased, be withdrawn from the files, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion by Mr. BENJAMIN, it was Ordered, That the petition of Albert G. Howell be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

On motion by Mr. BENJAMIN, it was Ordered, That the petition of William Darby be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. JAMES, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Abigail Stafford be withdrawn from the files, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion by Mr. JAMES, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of James H. West, of Bristol, Rhode Island, be withdrawn from the files, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

On motion by Mr. JAMES, it was Ordered, That the petition of William Jones, late of Massachusetts, and the papers in the case of Elizabeth Arnold, of Pawtucket, Rhode Island, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion by Mr. MASON, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Lieutenant William D. Porter be withdrawn from the files, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

On motion by Mr. DAWSON, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of B. Piemont and Max Woodhull, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

On motion by Mr. BENJAMIN, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers relative to the claim of Priscilla Prewett, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I move that the papers, petitions, and memorials on the files of the Senate, which were presented during the last Congress, relating to the bill granting further remedies to patentees, may be withdrawn from the files, and referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, to which the bill was referred.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. CLAY, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the memorial of Hodges & Ladsdale, and the legal representatives of Rinaldo Johnson, and of Ann E. Johnson, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for their relief; which was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHIELDS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the petition of Richard M. Boughton, George Wright, and the widow of Marvin W. Fisher, reported a bill for their relief; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred a bill to reimburse the Common Council of New York city for expenditures made for the first regiment of New York volunteers, reported the bill back, and recommended its passage.

OFFICERS OF THE SENATE.

Mr. MASON. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That a select committee be appointed to take into consideration the several resolutions and orders of the Senate providing for the appointment and prescribing the duties of its officers, to report rules and regulations, fixing the number of such officers and subordinates, classifying them and fixing their compensation, prescribing the mode of appointment and dismissal from office, and effecting such organization generally, as better to insure their responsibility and efficiency; the committee to consist of three members, to be appointed by the President pro tempore.

At the last session, it will be remembered that I intimated a purpose to offer a resolution of this character at the commencement of the present session. I have been satisfied, after some inquiry and some experience, that the organization of the corps of officers of this body requires some investigation and remodeling. I do not propose to ask for the consideration of the resolution now, as it will be printed, as a matter of course, and I presume the Senate will take it into consideration at an early day after the first of January.

Mr. DAWSON. Why not consider it now?

Mr. MASON. If there be no objection, I would be glad to have it considered now.

Mr. GWIN. Is the resolution now on its passage?

Mr. MASON. I stated, when the Senator was not present, that I had no disposition to urge its consideration now; but Senators suggested that it should be acted upon at the present time.

Mr. GWIN. I prefer that it should lie over for a day for further consideration, though I do not know that I have the least objection to it. However, I will not be alone in making objections to its consideration now.

The resolution was agreed to.

POST OFFICE ORDERS.

Mr. SUMNER submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be directed to consider the expediency of providing for the convenience and security of remittances abroad in small sums, by authorizing orders or drafts from our post office on foreign post offices with which it is in correspondence, constituting an international system of post office orders.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

AMENDMENT TO SENATE RULES.

Mr. BADGER gave notice of his intention to introduce a resolution to amend the 48th rule of the Senate.

WIDOW OF CAPTAIN GUNNISON.

Mr. CASS. I have a resolution to propose, to the consideration of which, at this time, I hope there will be no objection. It is one which should claim our immediate attention. It is as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting a pension to the widow of Captain Gunnison, late of the Army, and recently killed by the Indians in Utah while in the performance of his duty.

Mr. GWIN. Were there not other persons massacred on the occasion alluded to in the resolution?

Mr. CASS. I believe so.

Mr. GWIN. Will it not be necessary, if they are to be provided for, to take some such action in regard to them? I think provision should be made for them also; and I may feel called upon to have it made, either by an amendment to this resolution, or by introducing an independent one.

Mr. CASS. I have no objection to the consideration of such a proposition; but this is a case which should stand by itself; and I do not want the widow of Captain Gunnison to go without the provision which the resolution proposes to make. We have received the affecting intelligence that Captain Gunnison, while in the performance of his duty, was killed, under very aggravating circumstances, by the Indians. He was a most estimable citizen, and a very faithful, intelligent, and able officer. I learn, on inquiry, that he has left a widow and three small children. He has left them with means very incompetent for their support, as is very often the case with officers of the Army; for theirs is anything but a money-making profession. I find, too, on examination, that the existing laws do not apply to the case, because there is no such state of war with the Indians as would justify the Pension Office applying the ordinance which is in force, and therefore I introduce the resolution. If the honorable Senator from California wishes to introduce any other principle, or include any other persons, I would rather that he should introduce a separate resolution, than include it in this.

On the request of Mr. SHIELDS, the resolution was again read.

Mr. CASS. I will observe that under the same circumstances in which Captain Gunnison was killed, if there had been a recognized state of war with the Indians, it would have required no resolution in order to give a pension to his widow. He was killed in a mere assault by the Indians, which cannot be recognized as coming within the existing principle.

Mr. SHIELDS. I concur with the honorable Senator from Michigan, that according to the construction which is given to the existing law, this case does not come within the principle, but I think that the construction which is given to the law is entirely too narrow; a wider range should be given to it. I concur with the honorable Senator from Michigan in the object which his resolution proposes, and I hope it will not be burdened by others. I hope the Senator from California will not feel called upon to offer an amendment.

Mr. GWIN. I do not intend to move any amendment to the resolution; I merely made an inquiry. I want all the persons who were massacred on the occasion alluded to, to be provided for by the Government, if it can be done without introducing a dangerous principle. I have merely declared that I intend, hereafter, to bring before the Senate, the question whether all the persons massacred while in the performance of their duty should not be provided for.

Mr. CASS. I think it might be a suitable matter of inquiry whether some provision should not be made in cases of other than military men, as men driving teams in the army, when killed in the line of their duty; but still, I think that the inquiry should be made independent of this resolution.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

ILLINOIS JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

Mr. SHIELDS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into the expediency of dividing the State of Illinois into two United States judicial districts.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. GWIN gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill making a grant of land to aid in the construction of the following railroads in the State of California, to wit: from San Francisco to San Jose, from Sacramento to Nevada City, and from Stockton to Sonora.

Mr. SLIDELL gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to establish a navy-yard and depot near the city of New Orleans.

Also, a bill to provide for the removal of obstructions in the navigation of the Mississippi river at the Southwest Pass.

Mr. SEBASTIAN gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill for extending the time for issuing and locating military land warrants.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BRIGHT, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to amend the third section of the act making appropriations for the civil and diplomatic expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1854, approved March 3, 1853; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SLIDELL, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill granting the right of way and a portion of the public lands to the State of Florida, to aid in the construction of a railroad across the peninsula in said State; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SEBASTIAN, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to amend an act to divide the district of Arkansas into two judicial districts, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HAMLIN, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill authorizing the construction of a line of telegraph from the Mississippi river to the Pacific ocean; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

LIEUTENANT GENERALCY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution to confer the title of lieutenant general by brevet for eminent services. It proposes to revive the grade of lieutenant general by brevet in the Army, in order that the President and Senate may acknowledge eminent services in the last war with Mexico, by the conferring of that title by brevet; with a proviso, that when it shall have been filled and become vacant, it shall not again be conferred.

Mr. ADAMS. A similar proposition was before the Senate at the last session of Congress, having reference by name to a distinguished general who has rendered service to his country—General Scott. I opposed it then upon principle. I was then, as I am now, of opinion that that distinguished individual, having received a vote of thanks from the representatives of the people in both branches of Congress, had conferred upon him the highest compliment that could be legitimately bestowed upon him. I concurred fully in the propriety of that vote of thanks; but to create a title in this republican Government, simply for the purpose of distinction, is, in my humble opinion, wrong, and is setting a bad precedent. If we want to give him a title, let us give him an old and familiar one, as duke or lord. If you wish to ape foreign Powers, ape them—follow them in language and in terms. I see no necessity for creating additional rank, because I think that as much honor as any military man or civilian ought to desire, can be received in the positions already provided for by law. If there be a necessity for this office, provide for it by law; but a mere title to be created by the American Congress, to be conferred upon an individual, in my humble judgment, bestows no honor upon him, nor does it benefit the institutions of the country. These, sir, are my objections to the joint resolution. I shall ask for the yeas and nays upon its passage.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. President, I feel very much as the Senator from Mississippi does. I have some aversion to making any opposition to the passage of this resolution, and particularly upon the ground that I do feel opposition to it; for I know that the ground of objection to it, in my own mind, is one that does not obtain in the estimation of the honorable Senator who introduced it, [Mr. SHIELDS.] I know that no one is prompted by a more patriotic feeling, or by a stronger devotion to the Constitution, than that honorable Senator.

My objection, sir, to the proposition now before the Senate is, that it is a violation of the spirit of the Constitution. Suppose that, at the time the Constitution was adopted, the title proposed to be conferred in this case had been one known to exist under monarchical Governments in Europe, would any one hesitate for a moment to say that this proposition would embrace a case which was intended to be prohibited by the Constitution? The titles of nobility in Europe were, at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, known to those who framed that instrument. We now recognize certain titles existing there as known titles of nobility. This is not among them. But what was the meaning of the Constitution? I take it to be simply this: a prohibition to confer any style or title which should be unconnected with the performance of duty—any style or title which might be deemed a mere honorary or complimentary mark of distinction. If we should substitute, in this instance, one of the known styles or titles of nobility, no one could for a moment doubt that it would be an infringement of the Constitution.

If you can confer this title of distinction, pray let me ask you, why can you not substitute some other name for that of lieutenant general? Suppose that in the case of the distinguished individual to whom, more than any other, this resolution is designed to refer, we should, instead of saying lieutenant general, propose to confer the title of Duke of New Jersey, would any one then doubt for an instant that it was an infringement, not only of the spirit, but of the very letter of the Constitution? It seems to me that no one could doubt it.

Now, sir, this title of distinction, of preëminence, or, if you please, having reference to the spirit of the Constitution, this title of nobility, is not designed to be connected with the performance of any duty. Ours was designed to be a plain Government. When an individual was called upon to perform public service, to designate his grade an official name was permitted by the Constitution to be given to the character of his employment. But, as I view it, the Constitution was intended to prohibit the bestowal of any style, name, or mark of distinction unconnected with the absolute performance of duty to the public. I may be wrong, or I may be right; but while the Constitution remains as it is, I am unwilling to go around the bush to touch the sanctity even of its spirit, for I know not what I am about to do.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I do not think it is necessary to waste much time in attempting to reply to the honorable Senator from Wisconsin. He paid me a compliment for which I must return him my thanks. I should certainly regret very much, knowingly to bring in any resolution which would violate the Constitution, either in letter or in spirit. But, sir, if this resolution violates the Constitution, it has been violated since its formation, by every title that has been conferred upon an officer of the army—by the conferring of the title of captain as much as the title of general. What is the difference in principle between conferring a brevet for a lieutenant generalcy, and a brevet for a captaincy or a major generalcy, or any other rank in the Army.

The title of general, the highest title, which in some countries is called generalissimo, was conferred on General Washington. He commanded the army in the revolutionary war by that title. It is the highest title in a military sense that can be conferred upon a man. Napoleon, it is true, created the title of marshal, but it was very much the same. Afterwards, the title of lieutenant general was conferred upon Washington, by mistake, at a time when it was believed we were about to get into a war with France. He was then recalled from his retircacy, and was about to be placed at the head of the army by the title of lieutenant general; but it was found that, instead of giving a higher title than he had possessed in the revolutionary war, they had made a mistake. They were degrading him, and the title of lieutenant general was never actually conferred upon him, but he received his old title of general. But this title was created at that time by Congress, and the object of this resolution is merely to revive it in a brevet shape, as in the case of a captain, a colonel, a brigadier general, or a major general.

I have before stated, and it is scarcely worth while to repeat it, that of all the officers who served in the Mexican war, the only one who derives no benefit, no profit, no technical honor, from his services, is General Scott. Why, sir, humble as I am, I had the honor of receiving a brevet, and others had the honor of receiving two, and some even three brevets; lieutenants, captains, and colonels, received brevets for almost every act of gallant service; and yet, sir, the man who, at the head of that army, conducted it not only with success, but with such success as will be hard to repeat again, from Vera Cruz to the city of Mexico, has received neither additional pay nor additional honor, except such as the country voluntarily bestowed upon him for his glorious service. What is the object of this resolution? Merely to do him that justice which has been done to the whole army that served under him. And how long will this last? General Scott is an old man. He is far advanced in life, and I am sorry to say that there will soon be very few of these men upon whom you can confer brevets or anything else. They are falling around you every day. Men younger than he, who participated in that war, have fallen—but few of them are left. You will not be troubled with them long. Those who did not fall by the sword brought home disease, which is sweeping them off almost by myriads, every year.

I regretted to see the opposition which a similar resolution met with at the last session, not in this body, I am happy to say, but in the other House. If there is to be any opposition to arise to it, I should prefer that it would come from some of our friends on this [the Whig] side of the Chamber. I think the successful should always be generous and magnanimous. If there is any principle that I value most highly in Democracy, it is that I believe it is generous and liberal towards its opponents; for even liberty without liberality is sometimes rather harsh.

I shall not waste the time of the Senate by saying any more upon this subject. I think the honorable Senator from Wisconsin, for whose opinion I have a high respect, has made a mistake in supposing that this resolution can, by any possibility, be construed or tortured into a violation of the Constitution. If it be, then we have been violating the Constitution ever since it was framed.

Mr. PETTIT. Before the Senator sits down, I wish to ask him a question. Will this rank confer greater emoluments, or greater pay on General Scott?

Mr. SHIELDS. I am free to say that it is my intention and wish that it should.

Mr. PETTIT. That would be an inducement for me to vote for it. But I wish to ask a further question.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will reply to this first. That is a matter within the discretion of the President of the United States. No brevet confers pay of itself. It is merely intended as a high honorary military compliment for gallant services. But if the President of the United States assigns a man to a command proportioned to his brevet rank, then he is entitled to pay according to that rank, and in no other case; so that it will depend upon the President of the United States.

Mr. PETTIT. I wish to ask the Senator whether there is any higher command than General Scott now has, to which he can be assigned? Is there a substance in this, or is it a mere bauble? Is it a name, or a substance, or a bauble?

Mr. SHIELDS. I do not know what the honorable Senator means by "substance."

Mr. PETTIT. I mean by "substance," additional pay, money, command; an increase, a greater command, a greater power in the army. By "form," or by "shadow," I mean mere title, a mere bauble, which I think would be of no use to General Scott.

Mr. SHIELDS. The honorable Senator takes a very practical view of this matter. He looks upon the money as the substantial thing, and upon the title as the "bauble;" but soldiers sometimes, without any reference to money or pecuniary advantages, like to earn and receive such baubles. I am happy to say that this substantial interest is not as highly prized in the army as it is in some civil branches.

Mr. PETTIT. It is now-a-days considered necessary to have some regard to filthy lucre. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHIELDS. But, sir, as I remarked before, my hope is that General Scott will, for the few short years he is to remain among us, receive some additional compensation. I think he deserves it, and ought to have it.

Mr. PETTIT. Is there any higher command which he can have to entitle him to it?

Mr. SHIELDS. No, sir; there is no higher command. That is very true. He cannot have a higher command than that of being the commanding general of the army, next to the President, who is the commander-in-chief. I repeat that I not only wish to see the title conferred upon him, but I expect that additional pay will also be granted.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois is not doubtless aware that he has, in the course of his remarks, given, perhaps, the best justification for my objection which he could have given. He says that General Scott is the only officer who fought in the Mexican war who has not received any honorary—any titular reward. Why, let him advert to the Constitution for an instant, let any Senator do it, and find, if he can, (and if he find it let him point it out to me, or to the Senate,) where there is any authority for titular reward in that instrument. Upon the contrary, there is the most express prohibition in spirit of anything of the kind. The Senator himself did obtain a brevet for his services, and no one deserved it more meritoriously than that Senator.

Mr. SHIELDS. Will the Senator from Wisconsin permit me to ask him whether he does not recognize a distinction—a broad, clear, and marked distinction—between military titles and titles of nobility?

Mr. WALKER. I do not, when the style or title is conferred unassociated with the performance of duty, but as a mere mark of distinction above, and preëminent to his associates. The Senator has likened this case to the ordinary case of brevets. It is useless to speak as to the policy, the propriety, or the constitutionality of the brevet system, for it has been established by precedent; but I think that if it were now to arise for the first time, it might well be the subject of very serious consideration. I know of many who have been breveted since I have had the honor of a seat upon this floor. It gave me pleasure, I must say, so far as my knowledge of the individuals was concerned, to see those brevets bestowed. In no case was I more pleased than in the case of the honorable Senator who introduced this resolution. I know of none who better deserved a brevet. But as to the constitutional question, I say, if it were now an original one, it might well be the subject of more serious contemplation.

The Senator said that if this be a violation of the Constitution, it had been violated ever since its formation. He asks what is the difference between conferring the brevet title of captain and that of general? I said in my first remarks that when an individual is set aside for the performance of duty, he is from necessity to receive some designation, but it is always associated with duty. When we speak of a captain, we speak of one who has command of a company, and whose duty it is to command it. When we speak of a colonel, it is of one who has command of a regiment, and whose duty it is to command that regiment. When we speak of a general, we speak of him as associated with his military duty, and the performance of it. The Senator has admitted that a major general is the highest military station that we have for the performance of military duty. Now, when we come to speak of a lieutenant general, with what service to the country, either civil or military, do we associate the title? Whenever we divest it of any association whatever with the performance of duty, do we not at once perceive something counter to the spirit of the Constitution, something that is merely ideal, something that is mere style, mere title, and intended to elevate an individual as a marked point of preëminence above the rest of his fellow-citizens, without imposing upon him any duty? It seems to me to be so.

I am, however, perfectly aware that opposition to the passage of this resolution is hopeless. I believe it will be passed by the Senate by a large majority. But, sir, I have reflected upon the subject; I believe I said nothing in regard to it at the last session, but I thought of it then; I have thought of it since, and I am most seriously of the impression that it is a violation of the spirit of the Constitution.

Suppose, sir, that some one shall outstrip even the gallant general spoken of by the honorable Senator from Illinois. Suppose that when this country shall be in more imminent peril than it has been; when the combined nations, with their combined armies, shall be coming against us, and shall be about to hurl us from the high preëminence which we now enjoy, there shall step forward some one who can clothe himself with even more glory than Washington or Scott; what shall we do for him? Ah, sir, there will then be a serious reflection, whether the bestowal of this title was not the fatal step beyond the performance of duty. It will then be seriously thought whether we cannot do something more for that great one than for those who preceded him. It is in this light, in this point of view, that I cannot favor this step. I hope that I shall never see the time when there will be a necessity for calling upon any one to perform for us greater services than have heretofore been performed; but if he ever shall arise, what then shall we do for him? The title of lieutenant general will have been bestowed, and some greater mark of distinction will have to be bestowed upon him; what shall it be?

Mr. MASON. I did not intend, Mr. President, to take any part in this debate, although, perhaps, it might have been expected, representing, as I do, the State which had the honor to give birth to the gallant captain upon whom it is proposed to confer this mark of distinction, but that a suggestion has been made by the Senator who has just taken his seat, that there was something in conflict with the Constitution in conferring this brevet rank. Sir, I think I have been in the habit of construing the Constitution and its powers as strictly as most Senators on this floor; but it never occurred to me, nor has it occurred to those who have heretofore conferred brevet rank—for if the objection applies to the grade of lieutenant general, it applies as well to the subordinate grades—that when you increase military rank by a military name, you thereby create a title of any sort; for it is at last but creating a new military rank by a military name.

The prohibition in the Constitution, I apprehend, is perfectly intelligible. It is confined to an order and a class known as well to the common-law of the world as any other class or order. When you speak of the nobility upon the continent of Europe, or in England, that separates a class just as effectually as the sexes are separated. The prohibition in the Constitution is against granting a title creating such a class, or such a distinction of nobility. I do not see—although I am satisfied that the honorable Senator from Wisconsin is sincere—that there is really anything substantial in the constitutional objection which he has raised.

Sir, I did not intend to say anything. I could say nothing that would add either in the opinion of the country, or of the world, one cubit to the gallant stature which this distinguished man achieved in the Mexican war. If I were to say he has shed luster upon our arms, and renown upon our country, I should but réecho what has been said not only here, but abroad; but there is one feature which has, I confess, impressed me more strongly in the career of this gallant captain, than any which has been alluded to. It is the great moral example which he set to the world in the conduct of an invading army in a foreign country. He carried no devastation, no ruin—he sacked no villages, plundered no people; but cast over them the arm of his protection wherever he went. When he seized their capital, he established a police law which will impress itself upon the character of that nation forever hereafter. So far from countenancing or permitting the least license in his soldiers, in his officers, in the hangers-on of his camp, the least violation of his strict orders in that respect was exemplarily punished. The name of Scott will be treasured up in Mexico by the patriots of that land, although he was a conqueror. Sir, the great moral example which he set the world, will cast more luster upon the American name than the prowess of his arms. And where does he stand? Why, as has well been said by the very gallant and distinguished Senator from Illinois, who offered this resolution, he is the only one of all his colleagues who has received no recognition of his services in Mexico by additional military rank.

What, then, is it proposed to do? Simply to revive, by brevet, an office which once existed. Whether it will or will not carry with it additional emolument, I do not know, and should not inquire. I hope it may carry some additional emolument, because that man who commands the Army, who is obliged from the necessity of his position to consider himself the representative of the Army at home and abroad, has expenses necessarily devolved upon him which he ought to have the means of discharging. I have not inquired whether this brevet rank will or will not carry with it additional emolument, though I trust it may. I shall be gratified with the passage of the resolution, and I hope it will be the pleasure of the Senate to pass it.

Mr. SHIELDS. I desire to say a word upon the point suggested by the Senator. The bill is drawn in such a shape that there is no possibility of making this brevet different from all other brevets which are conferred upon other officers. It is precisely the same provision that applies to the case of other brevets. Whether the officer shall receive additional pay or not, will depend upon the discretion of the President as to whether he will give him a command proportioned to the rank.

Mr. PETTIT. I do not know but that the questions which I asked the Senator from Illinois, and the motives which induced me to ask them, have been misunderstood. I simply desired to know whether the brevet rank, which it is proposed to confer, would give any additional command to General Scott, and whether it would carry with it any additional pay? I have been revolving the matter in my mind as to whether these things would take place or not. I cannot say that I am very well informed about the organization of our Army; but it seems to me that as to the first proposition, there can be no higher command under the President conferred than General Scott now has, in time of peace especially. He is next in command to the President—the President being the constitutional commander of the Army. As to the increase of pay, if we have any existing law providing that a brevet officer shall have a higher pay than one who is not breveted, then this may increase General Scott's pay. The idea that I intended to convey by the question that I asked, was, that if I could learn that there was a necessity of increasing the command—giving a greater command than General Scott now has—and that it would directly or indirectly increase his pay, it would be an inducement for me to vote for the joint resolution, believing, as I do, that neither the Army nor the civil list of the United States is more than half paid. I would, however, rather make it directly; and I said to the Senator from Illinois, that I would vote for a proposition directly to increase General Scott's pay; and I do not know but that I am prepared now, even in his lifetime, to fix, in anticipation, a pension upon his widow and his children; but that may be talked of hereafter. There is no man who entertains a higher estimation of the talents and military services of General Scott than I do—none understanding them no better than I do—nor would I do anything to cast a blight or gloom over the declining years of that gallant officer. If he be desirous of receiving a bauble, or an additional feather in his cap, I do not know that I could find it in my heart to refuse it; but I would much rather know that it conferred substantial, lasting, and tangible benefit upon him, to soothe his declining years and benefit his family. If, therefore, it follows that there is that lasting, tangible, and substantial benefit following the conferring of this title, I should be much readier to vote for it.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not wish to be understood as opposing any proposition which is intended to confer honor upon General Scott, or reward him for the distinguished services which he has rendered to his country; but, notwithstanding what has been said in favor of the joint resolution which is before us, I am yet at a loss to see how a joint resolution, creating a new title, a higher military title than can now exist by law, will confer any additional honor upon him, over and above the vote of thanks which has already passed the two Houses of Congress. If the object be to pay him an additional compensation for his services, let it come up as a direct proposition. If he has not been sufficiently paid, the country is ready to pay him; but do not let us do it indirectly.

It is said, however, by the distinguished Senator from Illinois, [Mr. SHIELDS,] that brevet appointments have been conferred upon various individuals, from the commencement of the Government to the present time. That is true, sir; individuals, having a particular rank in the Army, have, by a vote of Congress, been complimented with a rank above their actual command, and received pay accordingly. But I believe there is no solitary instance of creating a title or an office, simply to bestow it as a compliment. It is where the office has existed that the individual has been complimented with the title of a higher grade than his command. The proposition in the case of General Washington, was to confer upon him a command which, it was supposed at the time, his title would confer, and not as a compliment. The Father of his Country never had to receive it as a compliment. In the case where Mr. Polk asked the creation of a lieutenant general, it was not intended as a compliment. The condition of things, which Senators will recollect, and which caused a conflict between this distinguished individual and the late President of the United States, with regard to their separate commands, placed the then President in an awkward and unpleasant condition in relation to their difference. And, in order that there might be a command above what the law then authorized, he asked that the office of lieutenant general might be created in the Army. Congress refused to agree to the proposition; and I believe there is no solitary instance in the history of this country of an office being created expressly to bestow a compliment.

Mr. SHIELDS. Will the honorable Senator permit me to say that this is not the creation of an office, but the reviving of one that has been created? But the principle may be the same in both cases. However, it is reviving the office in the shape of a brevet, instead of a command.

Mr. ADAMS. I understand that, sir; I understand that it is called a revival; yet it is the creation of an office to confer honor on an individual, when that individual has received and occupies the highest position in the Army known to the laws of the land. It is said that every other distinguished general, who has rendered services to the country, has been breveted; and why is it that this distinguished individual has not been breveted? Because he already holds the highest office in the Army, except that held by the President, known to the laws of the country. We can confer no higher. There is no possible chance of conferring upon him a higher honor than the vote of thanks which has been bestowed upon him; and who could desire more? Yet it is asked that a new office should be created expressly to be conferred upon him. It is the precedent that I object to. I think that by no means are the objections fallaciously made by my friend from Wisconsin. It is true, as the honorable Senator from Virginia has said, that "nobility," as known in the Constitution, had reference to a particular class of known titles; but I think myself that the spirit of the Constitution did contemplate that there should be no title, either military or otherwise, conferred as a mere distinction, without reference to the discharge of duties connected with it. I think the objections are well taken.

Mr. DOUGLAS. If I were to consult my feelings alone on this occasion, I should vote for the joint resolution; but looking at it as a question of practical legislation, I do not see that I can do so. It is evidently intended as a compliment to General Scott. So far as the Senate of the United States can pay him a compliment, by expressing its approbation of his military conduct, its gratitude even, for his services in the Mexican campaign, I would heartily and cheerfully unite in the expression; but I think that has already been done. If I mistake not, we have already voted General Scott a medal for his conduct. We have already given him a vote of thanks for his services. What higher compliment can we pay him? What higher compliment has the Senate or the nation ever been able to pay any man? Was more than that done for the Father of his Country? Was more done for George Washington, in consideration of his services, than the expression of a nation's gratitude? No. So far as I am advised, no man ever proposed anything in addition to that for the services of Washington to his country.

The conferring the rank of lieutenant general upon General Washington is cited as a precedent for this case. I do not regard it as a precedent, nor do I regard it as an act from which any authority for this proposition can be drawn. The point in that case was this: General Washington had retired from the army; he was a private citizen; it was apprehended that we were about to engage in a war with France; it was the wish of the nation that George Washington should be placed at the head of the Army, in order that he might conduct that war on our part; the highest ranks in the Army were then filled; and if he should be made a major general, the highest rank then known to the Army, he would still be ranked by officers who held commissions of the same grade and of older date. It was necessary, therefore, to create a higher rank, in order to enable General Washington to take the command of the Army; in order to put him at its head; in order that the country might avail itself of his invaluable services. For that reason the rank of lieutenant general was created. It had no reference as a compliment to Washington's past services. No compliment could be paid him in that manner. It was created with reference to the necessity for his future services. It was with a view to the interests of his country, and to them alone, that the office was then created, and that George Washington was appointed to it. If, then, it can be shown that the interests of this country require that the commanding officer shall have the rank of lieutenant general, I am willing to vote for it. And, sir, if the interests of the army, if its legitimate organization, if its usefulness, require the office of lieutenant general to exist, then the law ought to be a permanent one, and should apply to the future as well as to the present.

Mr. SHIELDS. I will state to my colleague the difference between the brevet rank and the positive rank. The brevet rank is conferred for past services, the positive refers to future services.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I am very glad that my colleague has called my attention to that distinction, because I wish to make a remark upon it. I am aware that it is usual to confer a brevet rank upon an officer for past gallant services. That practice has prevailed heretofore in this country, and it is not my object now to object to it; but while the law has recognized the propriety of conferring a brevet rank for gallant services, it has never extended it to the General-in-Chief of the Army. And why? Because it was not possible to extend it to him. He was at the head—he was at the top of the column. There was no higher point to which he could be raised. But, sir, if because the General-in-Chief has distinguished himself, and rendered valuable services, we are to brevet him with the office of lieutenant general, when you have another war, and your lieutenant general shall establish his title to the gratitude of his country, you must create another rank for him, and so on increasing the rank with a new title every time the incumbent shall distinguish himself in the line of his profession; and where is the vocabulary which will furnish titles enough, in all time to come, to make a new rank each time that a man performs gallant services? We have heretofore acted upon the principle that when a man was at the head of his profession, there was no further promotion—that he could not go above that point.

General Scott has all the honor now that he could have if you created a new rank for him. He is now at the head. If you make a higher rank, and put him into it, he is then only at the head of the Army. If you still make another for his successor, you only put him at the head of the Army. Hence the point which I present is this: Are you to create a new title for every man at the head of the Army who performs valuable services?—for certainly it is only a mere name, and the name gets its value from the fact that you have created a new title for him especially; otherwise, the name of lieutenant general would not be more valuable than that of major general. The words imply, if you translate them literally, that the office of lieutenant general is beneath General Scott's present rank. A lieutenant would seem to be lower than a major; but the value of the compliment consists in the fact that you have created the office especially for him to fill it. Now, if you set the example of creating a new office for the General-in-Chief every time that he performs gallant services, it would be offensive hereafter to refuse to make a new title for the next man who distinguishes himself as much as General Scott has done. It is not offensive now to refuse to confer a higher rank upon him. Why? Because it was not done for the Father of his Country. We are now called upon to depart from the example that was then set. We are now asked to do more for a living general than the American people did for him who led our armies through the battles of the Revolution.

Sir, my position is this. You ask me to vote thanks to General Scott; I will vote them cheerfully; if you ask me to vote him a sword, I will do it readily; if you ask me to vote him medal after medal, I will do it with all my heart; and if you will ask any other expression of approbation, of gratitude, of approval, in honor of the gallant officer, which will be a safe precedent to be followed in the future, and which may be applied with safety when another case arises, I will cheerfully do it; but, sir, I cannot agree to establish the principle that a new office must always be created for the head of the Army when he performs his duty, and thereby entitles him to our gratitude. It is with great reluctance that I am obliged to differ from my colleague, and what I apprehend to be, the majority of the Senate, upon this question. It was not my purpose to have said a word; but I have thought it due to myself to explain the ground upon which I shall give my vote, in order that no inference may be drawn of an unwillingness to vote whatever approbation may be given of the conduct of General Scott, which would still be a safe precedent for the future. One word on another point, and I have done.

It has been intimated that the object is to increase the emoluments that should be enjoyed by General Scott. If the Committee on Military Affairs are of the opinion that his pay as General-in-Chief of the Army was not enough in time of war, let them report a bill, and I will vote for the highest sum that they will propose. If they are of opinion that his pay is not sufficient in time of peace, let them bring forward a bill, and I will vote for the increase. If his pay is not sufficient, we ought to increase it. If he has not been adequately paid in money for his services and his sacrifices, let us foot the bill at once; but do it by a direct money appropriation. Then, sir, when we have voted our thanks and our medals, and done all that we can do by way of compliment—and when we shall have made him a pecuniary compensation at the highest point which the Military Committee shall deem him entitled to, I know of nothing more that we can do without establishing a precedent which I do not deem it safe to establish.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I shall have very great pleasure in voting for this bill, which proposes to do honor to a gallant soldier, a noble-hearted gentleman, and an ardent patriot. I shall vote for it, sir, because I believe he has earned the distinction which it is the object of this bill to confer upon him—earned it, not by a mere discharge of duty, but earned it by showing himself in the service of his country to be one of the most consummate generals that the history of the world can produce;—earned it by a campaign unrivaled in modern history, and perhaps in ancient;—earned it by a campaign contrived with the most consummate military skill, executed with the most fearless courage, and the most unerring accuracy;—earned it by a campaign in the midst of a distant and conquered people, where, from the nature of the case, his powers were almost without limit, without the presentation of a single incident in which, with his knowledge, with his consent, or so far as his ability to prevent it extended, the smallest wrong was done to the most humble and dependent of his Mexican foes;—earned it, sir, by showing that war can be conducted with the utmost bravery and gallantry; that fortified places can be stormed, and armies defeated, in the open field, without surrendering the generous emotions that should belong to the heart of man; and that the most perfect humanity, the most generous and considerate pity, can occupy the same breast simultaneously with a courage which would do honor to the masters of war in any age of the world;—earned it, sir, by shedding from himself and the gallant troops that he led, and the noble officers who seconded his exertions, a lustre upon the character of his own country which shall endure forever; not that mere suspicious, and sometimes unworthy, fame which may spring from mere bravery separated from what is otherwise noble and generous in the human breast; but earned it by the union of every noble and excellent quality which can excite the admiration or demand the approbation of mankind;—earned it, sir, because this last, this noble scene of his services in behalf of his country, is worthy of everything that has preceded it in days that have gone by. This last is but the Corinthian capital which crowns the column. It is not an adorned head surmounting a deformed and unornamented shaft, but all is consistent and harmonious: and, Mr. President, allow me to add, what in such a connection should never be forgotten, that over the character of this distinguished military chief there is a purity of moral virtue and excellence, completing a picture upon which the heart of the patriot and the Christian can rest with untiring and unalloyed satisfaction. Sir, he has earned this distinction by rendering military services in the cause of his country, surpassed only by those of that man to whom none is equal, and none is second—he who led our forefathers through the dreadful conflicts of the revolutionary struggle, to an independence which they earned for us, and which we now enjoy.

Mr. President, I did not expect to say one word on the subject of this resolution. I had felt that it was scarcely proper that gentlemen on this side of the Chamber should say a word upon the subject. I have heard this matter more than once discussed in the Senate, and I have remained silent; but I now feel that there is nothing in the circumstances of the case which should induce me to withhold the expression of a sentiment which I deeply feel towards one who, I am satisfied, nobly and richly deserves it. And why, Mr. President, should not this resolution pass? All admit the merits of the object whose promotion to this additional rank is sought by it. Who, sir, will it harm? Will it displace any man from the just rank which he has acquired? Will it pluck a sprig of laurel from any gallant brows that now wear a wreath? Will it endanger the republican institutions under which we live? Why, surely, Mr. President, all these questions must be answered in the negative. Why, then, I repeat, should not this resolution pass, and this brevet—this complimentary rank—be conferred upon this distinguished general?

My friend from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] says that he stands prepared to give a vote of thanks. That has been already done, and certainly it would be in exceedingly bad taste to repeat the thanks which have been once solemnly given by the Congress of the United States. He says that he stands ready to vote him a sword. A sword is not the appropriate complimentary tribute to be given to one of his rank. He says that he is willing to vote him an increase of pay, but he is not willing to give the President an opportunity to confer upon him a lieutenantship by brevet. Why not? Is it anything in the world but a distinction without a difference? He is willing to honor General Scott, and the "brevet" will honor him. He is willing to increase his pay, and the "brevet" will increase it. He is struck with this difficulty: that if we establish the principle that every officer who does his duty is to receive a brevet, we shall find ourselves inconveniently situated, because we shall want ranks in the army to supply the demands made on us for this complimentary distinction. I would say, Mr. President, that I have no idea that a brevet is ever bestowed upon an officer for a mere discharge of his duty. If that were the case, permit me to say, sir, that the consequence would be that every officer who served in the Mexican war, and who did not receive a brevet, would be stigmatized by the omission with the neglect of duty. The brevet is conferred for extraordinary and successful services. Permit me to say that we may safely leave the difficulty that my friend from Illinois has suggested to take care of itself in the time that will come hereafter; for he may rest assured that if brevets upon the commanders of armies are never conferred except on those who shall achieve them by such a brilliant campaign as celebrated the advance of General Scott from Vera Cruz to the city of Mexico, centuries will probably pass before we shall be made so poor in titles as not to be at liberty to acknowledge them. Do not let us look so far ahead. We have the case before us. The compliment is deserved—richly and eminently deserved. We have the means of paying it. Do not tell us that the generosity of the nation may in time become bankrupt, and therefore we shall refuse to honor the just claims upon it now.

Mr. President, I have been tempted into these remarks. I arose mainly for the purpose of making an explanation in respect to the lieutenant generalship conferred on General George Washington. My impression is that gentlemen are mistaken. The title was not conferred on General Washington for the purpose of preventing him from being out-ranked. At the time of our difficulties with France—the quasi war, as it was called—upon the recommendation of Mr. Adams, then President of the United States, a bill was passed which authorized the President to appoint an officer to be commissioned as lieutenant general, and who should command all the armies of the United States. He was made a lieutenant general, and, as lieutenant general, was made commander-in-chief, or rather the general-in-chief, the President himself being, by the Constitution, technically commander-in-chief. It was discovered, though, that by an oversight, in making Washington a lieutenant general, they had really put him in a lower grade than that which he had filled during the revolutionary war, when he was a full general. My friend from Illinois will put me right if I am mistaken in saying that he was a full general and commander of all the forces; and at the very next session of Congress, if my memory serves me rightly, an act of Congress was passed correcting the mistake, and giving to Washington the title of general.

Mr. CLAYTON. If the Senator will allow me, I will read the provision to which he refers, which is contained in the ninth section of the act of March 3, 1799, "for the better regulation of the troops of the United States, and for other purposes." It is in these words:

"Be it further enacted, That a commander of the Army of the United States shall be appointed and commissioned by the style of 'General of the Armies of the United States'; and the present office and title of lieutenant general shall thereafter be abolished."

Mr. BADGER. Allow me, Mr. President, to say one word more; and I will not weary the Senate. As has been said by my noble friend from Illinois, who sits near me, [Mr. SHIELDS,] General Scott is an old man. The sands of his life are fast running away. At no distant day, in the ordinary course of human events, he will be no longer among us. Now, sir, if we feel, as all my friends on both sides of the Chamber have said, this ready acquiescence in his merits, admiration of his services, and willingness to do him honor, let us do him this honor. It may be that it is a bauble. It may be that it is but a feather. Why, sir, we know that when we measure the value of things by the highest standard all the distinctions of earth dwindle into insignificance, and vanish into worthlessness. Be it a bauble or a feather, to a soldier's heart it is dearer than untold millions. And although I have never exchanged a word with that gallant officer upon the subject of this brevet, yet I have reason to know that he would value it more, and feel it more deeply, than any and every testimony of approbation which his country has ever bestowed upon him, dearly as he values them all. Let us now, while he is here, while he is among us, while Providence spares him to us, gild his declining years with this testimony which he values. When we can do it without wrong or injury to others, without interference with our institutions, without constituting any precedent, bad or mischievous, let us honor him gracefully, in the manner that will be most acceptable to his feelings.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I desire to say a word in reply to the Senator from North Carolina. It will be perceived, by the reading of the act to bestow the office of lieutenant general upon George Washington, that that office was created to enable Washington to enter the army in a rank above others. That was the reason for the passage of the law. Hence it was passed with reference to future services. It then being discovered that the rank of lieutenant general was below that which General Washington held while in command of the army of the Revolution the subsequent act was passed to put him on the same footing which he occupied when he commanded the armies of the Revolution, thus showing that the object was to bring him into the army with the same rank in which he had acquired all his glory. They did not increase his rank above that of a general. There were many ranks known to military history much higher than that of general, and if the object of Congress had been to compliment General Washington by promoting him to a higher rank than he formerly occupied, they would have made one higher than that of general, instead of being contented with conferring upon him the same old rank in which he had served through the Revolution.

I make this explanation only to show that this country did not deem it proper to increase the rank of General Washington in consequence of the services which he had rendered. He having been the head of the Army, that was the highest rank which he could hold, and they contented themselves with conferring upon him the same rank, instead of creating a new title in the army.

Mr. CASS. I had no idea of entering into the discussion of this matter, because I have already heretofore given my views upon it to the Senate. I desire, however, to ask the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHIELDS] whether this is the same bill that passed the Senate at the last session?

Mr. SHIELDS. It is precisely word for word.

Mr. CASS. Then I shall vote for it, Mr. President. But I want to say one or two words in reply to some remarks which have been made here. This Government has adopted the practice of extending the reward of brevet rank to military officers. We all know that it has been done ever since the foundation of the Government. Every man acquainted with the military system knows it. It is in full force, and now to refuse it in this case, simply on the grounds which have been urged to-day, would be a most invidious distinction. We have had some fine views expressed about human nature—about the despicable nature of gew-gaws, distinctions, and all that. Well, sir, we have had presented to us a human nature of which I knew nothing. We are all in search of distinction. We do not come here for the compensation attached to our offices solely. We all seek such distinction, from the cradle to the grave; and I ask what your military establishment, without it, would be worth? Not one cent. It would be an armed mob. What sends the officer and soldier to the cannon's mouth, and leads them to perform the duties and actions which become a part of your history? Their life is a life searching for distinction. I repeat, your military establishment would not be worth a straw—your officers would not be worth having—if they were not animated by that noble sentiment. It animates us all, more or less, and it should do so. But beyond that, it is this feeling, this desire for distinction, which upholds the military code and military establishment of every nation, and has done, since the first army went forth to battle.

My honorable friend from Illinois [Mr. DOUGLAS] says that you cannot give to General Scott this brevet rank without creating a new rank. I would create a new rank. As to all that has been said about military offices being titles of nobility, I have not a word to say, except that I have not heard the shadow of an argument to establish the position. There was a time when you had not a full major general in your Army. From the first year of the accession of Jefferson to something like the year 1808 or 1809, when the Army was increased, General Wilkinson, with the rank of brigadier general, was at the head of the Army. Suppose General Wilkinson had been placed at the head of the Army, and had been sent to Mexico, and had carried on such a campaign as General Scott did, should we be met with the objection that we have no office of major general, and therefore to confer the distinction upon him would be to create a rank of nobility? The argument would not be received for a moment. There is nothing in the rank of lieutenant general, or in the duties of lieutenant general, that takes it out of the usual class of military officers and duties. Ranks are an ascending scale, and necessarily so, in naval and military establishments. Your second lieutenant, on the field of battle, if he is the highest officer able to command, would command the regiment, or brigade, or army; but that is no reason why you should trust such a command to a second lieutenant. You establish a series of grades to give a man proper influence and proper means of command, that his authority, for the sake of the country, should be properly exercised. That is the object of the regulation.

Now, then, there is nothing in the office of lieutenant general that takes it out of this state of things. I say, as the honorable Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BADGER] has said, better than I am able to do to my honorable friend from Illinois, [Mr. DOUGLAS,] I trust this country never will be so bankrupt in its power to reward as not to be capable of rewarding such high and gallant feats as those which were performed by our army in Mexico. When such a case presents itself, we shall find in the national exchequer—I do not mean the exchequer of cash, but the exchequer of true gratitude and feeling—the means of giving rewards. This is no common case. It is not the case of a man who in battle meets the enemy, and behaves valiantly. It is the case of a high and noble commander, who led our armies from Vera Cruz to Mexico, and carried the standard of the country, in triumph and honor, above difficulties and dangers, and opposition, almost unprecedented since the earliest ages. His name is written in imperishable characters upon the military history of the country. He has placed himself among the great commanders of the age. His name will go down to posterity among those men whose names I need not repeat, who stand preëminently forward in the history of the military world for the last century. He needs no eulogium of mine. His best eulogies are his own deeds, and the affections of his country. That is all I have to say on the subject.

Mr. WALKER. The Senator from Michigan said that he had heard nothing which appeared to him like even the shadow of an argument, showing the unconstitutionality of the proposition now before the Senate.

Mr. CASS. I said that I had heard nothing to show that a military title was a title of nobility.

Mr. WALKER. That is what the Senator says now; that is what he meant. I listened to the argument of the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DOUGLAS,] and I thought that in what he said, there was something which appeared to be, not only a shadow, but the most material substance. The honorable Senator from Michigan is complimentary! He says he has heard nothing like the shadow of an argument in support of the constitutional objection. If I had made that remark in regard to the argument of the honorable Senators on the other side of the question, it might have been attributed either to the real weakness of the argument, or to my obtuseness in not perceiving its force.

Mr. CASS. I wish to say to the honorable Senator, that when I used the phrase "shadow of an argument," I did not do so in a general sense, but simply as to one point; I used it in reference to the supposition that a military title is a title of nobility. It was to that that I confined the remark. I intended no invidious allusion to any gentleman.

Mr. WALKER. I attempted, in my humble place, to answer that point when made by the Senator from Illinois, who introduced the resolution. He had asked; in reply to me, if there was not a distinction between a title of nobility and any title or office which at present exists in the Army, and he instanced the title of captain, major, colonel, and major general. I replied to that, and admitted that when duty is imposed there must be some term or designation applicable to the person who discharges that duty. I then added, as I believe, prudently, if any Senator could point out any duty to be associated with the style or title which this resolution proposes to bestow? I have not yet heard an answer to that question. I have not heard it alleged that there is any duty to be associated or connected with the title or style proposed to be conferred by the resolution. I also stated, and so did the Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DOUGLAS,] that it was not in my power to determine what style or title should be bestowed upon the man who may hereafter equal General Scott or General Washington, if any shall equal them. The Senator from Michigan says that when the occasion shall arise, the exchequer of the nation's gratitude may be safely drawn upon for the reward to be bestowed. Reward to be bestowed!

What is implied in that term? That we shall go on from step to step, from one to another, until finally we shall have to adopt what is not only seemingly an infraction of the Constitution, but manifestly a direct violation of it, in bestowing what is known to be a distinction—a title of nobility.

What is the spirit of a title of nobility? It is a mark, an appellation, a style, or title which is merely complimentary, merely titular, and which particularly sets an individual apart as one distinguished above his fellow-men for something which he has done. Will the Senator venture to go on further, from person to person, from degree to degree of service, until he shall have reached that point? If he is not willing to do that, let me say that he is now, in my opinion, about to take the first step of departure from the Constitution. Whether he does, or does not, perceive the force of the constitutional objection, he is now taking the first step in this degree to confer a title of preference upon an individual unassociated with any demand upon him for service.

Perhaps it may be inferred by some that those who make opposition to the resolution would disparage the character of General Scott for his military services. Far be any such design from us! The man who will not acknowledge in General Scott the highest degree of eminence as a military man, must either not have read and studied history, and the very modern history of the country, or he must have been unable to appreciate it when he did read it.

Sir, there were circumstances associated with the Mexican war which, in some respects, place General Scott preëminently above all other military men. But is this a reason why I should confer on him a mere title of distinction, unassociated with duty? Take the case of the attack upon the City of Mexico. In the first attack, the American army under General Scott—a little army of less than nine thousand men—was before a city with a population of more than sixty thousand, and with an armed force of twenty-five thousand to defend it. The Americans fought the opposing army; they vanquished the foe. The foe were retreating; they were entering the gates of the city, crying that the Americans were upon them. It would then have been easy for our army, in the flush of its excitement and exhilaration of spirit impelled by feelings of ambition, actuated by the events of the moment, to rush in and take the city, and put an end to the matter. But was that done? No. If that had been done, it might have been attributed to the exhilaration of spirit natural to military men under such circumstances; but it was not done. There was a stop, an armistice. The armistice existed for days. In the mean time the enemy within the walls were arming; even the citizens themselves took up arms to resist the final and ultimate attack anticipated; the fact is, I believe that the armistice was sought on the part of Santa Anna to enable his forces to render themselves as strong as possible. The Americans sat quietly down; their blood cooled; and so they remained until the armistice was at an end.

There is a moral associated with the uprising of that little army with mighty odds against them, which, I think, is unprecedented in the annals of warfare. They rose; they resolved to take the city, though it contained a population of sixty thousand, and an armed force of twenty-five thousand within its walls; and, without excitement, by the mere exercise of cool and deliberate courage, they marched forward and took it. When within its walls, it was found that the streets were barricaded and fortified by batteries of cannon, and that the immediate thoroughfare to the citadel could not be traveled; and General Scott and his army turned aside; they forced their way through solid walls and blocks of buildings until they reached a point where they could actually command the city.

Never before in the history of warfare, in my opinion, was there such a feat accomplished with so much cool blood and courage. And standing above all, and commanding all in that transaction, was the man whom it is now proposed to honor. Sir, if, in my view of the Constitution, it were in my power, I would bestow the highest possible honor upon him. But I really think that this resolution is a departure from the Constitution; and believing so, I cannot vote for it. It proposes to confer a mere titular honor, infringing the spirit of the Constitution, which prohibits the bestowal of titles of nobility, and for that I cannot vote.

Mr. SEWARD. Mr. President, for a period of five years, in five consecutive sessions of the Senate of the United States, the proposition has been submitted to authorize the President of the United States to confer the rank of brevet lieutenant general upon the commander of the American army in the late war with Mexico. Circumstances in the condition of the country have prevented, on all those occasions, that dispassionate consideration which should have been given to the subject. This is a time of peace and of political harmony throughout the country. It is a time when the country is ready and willing to see such honor bestowed upon this venerable general as he truly deserves. I have seen nothing more gratifying, since I have been in this place, than the very general disposition which is manifested on the other side of the Chamber to receive this proposition, to consider it, to weigh it carefully, and to give a final and just decision upon it. I am convinced, sir, that every word that has been said by every Senator who has given his testimony to the character of General Scott as a soldier, as a civilian, as a patriot, and as a Christian, was sincerely spoken; and I do most fully believe that the Senators who oppose the proposition, oppose it conscientiously upon the grounds which they state, and upon convictions of public duty which they have adopted, and not from any opposition to the distinguished citizen.

Mr. President, what reason can be given why the proposition shall not be adopted? It is said by the gentleman who last addressed the Senate, that it is proposing to confer a brevet military rank, which is equivalent to conferring a title of nobility, and that it is therefore, in spirit at least, a violation of the Constitution. It seems to me, sir, that if there is any violation of the Constitution in this measure, the Constitution has been violated and wounded every year for the last fifty years, every year since it was established. An army, as organized, has various ranks, various ascending grades of office. The first which needs to be noticed is the rank of cadet, and the last and highest is that of commander-in-chief. In the very first step of the organization of our Army we appoint cadets, who serve a certain period to qualify themselves for filling places in the Army of the United States. When they have done that, and have acquired the education necessary to fit them for active service, the very first thing we do, if there is a vacancy in the rank above them, is to promote them to that vacancy. The next rank is that of second lieutenant; but inasmuch as the office of second lieutenant is generally filled, we resort, and have resorted, from the earliest adoption of our military organization, to the practice of promoting the cadet to the office of second lieutenant by brevet. And so, when the second lieutenant has performed his duties faithfully, and has distinguished himself, we promote him, if there is a vacancy, to a higher place. If there be no vacancy in the rank above him, we confer upon him the office of first lieutenant by brevet. So it is with regard to the offices of captain, major, colonel, brigadier general, and every officer of every grade. He achieves, and wins, and receives, in consideration of the distinguished services he has rendered to his country, absolute promotion, if it be in our power to promote him, and if not, he receives such a promotion as we can give, viz: promotion by brevet. That is to say, we give him the brevet place now, which will entitle him to the place fully when a vacancy shall happen.

If, then, there is any violation of the Constitution in making a major general a lieutenant general by brevet, there is no more than there is in making a second lieutenant a first lieutenant, or a captain by brevet. The principle is the same throughout.

I do not intend to say a word upon the general subject of the ground upon which this honor should be bestowed upon the gallant soldier for whom it is intended; but I will say that there are circumstances in the case which require that the honor, if it is ever to be conferred, should be conferred now. Gentlemen have alluded to the claims which have been established by this distinguished commander to receive this honor at the hands of his country by his services in the Mexican war. It is truly said by the honorable Senator from North Carolina, that those services were only the capital placed on the top of the column. We have only to go back and remember that, when he was a stripling, a youth, he entered the service of his country as a volunteer, and obtained a commission in the war with Great Britain, in 1812. We find him wounded, and shattered, and broken in the direct conflicts of that war; and we see that he recovered his strength, his vigor, his powers only to offer himself to new and more dangerous trials at every time and on every occasion afterwards when his country was exposed to danger. Sir, he is shattered and bruised all over with wounds received from the enemies of his country in her defense, and he cannot survive long. At the same time, as has been truly said, there has never been shed one drop of blood by him unnecessarily; there has never been drawn from suffering humanity, by him, one tear without compunction.

Why, then, shall we not pass this resolution, and reward the gallant officer upon whom it is proposed to confer this high honor? We are told that we shall give a dangerous precedent. Sir, there is no danger of precedent here, for such services come very rarely. Gentlemen have tasked their recollection to find precedents in the history of the country, and have found only one which they can quote as at all bearing upon this question, and that is the case of General Washington at the close of the American Revolution. It is a period of sixty years, then, since any soldier has come before the Government of the United States claiming such honors, or since they have been claimed in behalf of a soldier such as it is said were offered to Washington. If we can judge of the future by the past, it will be sixty years more—ay, sir, I fear it will be hundreds of years more before there will arise another commander so brave, so pure, so humane, so wise, so generous, so devoted to his country and to humanity as Winfield Scott.

What is this honor that we propose to give him? It is only to give him a higher grade in the Army than that which he now occupies. Do we forget—can we forget, that the country which he subdued—Mexico, the enemy whom he prostrated and humbled—tendered to him, not merely the empty honor of a title, but the Presidency—the actual government of that Republic. He declined that, as a faithful citizen of the United States. It is but just, then, that we should reward him with this rank; for a soldier, it is the highest that our country has in her power to give.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, and the question upon ordering it to be engrossed for a third reading was taken by yeas and nays, with the following result:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Atchison, Badger, Bayard, Benjamin, Brodhead, Cass, Clayton, Dawson, Dixon, Dodge of Wisconsin, Dodge of Iowa, Evans, Fish, Foot, Gwin, James, Jones of Tennessee, Mason, Pearce, Pratt, Sebastian, Seward, Shields, Stuart, Thompson of Kentucky, Thomson of New Jersey, Wade, Weller, and Wright—30.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Bright, Chase, Clay, Douglas, Fitzpatrick, Hamlin, Norris, Slidell, Sumner, Walker, and Williams—12.

Mr. SHIELDS. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to allow the joint resolution to be now read the third time. The sense of the Senate has been taken, and the subject may as well be disposed of now.

There being no objection, the resolution was read the third time and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. MASON, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 22, 1853.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m.

Prayer by the Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

DELEGATE FROM NEBRASKA.

Mr. HENN. I rise to a privileged question. I beg leave to present the credentials of H. D. JOHNSON, Delegate from Nebraska Territory, and move that they be referred to the Committee on Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

DELEGATE FROM NEW MEXICO.

Mr. HENN. I would also inquire whether the credentials of the Delegate from New Mexico have yet been referred?

The SPEAKER. They have not.

Mr. HENN. I think it would be proper to refer them to the Committee on Elections.

The SPEAKER. They were presented by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. BENTON,] and were not referred.

Mr. HENN. Then I move that they be referred to the Committee on Elections.

The motion was agreed to.

MEMORIAL OF THE MEDICAL ASSOCIATION OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. ORR. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to present a memorial. By a rule which was adopted the other day, it is not in order to present petitions in open House. The memorial which I hold in my hand ought, I think, to be referred to a select committee. It is from the Medical Association of the United States—a very respectable body of gentlemen—and requires legislation of Congress.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I insist on the regular order.

Mr. WALSH. I object. I have got several petitions of a similar character myself, which I wish to present.

Mr. ORR. I have accomplished my purpose. I was in hopes that this courtesy would have been extended to the medical fraternity of the United States.

The SPEAKER. It is objected to.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY.

Mr. FLORENCE. I rise to what I conceive to be a privileged question. I move that when this House adjourns, it be to meet on Monday next; and I do it, if I may be permitted to state my reasons—

[Cries of "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. FLORENCE. May I not state the reasons why I make the motion?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order.

Mr. FLORENCE. I conceive, sir, that the motion—

[Cries of "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. FLORENCE. I will withdraw the motion. I only desired to explain my reasons for making it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not decide that the motion was out of order. The Chair only decided that discussion was not in order.

Mr. FLORENCE. I so understood the Chair; but failing in my purpose to explain my motives, I withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER then proceeded to call the committees for reports.

CHARLES LEE JONES.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill for the relief of Charles Lee Jones; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and ordered to be printed.

NAVAL STEAMSHIP SERVICE.

The SPEAKER then laid before the House a communication from the Post Office Department, transmitting estimates for the carrying on of that portion of the mail steamship service which passes under the supervision of that Department.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move the reference of the communication to the Committee on Ways and Means, and that it be ordered to be printed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The call upon committees for reports having been gone through with, the Speaker called upon States for resolutions.

BOUNTY LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. COBB. I am glad, Mr. Speaker, of this opportunity to contribute my humble mite in favor of doing justice to the widows and orphans of those who nobly defended our country in the hour of need. I ask leave of the House to introduce a bill entitled "A bill giving further time for satisfying claims for bounty lands, and for other purposes," of which previous notice has been given. There was no objection; and the bill was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

MOBILE AND NEW ORLEANS RAILROAD.

Mr. PHILIPS. I ask leave to introduce a bill entitled "A bill making a grant of alternate sections of land to the States of Alabama, Mississippi, and Louisiana, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Mobile to New Orleans."

There was no objection; and the bill was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

MOBILE HARBOR.

Mr. PHILIPS asked and obtained leave, and introduced a bill for the improvement of the harbor of Mobile; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

PAY OF THE OFFICERS OF THE ARMY.

Mr. HOUSTON offered the following resolution; which was read and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be directed to inquire into the expediency of so modifying the laws fixing and regulating the pay and allowance to the officers of the Army, as to give a compensation in money per month, and such rations in kind as may be necessary for their subsistence, abolishing longevity rations, together with all other extra allowances; and also, into the propriety of so modifying existing laws, that brevet appointments shall in no case increase the compensation.

NAVY-YARDS AND MARINE HOSPITALS.

Mr. HOUSTON offered the following resolution; which was read and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Naval Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of abolishing and disposing of such of the navy-yards and marine hospitals belonging to the United States as can be dispensed with, consistently with the public interests, and curtailing the expenses and annual costs of those which may be retained; and also inquire into the propriety of abolishing all extra allowances and rations to officers of the Marine Corps."

LANDS FOR THE SOUTHERN RAILROAD.

Mr. SINGLETON asked and obtained leave, and introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

"A bill granting to the State of Mississippi the right of way, and alternate sections of public land, for the purpose of locating and constructing the Southern Railroad."

IMPROVING PASSES OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. HUNT offered the following resolution; which was read and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, instructed to report to this House the reports, maps, and estimates on file in his Department, showing the practicability and expediency of deepening and otherwise improving the passes of the Mississippi.

Mr. DUNBAR, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

"A bill to remove obstructions to navigation in the mouths of the Mississippi, at the Southwest Pass and Pass à Loutre."

Mr. D. also introduced a bill to establish a navy-yard and depot near the city of New Orleans; which was read the first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill granting to the State of Louisiana the right of way, and a donation of the public lands, for the purpose of locating and constructing a railroad from New Orleans to the Mississippi State line in the direction of the town of Jackson in said State; which was read the first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

On motion by Mr. DUNBAR, it was Ordered, That he have leave to withdraw from the files of the House the papers of Alexander Lee, for the purpose of reference in the Senate.

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be requested to inform the House what changes have been made within the last year in the manner of keeping the public revenue; and how far the Assistant Treasurers have been made available as depositaries for disbursing officers for the General Government.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

SPOILIATION BILL.

Mr. DISNEY, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill of the following title: "A bill for the indemnification of certain American citizens for spoiliations committed by France prior to 1801;" which was read the first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. SAPP, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill of the following title: "A bill granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the States of Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, in aid of the construction of a railroad from the town of Coshocton via Mount Vernon, Mount Gilead, and Marion, and Fort Wayne, in Indiana, to Chicago, Illinois;" which was read the first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. EDGERTON, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill of the following title: "A bill explanatory of the act, entitled 'An act for the relief of Benjamin S. Roberts;'" which was read the first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. E. also offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of contracting for the erection of a custom-house and marine hospital at Toledo, Ohio; and clearing out and working channels in the Maumee Bay, in Ohio.

The question was taken, and the resolution was adopted.

GUNNISON'S SURVEY.

Mr. CHURCHWELL introduced the following resolution; which was read and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to furnish to this House all the information in his possession relative to Captain Gunnison's survey, as far as it has gone.

ARMORY IN INDIANA.

Mr. ENGLISH. I desire to offer a resolution to which I hope no member will object. It is merely a resolution of inquiry. I offer the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a national foundry and armory in the State of Indiana, at or near the Falls of the Ohio river.

The question was taken, and the resolution adopted.

SWAMP LANDS.

Mr. ENGLISH, on leave, introduced a bill, of which previous notice had been given, giving to the States the entire control and disposition of swamp lands within their limits, granted by act of Congress, approved September 28, 1850, and repealing so much of said act as requires the proceeds of such lands to be used in the construction of levees and drains; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

CANAL AROUND THE FALLS OF THE OHIO.

Mr. DUNHAM, on leave, introduced a bill, of which previous notice had been given, providing for the construction of a steamboat canal around the Falls of the Ohio river; for the enlargement of the Louisville and Portland canal; and for the extinguishment of the stock of private stockholders in the Louisville and Portland Canal Company; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

INDIANAPOLIS AND SPRINGFIELD RAILROAD.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana, on leave, introduced a bill, of which previous notice had been given, granting the right of way and making a grant of the public land to the States of Indiana and Illinois, to aid in the construction of a railroad from Indianapolis, in Indiana, to Springfield, in the State of Illinois; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

CAIRO, A PORT OF DELIVERY.

Mr. BISSELL, on leave, introduced a bill, of which previous notice had been given, constituting Cairo, in the State of Illinois, a port of delivery; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

IMPROVEMENT OF THE GALENA RIVER.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, on leave, previous notice having been given, introduced a bill for the improvement of the navigation of the Galena river and harbor of Galena, in Illinois; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

LANDS TO IOWA AND MINNESOTA.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce the following bill:

"A bill granting the right of way and making a grant of the public lands to the State of Iowa and the Territory of Minnesota, to aid in the construction of the Northwestern Railroad, from Galena, in the State of Illinois, by the valley of the Tete de Mort, to the great bend in the Minnesota river, in the Territory of Minnesota."

The bill was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

MODIFICATION OF THE JUDICIAL SYSTEM.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to this House the plan which he is prepared to recommend for the enlargement and modification of the present judicial system.

The resolution was adopted.

UNSOLD LANDS.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave, and introduced "A bill granting to the States all the unsold lands in every land office district where the expenses for any quarter exceed the receipts;" which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I ask leave to introduce a resolution, which I offer at the request of a very large influence outside of this House:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing, by rule, for the equalization of the privileges of claims agents in Congress, so as to admit all persons within the bar of the House who may be claims agents, or else to exclude privileged persons whenever they may be engaged in the lobbying for claims, the object of the rule being purely to give no one claims agent an advantage over another within the bar of this House.

Several MEMBERS. Read it again.

The resolution was again read for the information of the House.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. That subject is already before the committee on the rules, and everything else connected with the amendment of the rules. I cannot regard the resolution otherwise than as a mere piece of Buncombe. I therefore move to lay it upon the table.

[Loud cries of "No! No!" and "Let it go to the committee."]

The question was then taken on the motion to lay the resolution upon the table, and it was decided in the negative.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, demanded the previous question, which was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be now put.

The question recurring upon the adoption of the resolution, it was put, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was taken on the latter motion, and it was agreed to.

TERRITORY OF NEBRASKA.

Mr. MILLER, of Missouri, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories:

"A bill to organize the Territory of Nebraska."

THE MEXICAN WAR.

Mr. MILLER. In pursuance of previous notice, also introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

"A bill explanatory of an act approved July 19, 1848, entitled, 'An act to amend an act,' entitled 'An act supplementary to an act,' entitled 'An act providing for the prosecution of the existing war between the United States and the Republic of Mexico, and for other purposes.'"

IMPROVEMENT OF WESTERN RIVERS.

Mr. OLIVER, of Missouri, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

"A bill making appropriations for the improvement of the Missouri, Mississippi, and Ohio rivers."

RAILROAD IN MISSOURI.

Mr. LINDLEY, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

"A bill granting to the State of Missouri the right of way and a portion of the public domain to aid in the construction of certain railroads therein."

RAILROADS IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. GREENWOOD, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

"A bill granting the right of way and making a grant of land to the State of Arkansas, to aid in the construction of a railroad from a point on the southwest boundary of the State of Missouri, and a line from Springfield, Missouri, to Bentonville, Arkansas, via Bentonville, Fayetteville, Van Buren, and Fort Smith, to the southern boundary of the State, north of the Red river raft, to be denominated "the Western Border Railroad."

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I ask leave to withdraw from the files of the House the papers of Captain John Fagan, with a view of sending them to the Senate, to be presented by Senator JOHNSON, to whose charge they were confided while he was a member of this House. I hope there will be no objection.

There being no objection, leave was granted.

OAKLAND AND OTTAWA RAILROAD.

Mr. CLARK, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

"A bill granting the right of way to the State of Michigan, and a portion of the public lands, to aid in the construction of the Oakland and Ottawa Railroad, and branches in said State."

HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. CLARK also, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

"A bill making appropriations for the improvement of certain harbors."

SCHOOL LANDS.

Mr. HENN, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

"A bill confirmatory of certain school selections."

RELICS OF GEORGE WASHINGTON.

Mr. HENN. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures on the Public Buildings be requested to inquire into the expediency of setting apart an appropriate room in the Executive Mansion, to be furnished exclusively with articles used by George Washington during his lifetime.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I desire to debate that resolution.

The SPEAKER. Then the resolution must lie over.

RAILROADS IN WISCONSIN.

Mr. MACY, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

"A bill to be entitled an act giving a right of way, and granting alternate sections of certain public lands, to the State of Wisconsin, and its grantees and assigns, to further the construction of certain railroads therein specified."

IMPROVEMENT OF GREAT RIVER AT POTOSI.

Mr. EASTMAN offered the following resolution; which was read and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill making an appropriation for completing the improvement of the mouths of the Great River at Potosi, Wisconsin.

REDUCTION OF OCEAN POSTAGE.

Mr. WELLS offered the following resolution; which was read and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reducing ocean postage, and to report upon the same, at an early day, by bill or otherwise.

REFUNDING OF DUTIES TO CALIFORNIA.

Mr. LATHAM, on leave, introduced "A bill to authorize and direct the payment of certain moneys into the treasury of the State of California, which were collected in the ports of said State as revenue on imports since the ratification of the treaty of peace between the United States and the Republic of Mexico, and prior to the admission of said State into the Union," of which previous notice had been given; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

UNIVERSITY OF THE PACIFIC.

Mr. LATHAM, on leave, introduced "A bill to grant certain privileges to the trustees of the University of the Pacific, situated in the county of Santa Clara, State of California," of which previous notice had been given; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

INDIAN AGGRESSIONS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. LATHAM, on leave, introduced "A bill to refund to the State of California the expenses incurred in suppressing Indian aggressions in that State," of which previous notice had been given; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

NAVIGATION IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. RICE, on leave, introduced "A bill to provide for the removal of obstructions to navigation in certain harbors in the Territory of Minnesota, of which previous notice had been given; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

CONSTRUCTION OF ROADS IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. RICE, on leave, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals:

"A bill for the construction of roads in the Territory of Minnesota, for military and other purposes."

Also, the following resolution; which was read and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to furnish the House of Representatives, as soon as practicable, with a copy of the report, estimates, and maps of the survey of the road from Mendota to the Big Sioux river.

EXPENSES OF A CODE OF LAWS FOR OREGON.

Mr. LANE, of Oregon, presented the following joint resolution; which was read a first and second time by its title:

"Joint resolution authorizing the accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust the expenses of a board of commissioners appointed by the Territorial Assembly of Oregon, to prepare a code of laws; also, to adjust the expenses of collecting and printing certain laws and archives of the Territory of Oregon."

Mr. LANE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House that the joint resolution just read may be read a third time and passed.

Mr. BISSELL. Unless there be very pressing reasons for the immediate passage of that resolution, I think it had better take the usual course. I am very unwilling to make any objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon, but I think it is a resolution which it would be well to look into before we vote upon it.

Mr. LANE. I am unwilling to urge upon the House the passage of any measure for the Territory of Oregon which my friend from Illinois, [Mr. BISSELL,] or any other gentleman, may reasonably object to. The reason why I ask the passage of this resolution at this time is, that the last Congress made an appropriation to defray certain expenses in Oregon Territory.

Now, all I desire by the adoption of the resolution is, that certain persons shall be paid for the services they rendered according to the direction of the Legislative Assembly. The money has been already appropriated. Commissioners appointed by the Legislative Assembly have performed certain duties, and the Comptroller of the Treasury Department asks that he should be directed to pay, or rather asks that this joint resolution may be passed, authorizing him to audit and pay their accounts. It is not asking for money, but for the privilege of disbursing money heretofore appropriated for the Territory of Oregon for services already rendered. I can see no objection to the adoption of the resolution, and I am inclined to think that my friend from Illinois [Mr. BISSELL] will not persist in his objection. I ask the Clerk to read the following letter from the Treasury Department upon the subject.

The letter was then read, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE.
December 19, 1853.

Sir: The Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Oregon, by an act of the 8th and 12th of January last, created a board of commissioners, consisting of three persons, to prepare a code of laws for said Territory.

The compensation of the commissioners was fixed at $6 per day; and $6,000 were appropriated out of any money appropriated by Congress to defray the expenses of the Legislative Assembly, the printing of the laws, and other incidental expenses.

Another act was passed on the 22d of December and 26th of January, appointing L. F. Grover a commissioner to collect and prepare for publication the laws, journals, Governors' messages, and public papers of Oregon, from the earliest attempt to form a government, &c., down to, and inclusive of, the session of 1849, except the laws of that session, which were published in the bound volume of the statutes of Oregon City in 1851.—Laws of Oregon, session 1852-53, pages 57 and 65.

On the 7th of October last, George L. Carney, Secretary of the Territory, addressed a letter to the Hon. James Guthrie, Secretary of the Treasury, desiring to be informed whether he was authorized to settle the expenses incurred under those acts.

That letter is referred to this office.

By an act of Congress, approved August 29, 1852, vol. 5, page 540, the accounting officers are expressly prohibited from allowing any expenses for which estimates have not been made by the Secretary of the Treasury, although they may have been incurred by direction of the Territorial Legislature. The Territory of New Mexico created a board of commissioners to prepare a code of laws, and application having been made to defray the expense, the question was examined with the result that it could not be paid without the further legislation of Congress, authorizing payment to be made. A representation thereof being reported to Congress, an appropriation was made, in the general appropriation act of March 3d, 1853.—Session laws, page 198, chapter 97.

The balance standing to the credit of the appropriations for compensation and mileage of the members of the Legislative Assembly, officers, clerks, and contingent expenses of the Assembly of Oregon, is $36,827 22.

If the accounting officers should be authorized to settle the expense incurred under said laws of Oregon, and to pay it out of said balance, there would not be a necessity of making a further appropriation. A joint resolution, of the character mentioned, need not be referred to a Committee of the Whole, and it might be passed at once, if it should be the pleasure of the two Houses to act on it promptly.

If authority should be given to the accounting officers to settle these expenses, I will advise you or the Secretary, in regard to the testimony that should accompany the accounts.

Most sincerely yours,
ELISHA WHITTLESEY.

Hon. JOSEPH LANE, House of Representatives

Mr. BISSELL. It is always to me an ungrateful task to oppose the slightest objection to anything which the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LANE] asks for; as a general rule, I am bound to say, according to my experience here, that what he asks is reasonable; but I am not yet convinced that we ought to pass this resolution to-day. I think, notwithstanding all the gentleman has said, that the resolution ought to go to a committee, in order that they may find out what is right, as I have no doubt they will; and then upon their representations, when they report, we can pass it. I would adopt the suggestion in the letter which has just been read, that the matter should go to the Committee of the Whole.

I do think it quite prudent, that inasmuch as the resolution is an important one, that it should be referred; although it makes no appropriation of money, yet it does direct the payment of money. We have not ascertained the amount which it proposes to pay, and I repeat that I think it quite prudent that it should be referred to some committee. Let it go to the Committee on the Territories, and I pledge my word that the honorable chairman of that committee, my colleague from Illinois, [Mr. RICHARDSON,] will use all reasonable dispatch in investigating the matter, and in reporting it back to the House for its action. I move to refer the bill to the Committee on the Territories.

The question was taken, and the bill was accordingly referred.

THE LATE SAMUEL R. THURSTON.

Mr. LANE. I now ask the consent of the House to introduce the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Mileage be requested to inquire into the expediency of reporting to this House a resolution authorizing the payment to the widow and heirs of the late Samuel R. Thurston, former Delegate from the Territory of Oregon, such balance of his mileage as will make the amount equal to the sum paid the present Delegate for mileage.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I ask the Speaker if the call of States for resolutions has been gone through with?

The SPEAKER. It has. Under the rule of the House, it is the duty of the Speaker to begin the call precisely where it was left off the day before. If it is the pleasure of the House, however, under the circumstances, the Chair will again commence the call, beginning with the State of Maine.

Mr. PHELPS. I submit the motion, if it be in order, that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. SMITH. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his motion for a moment.

Mr. PHELPS. I cannot yield. The gentleman will have an opportunity to attend to his business during the morning hour to-morrow.

The question was taken, and the motion agreed to—ayes 88, noes not counted.

So the rules were suspended.

REFERENCE OF PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ORR in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the President's message; the question pending being upon the adoption of certain resolutions providing for its distribution to the appropriate standing committees, introduced by Mr. Housron, upon which Mr. WRIGHT, of Pennsylvania, was entitled to the floor.

Mr. WRIGHT. The opening debate of this House at the commencement of this session has taken a somewhat unusual course. I do not think that the country at large was prepared to anticipate the result, with regard to the opening debates of this House, that we have realized within the last two or three days. I am one of those who believed, that after the great contests the country has so recently passed through, when both the great political parties of the nation seemed to have concluded this warfare, and when the great battle was fought and the victory won—I say, I am one of those who believed that abolitionism was dead and buried; and until the day before yesterday, when the gentleman from New York [Mr. SMITH] exhumed its lifeless body, and dragged it again before this House and the country, I supposed that it was dead and gone; but like the ghost of Banquo, it is again in this Hall, and before the country. I do not propose to go into a discussion of the abstract question of abolition. Wiser heads than mine have already not only touched upon, but dissected that subject, until it has not a limb left to its body that is not completely mutilated. I repeat, that at this moment it is lifeless and inanimate; and the eloquence and power of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SMITH] cannot resuscitate its putrid carcass.

Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, I ought not to reply to an argument on the subject of abolition in this Hall. I know that a large portion of the Democratic party in this House are opposed to renew the discussion on the question of abolition. They think, as a great portion of their party thought, that no notice whatever should have been paid to any debate that had a tendency again to bring before the country a question which is fraught with so much evil to the country as that subject is, and would be, if its principles are carried out. Yet, Mr. Chairman, I never can sit in an American Congress with my mouth closed, and hear doctrines advanced such as were advanced here the day before yesterday by the gentleman from New York. I refer you, sir, and members of this House, to a single paragraph in the reported speech of that gentleman, and I hope I may have the indulgence of the attention of the committee, while I read the paragraph to which I have referred.

That there may be no mistake, sir, I will read the paragraph:

"I admit that Austria is an oppressor; but is it not equally and more glaringly true, that America is a far greater and guiltier oppressor? Indeed, Austrian despotism, compared with our despotism, which classes millions of men, women, and children with cattle, is but as the little finger to the loins."

And the gentleman placed his hands on his body as he made use of the expression. Now, sir, when I am told in a high place that there is a greater despotism in America—free, independent, powerful, and gigantic as she is—when I am told there is a greater despotism here than there is in that degraded Austrian empire, I cannot repress my feelings, nor can I permit such talk to go out to the country without a notice of condemnation and without a reprimand, I care not from what source it emanates or who utters it. Sir, that work of exaggerated fiction which has lately gone forth to the world, called "Uncle Tom's Cabin," written by Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe, the object of which was to impair and diminish the character, the power, the importance, and the social relations of this country abroad, is perhaps unworthy to be noticed here; but when a gentleman with the high character for talent and learning as the gentleman from New York, comes here to stigmatize his own country, it is time for patriotic men to speak, and to speak openly. The gentleman eulogizes that Government which but a short period ago formed a combination with Russia and Prussia to blot from the chart of nations the nationality of Poland, and took her share of the spoils in the division.

There was no despotism, sir, in that! The gentleman from New York, standing in his place in the American Congress, eulogizes that nation which but a few years after, not only trampled upon fifteen millions of Hungarians, but made them worse slaves than the slaves of the American States; and in that, I suppose, there was no despotism! The gentleman is the eulogist of a State where the public press is entirely abolished and obliterated, so far as regards all practical purposes, and where the people at this day are in a more degraded condition than perhaps any other people upon the continent of Europe. And that is the country where, according to the gentleman from New York, the despotism is inferior to the despotism of this great and mighty Union! Had the gentleman never heard of a certain General Haynau, I think his name was, who, commanding an Austrian army upon Hungarian territory, butchered and slaughtered indiscriminately, men, women, and children; and does he come within the broad terms of the eulogy that the honorable gentleman from New York applies to Austria? A monster in human form, and whose only passion seemed to have been to know how much blood would flow from Hungarian veins. And who, afterwards, when mobbed by the brewers of London, instead of being drenched in the horse-pond, should have been hung upon Judge Lynch's gallows. A man destitute of feeling, and deaf and blind to all the common sympathies of life. A man in proportions, but a monster in mind and disposition.

Mr. Chairman, I must have the candor to say that, with regard to those gentlemen who differ from me on the subject of abolition, I am willing to accord them all the merit and honor that flow from a somewhat overgrown philanthropy; but when they ask me to indulge them in that philanthropy, at the fearful expense of degrading the honor of my country and my country's flag, I cannot consent to look upon their conduct with the least grain of allowance. I had supposed, as I remarked a moment ago, that this question of abolition was dead. Practically it is. It has not in this country at this time even a god-father to stand by it in its extremity. Both the Whig and Democratic conventions, which met at Baltimore some eighteen months ago, ruled the question of abolition as effectually out of existence as the Austrian Government, of which the gentleman is an eulogist, ruled out of existence poor, prostrate, dismembered Poland. Upon neither of the Baltimore platforms of the two great parties of this Union dared that hydra-headed monster enter. At this day I do not think there is any respectable body of men—I speak as a matter of course of numbers—who have the hardihood to stand up before the American people and proclaim they are identified with that thing which, of all other things, is most to be feared, but which, thank God, is this day as harmless as the infant just ushered into life. It is powerless, and so are its advocates.

And in rising to reply to the gentleman, although, perhaps, it might be saying what I ought not to say here, I am giving character to the position he has assumed, which otherwise would go unnoticed. How long has it been since that question was met and disposed of—and met and disposed of by the best and purest patriots of our country? Why, sir, does the gentleman recollect that two years since this subject underwent a full discussion in both branches of Congress; and that men, irrespective of party, marched up to the issue and disposed of it, as they thought, forever? Sir, what were the counsels of those great men; some of whom have left the stage of action, and some of whom are still upon it? What has the gentleman to say in regard to the views of his illustrious friend—as I presume that he was, being of the same political party—the great man, and the celebrated constitutional expounder, who but a few brief months since laid himself down to die, confronting that ocean upon which he had looked with admiration for so many years, and to which he had talked as friend talks to friend, and who died with the blessings of his country on his head; and his acts were fully approved, on this question, by millions of his fellow-men; and a man whose patriotism underwent the test of the age in which he lived, and who lived but to adorn all the social relations of life. A statesman in every sense of the word, and, above all, a gentleman.

What shall I say of the counsel of that great man who has but just left the American stage? What shall I say of another great statesman and pure patriot who hailed from Kentucky, and whose lips, in this Hall, touched by the fire of inspiration, for half a century poured out the purest eloquence, and the loftiest patriotism, and whose funeral requiem has scarcely ceased now to vibrate within these Halls? What also shall I say in regard to that distinguished man who occupies a proud position in the coordinate branch of this legislative body—I allude to the distinguished man who represents, in part, the State of Michigan, and who, but a short time since, when representing his country at a foreign court, rose up, and, in the presence of all Europe, proclaimed to the world the freedom of the seas?

These three men were the men who, but yesterday, in the Senate Chamber of the United States, joined hand in hand upon these compromise measures which have gone forth to the country, and have been adopted as its organic law. After this sacrifice and mutual concession, and mutual forbearance of southern rights and northern rights, after all had been taken into account, are we at this day, after the question has gone to rest, to be annoyed by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SMITH] who comes here to throw a firebrand into the midst of the country, endeavoring, at the same time, to dignify it by his position upon this floor, while he degrades our common country by stigmatizing it as a greater despotism than the most despotic power upon the European continent?

I honor the gentleman from New York, sir, for his zeal; but so far as regards his judgment in this matter, at this time, it may be a question admitting of some considerable doubt; his zeal and discretion are by no means evenly matched.

Now, Mr. Chairman, having disposed of that part of the speech which refers to the despotism of this country, I want the committee to bear with me until I make reference to another quotation from the gentleman's address, and which is in keeping with what I have already read and stated to the House. I find this paragraph:

"Alas! sir, what a pitiable spectacle does our Administration present in thus willfully corrupting Christianity, for the sake of saving so vile and abominable a thing as slavery? And then, sir, what a pitiable spectacle do the American people present in choosing such an Administration, and in remaining patient under it!"

In the estimation of that gentleman, this Administration, indorsing these measures of compromise, after they had been adopted by Congress, and by both of the dominant parties in the United States, upon their respective platforms at Baltimore, presents to the country a most "pitiable" and humiliating position. Why? For its observance of the law? For its adherence to the Constitution? For doing right in the face of Heaven and of men? Does the gentleman from New York pay due regard to the Constitution and laws of his country? I assume, sir, that he has been sworn as a member of this body, and having been sworn, I want to refer him to a single clause in the Constitution of the land. I read from the 3d clause, section 11, and article 4:

"No person held to service or labor in one State, under the laws thereof, escaping into another, shall, in consequence of any law or regulation therein, be discharged from such service or labor, but shall be delivered up on claim of the party to whom such service or labor may be due."

Then I desire to propound to the gentleman a question: How, in accordance with that clause in the Constitution of our country, can he stand up here an advocate of a law that is superior to the Constitution itself?

The gentleman is a renowned and distinguished lawyer, and he has read that clause of the Constitution time and time again. How, then, let me ask him, can he, as a constituent part of this legislative body, put his hand upon the Holy Evangelist, and swear to support the written Constitution of the country, and, at the same time, be the advocate here of a principle which says that there is a higher law than the Constitution of his country? I know no law with regard to municipal regulations, with regard to questions of government, that should be superior, that is superior to the written Constitution of our country. And, sir, if the day shall ever come in this country when higher law shall be used as a substitute for the written law, God in his mercy protect us, and the twenty-three millions who enjoy the blessings of free institutions with us.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. Will the gentleman yield me the floor to reply to his question?

Mr. WRIGHT. Does the gentleman desire to make a speech?

Mr. SMITH. I rose, not because I wish to reply to the gentleman's question, for I do not wish to reply to it. But, as he put the question to me, and might deem me uncivil were I not to reply to it, I am willing to reply to it; and I trust that the gentleman will feel no better after my reply.

Mr. WRIGHT. After having called the gentleman out, I cannot refuse him the floor.

Mr. SMITH. The gentleman has referred me to that clause of the Constitution which respects fugitives from service; and it is on this clause that his question is based. Now, not to consume the time of the gentleman with any other reason for my denying that the word "service" in the Constitution refers to slavery, I will only advert to the fact, that three days previous to the close of the convention which framed the Constitution, the committee on style made their report; and that then it was moved to strike out the word "servitude," and to supply its place with the word "service." This substitution was made by a unanimous vote, and for the avowed reason that "servitude" denotes the condition of slaves, and "service" the condition of freemen. I hold, therefore, that the word "service" in the Constitution refers to freemen, and to freemen only. To hold that the framers of the Constitution did, after the substitution I have referred to, mean that the word should refer to slavery, would be to stigmatize them with hypocrisy. I add that the facts I have here given, may be found in the Madison papers.

Mr. WRIGHT. That is not my recollection of the historical proceedings of that convention which formed the Constitution.

Mr. SMITH. I refer the gentleman to the Madison papers.

Mr. WRIGHT. That is not my construction of those papers. The very change of which the gentleman speaks was made upon the suggestion of a southern member of that body, who thought it would be better not to introduce the word "slave" into the Constitution, and therefore he moved to strike it out and insert in its place, "involuntary servitude." That is the history of this change, as I think I am prepared to show to the gentleman from New York, to the House, and to the country. And can the gentleman—I am not putting the question to him now with a view of an answer—(laughter)—I say, can the gentleman, as a sound lawyer, putting upon the Constitution a proper construction, as he has the ability to do, can he assert that this third clause of the Constitution does not embrace slaves as well as other persons held to involuntary servitude? So the courts have decided. So lawyers have learned it; and none have perused it, I presume, more carefully than the distinguished gentleman from New York, [Mr. SMITH.]

When that gentleman approached that stand, and with the Evangelist in his hand, swore to support the Constitution of his country, upon what principle can he get up here and state that he is governed by a higher power than that which he has sworn to support and obey? No, sir; the gentleman cannot answer that question. It is not susceptible of an answer. There he must swing, upon the position he has fixed for himself.

Mr. SMITH. Will the gentleman allow me to try to answer it? [Laughter.]

Mr. WRIGHT. No, sir; I cannot allow the gentleman to interfere with my time, for it is precious. Now, having been elected a member of this body, and having sworn to support the Constitution of the country, I maintain that there is no power, either above or below, that is superior to that Constitution, which has received his solemn assent, and to support which he is bound by all the obligations of a solemn oath.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know what effect the gentleman's speech is going to have upon the country. It has gone out—it has been published—it has been read, I presume, by every Abolitionist in the land; or, if it has not, it certainly will be, for I regard that gentleman as the head and front—the great leader of that very small party—at the present time. But I have no idea that the arguments contained in that speech will make any new converts to his theory.

I think the time has gone by in the annals of American politics and philanthropy when a faction—as the Abolition faction is—will be permitted even to carry a firebrand, much less to attempt to burn our fair political fabric. They have not the power to do evil, if they have the inclination.

Many years ago, the great State of Pennsylvania, which I have the honor, in part, to represent, and which I am proud to represent—for I do not say as others have said, that it was my wish to have been born in some other part of the Union than Pennsylvania—for I am proud to come here as a Pennsylvanian, and rejoice in the land of my birth—I honor her name and her institutions;—but I am digressing. I was about to say that years and years ago, the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania abolished from her statute-book, the right to hold persons in involuntary servitude. She did it as a sovereign State; she had a constitutional right to do it; and neither the gentleman from New York, nor any other gentleman has any right to complain of this exercise of this constitutional sovereignty as regards the State of Pennsylvania. In the full plenitude of her power and sovereignty, she acted. She impaired no bond she had entered into with the Federal Government. She violated no pledge. She acted in view of, and consonant with, her own vested rights, and the act being sovereign and supreme, no power on earth had the right to question her motives. And because my State did this act, I rejoice at it, for slavery, in the abstract, I condemn; but to abolish it elsewhere is an entirely different position, so far as Pennsylvania is concerned, and also the General Government, as to its power to interfere with the domestic relations of the States.

Whether the State of New York was a slave State or not I do not know.

Mr. SMITH. She was.

Mr. WRIGHT. Some gentleman answers the question in the affirmative. I presume that answer is correct. If she were a slave State then, the gentleman will admit that, under the power of her organic law, and under the canopy of her State sovereignty, she abolished that institution. And what right had the State of Pennsylvania to make any complaint in regard to it? None, sir, whatever.

The States, all will admit, are sovereign and supreme for the enactment of all their internal regulations, except such as they have conceded to Congress, under the Constitution of the United States; but the doctrine of the gentleman from New York, if his theory be carried out and adopted, goes to destroy that sovereignty, and to consolidate all power here; to destroy, for all practical purposes, a combination and league of these respective sovereignties which has conferred countless blessings upon man—which has produced much of the liberty we enjoy at home, and all the advantages which we have experienced in our commercial relations abroad.

It has been said and contended, time and again, that Congress has no power to legislate upon this question. Why, then, does the gentleman from New York drag it before the country, when it is acknowledged, on all hands, that we have no power over the subject—just as powerless as that hand would be if every bone in this arm were broken. Yet, forsooth, this question must be talked about; it must be made a theme for speeches; and time and time again, no doubt, during the present session we shall have the scare-crow of the "death's head and cross-bones" staring us in the face; and, perhaps, before the session is ended, the gentleman from New York will not even know his own bantling.

Now, what shall I say in reply to the honorable gentleman from the State of Ohio, [Mr. GIDDINGS?] What shall I say in reply to his observations? Do not let the gentleman suppose that I am putting the question now with the view of obtaining from him an immediate answer. [A laugh.] I know he is always ready; and will, perhaps, answer at much greater length than I would be willing he should in view of the time allotted me under the rules. By no means let him suppose so. [Laughter.]

Mr. GIDDINGS. I will answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he desires it.

Mr. WRIGHT. Not at all, at present. [Renewed laughter.] I pay deference at all times to age, and the gentleman from New York, is, undoubtedly, many years the junior—at least, such is my impression when I look at the two gentlemen in their seats. But what shall I say to the gentleman from Ohio? He used very hard talk yesterday, when he said that every man north of Mason and Dixon's line, was a "dough-face." I would ask the gentleman a question, and will not object to a categorical answer. I would ask him if he lives north of Mason and Dixon's line?

Mr. GIDDINGS. I do.

Mr. WRIGHT. Then, according to the gentleman's own assertion, he is himself a "dough-face." [Great laughter.] He is in the same catalogue he places the rest of us. He is very kind.

Sir, the speech that the gentleman from Ohio made yesterday I have heard time after time, and again and again, during the last ten years. It is a stereotyped edition, and as the country is bound to be afflicted with it annually, and as we were to have a repetition of it this session, as we have had in former sessions, it was just as well that he should put it to press now, and send it out at this early stage. It was all ready.

Now, as the gentleman has designated every man who resides north of Mason and Dixon's line as a "dough-face," I would ask—

Mr. GIDDINGS. I hope now that the gentleman will allow me to explain.

Mr. WRIGHT. No, no; I cannot. I am afraid the gentleman from Ohio will occupy more of my time than I would be willing to allow; and I do not desire the hour the committee allows me to be filled up with principles and doctrines I abhor.

The gentleman having made this remark in regard to "dough-faces," I merely wanted to make an allusion to it. As to the substance of what he said yesterday, it has been so often replied to in the Congress of the United States, that I pass it by, even without a single solitary remark. It is not my purpose to give him notoriety by noticing his argument.

I desire now to refer the House, and particularly the gentleman from New York, to the concluding sentence of the great speech made by Daniel Webster in the other branch of this legislative body on the subject of the compromise measures. I desire the gentleman from New York to listen to the quotation from the speech of that great man. Mr. Webster says in that speech:

"No monarchical throne presses these States together; no iron chain of despotic power encircles them; they live and stand upon a government popular in its form, reputable in its character, founded on principles of equality, and calculated, we hope, to last forever. In all its history it has been beneficent; it has trodden down no man's liberty; it has crushed no State. Its daily respiration is liberty and patriotism; its yet youthful veins all full of enterprise, courage, and honorable love of glory and renown."

But why do I call the gentleman's attention to this speech, delivered by undoubtedly the master-mind of the age in which he lived? I regard Daniel Webster as the greatest spirit of the nation—the man of the most mind. Possessing the profoundest intellect, and the largest judgment of any of his contemporaries. I think there can be no question in regard to that, and no two opinions upon the subject. What I want the attention of the gentleman to is these words: "It has trodden down no man's liberty; it has crushed no State." And yet that great country which has "crushed no State," which "has trodden down no man's liberty," is a despotism, in the opinion of the gentleman from New York, worse than the despotism of Austria! The great Secretary, in reply to Mr. Hülsemann, with one brush of his hand, displaced "the patch" which before had resented Austria in the diplomacy of nations.

Had the gentleman from New York been an Austrian subject, he would, in all probability, have disappeared with "the patch." He may thank his stars he was not. I hope he may hereafter reflect upon the quotation I have made—and that at least one man in this Union dare assert—that this Government "has trodden down no man's liberty; has crushed no State." Can he say the same of Austria? Let Poland and Hungary answer.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have done with Abolition. I have done with it now and forever. I have nothing more to say upon the subject. Let its bones be reinterred; and to the gentlemen from New York and Ohio I assign the solemn duties of doing it burial. During my official term in the Thirty-Third Congress, I have given my views, not upon the abstract principle; I have only made a few commentaries upon what the gentleman from New York has assumed to himself to utter.

Allow me to say a word or two, in reference to this "pitiable" Administration. The gentleman says: "Alas! sir, what a pitiable spectacle does our Administration present, in thus willfully corrupting Christianity for the sake of saving so vile and abominable a thing as slavery."

Now, sir, so far as regards this Administration, I have a word, and a word only, to say. Let me utter it coolly and in a kindly temperament as regards my colleagues in this House, and the high purposes upon which I am going to speak. As an humble individual, representing, in part, a great State, I have unbounded confidence in this Administration. I believe the Administration to have been conducted upon principles that are entirely Democratic. So far as relates to what has occurred in the history of Franklin Pierce, there has been no act that I am aware of, in his long legislative career, which has drawn upon him the censure of the country in the least particular.

I believe that frugality, and correct notions with regard to the public expenditures, have been faithfully carried out during the time this Administration has been in power. "Pitiable" as the Administration may be in the eyes of the gentleman from New York, nevertheless, it is the head of a great people, and a great and mighty nation. I believe that from no part of the country have there come up complaints of wasteful expenditures upon the part of that Administration. All its means have been husbanded. All the resources of the country have been turned to good account. I believe, sir, that when history shall record the acts of the Administration, it will look more to the great and fundamental principles that have been carried out by Franklin Pierce than to the men he has appointed to office. It is not a question of appointments, but of principles; and it is due to the Administration that the great Democratic party of the country—with all its moral power and energy—should give it a fair and candid trial, and a generous and unhesitating support. Judge it by its measures; judge it by its principles. I feel certain that the American people generally indorse all those principles which have been advocated by the President from the time when he stood upon the eastern portico of this Capitol, talking to the upturned faces of thousands of his fellow-citizens, to the moment when he sent his annual message to this House. I believe that all the principles advocated in both of those papers meet with the hearty commendation of the country; and that the country is ready to give Franklin Pierce a generous support.

Sir, I do not pretend to speak for those gentlemen who entertain different views upon this subject from those which I entertain. I do not stand up here as a member of the Democratic party to throw a fire-brand into the midst of that party. I stand up only as an humble individual, speaking my own mind, but claiming the right to speak that mind freely and openly.

If the Democratic party in this House and in the Senate will give the Administration a fair opportunity to carry out the measures embodied in the two State papers to which I have referred, those measures will, I believe, not only meet with their approbation, but with the approbation of the country. I believe that the President is surrounded by able, correct, and pure men. I have no doubt of it.

As an evidence of that, it is only necessary to refer to the fact that a few days since, the Secretary of the Navy sent his annual report to Congress, recommending that an appropriation of five million dollars should be made to increase and strengthen the Navy, by the addition of six steam frigates of the first class, and that in less than a week after that report came in here, a bill was reported by the Naval Committee to carry out the recommendations of the Secretary in that regard. Ay, sir, and I for one am willing to avow here that I would vote for the building of twelve additional steam frigates, at a cost of ten millions of dollars, instead of five millions, in order to strengthen the naval marine of this nation.

In that very report of the Secretary of the Navy, we are told that the United States stands as a fifth-rate naval power, compared with the first States of Europe. Could my vote do it, I would make it the first. Our Navy should be our right arm of power. Upon the land no combination of power from abroad can reach or disturb us. I believe the great battle of civil and religious liberty is to be fought upon the seas. Let us prepare for the issue. The free principles which flow from this land to all points of the civilized world, while they carry balm and healing to those who are striving to imitate our example, also create envy and hatred towards us. It is to be the flag of the Union on the one side, and, possibly, united Europe on the other. Liberty to man shall be the issue, and the great ocean the battle-field.

I do, sir, rejoice at this recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy. He has come up fully to the expectation of the country. He has anticipated the age of progress. But, sir, I am digressing. I intended to speak of the recommendations of the whole Cabinet—to single out no one. I believe that all of them will be indorsed by the Democratic party in this House. So far as regards my own position here, I stand by the Democratic party and the Administration of Franklin Pierce, and I am willing to extend the hand of fellowship to all who come within the pale of that party. I make no distinctions.

When I speak of the Administration, I include the men who surround it; who are its advisers. Our flag has not been dishonored; our fame has not been tarnished; our country has advanced. Let the Administration have all the credit for it. To err is human; because there is a spot upon the sun, would you destroy the luminary of day and have a long night of darkness? Would this be wisdom? Difficulties will always arise in the dispensation of power; it ever has been so, and ever will be. Past experience has taught us this, "and we can judge of the future but by the past." I have yet to hear the first murmur of complaint, by the Democracy of the country, as to a single national principle uttered by Franklin Pierce, which belied his and our creed. I stand here today, not as his eulogist, but to do him even-handed justice.

There is another duty incumbent upon us. We came into power with a large majority, and we now have the responsibility of the Government upon our shoulders. It is our duty, having assumed that important trust, to stand together as a band of brothers, and to permit no dissensions that will lead to our defeat and disorganization. By the record let us try the Administration, and, I think, in that we shall find no error.

Mr. Chairman, having but a moment left of the hour allowed me in committee, I beg to direct the attention of members to the bill from the Senate in regard to the appointment of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. I have time to say but little upon the subject. The position was taken in this House lately, that the office of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury was among those high offices enumerated in the Constitution, and he must necessarily be appointed by the President of the United States, subject to be confirmed by the Senate. The following are the words of the Constitution having a bearing on the case:

"And he (the President) shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may, by law, vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments."

Under this clause the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. BAYLY] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr.

DISNEY] contend that the office of Assistant Secretary must necessarily be made by the President. I cannot agree with these gentlemen in this construction. In this way they would make two superior officers at the same desk. Two captains in the place of one captain and a lieutenant. The Constitution names the officers which are superior, and leaves the inferiors to be appointed by the provisions of law. Neither of these learned gentlemen can pretend that the clerk of the Supreme Court must necessarily be an Executive appointment. The assistant secretary can do no act of himself, no more than the clerk of the court. His acts are all defined by law, and he is literally, though having the name of an assistant, but the chief clerk of the Secretary.

I refer the committee to the report of Hon. R. J. Walker, then the Secretary of the Treasury, who recommended the appointment of this officer. The report is in my hand. I read from it. It was made to this House on the 11th of December, 1848, and the law was subsequently enacted:

"Having transferred the laborious duties enumerated from the Secretary of the Treasury, Congress should authorize him to appoint an assistant secretary, who should be a man of great talent and experience, with a salary not less than $3,000 a year, who should examine all letters, contracts, and warrants prepared for the signature of the Secretary, and perform such other duties not requiring the signature of the Secretary as might conveniently be devolved upon him by the Department. TO MAINTAIN THE UNITY AND EFFICIENCY OF THE SYSTEM, HE SHOULD BE APPOINTED BY THE SECRETARY, AND SUBJECT TO HIS DICTATION."

On the 3d of March, 1849, the office was created by Congress, and the duties defined, in the very words of Mr. Walker, in the law.

It was unity that Mr. Walker recommended in his report, and that the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury ought to be appointed by the Secretary, and subject to his removal. He said it was necessary that there should be between the superior and inferior such terms and understanding as the important trust confided to them might require; and when Congress legislated on the subject, it incorporated in the law the very words of the recommendation of Mr. Walker.

And this officer is now classed by gentlemen on the footing of ambassadors, judges, and other high functionaries of the Government, whose duties are all ministerial, and who have the power to do no act not subject to revision and sanction by their superior. And it is claimed that the President alone can constitutionally appoint him. Congress, at its last session, created the office of Assistant Postmaster General, and I crave attention to the words used in that law. I do not pretend but that Congress has the power to transfer these appointments from the Secretary to the President.

But at the last Congress the two Houses, by a law, provided for the appointment of an Assistant Postmaster General. They use, in that law, the word "hereafter;" that is, that when any vacancy shall occur hereafter, the appointment shall be made by the President, subject to confirmation by the Senate. Now, I say with regard to this bill sent to us from the Senate, this Congress ought to apply to it the same rule that was applied by the last Congress, in the appointment of the Assistant Postmaster General, and that the appointment, if it is to be made in the manner that the bill contemplates, should be made to take effect hereafter; for however gentlemen may regard and view it, it might be construed as a vote of censure upon a very high, able, and important officer of the United States—I mean Mr. Peter G. Washington—who, I am told, is a man as well qualified to discharge the duties of his position as any man under the Government.

Therefore, if the House is disposed to pass the Senate bill, changing the character of the appointment, let it be put upon the same basis precisely, that the last Congress adopted in regard to the appointment of the Assistant Postmaster General; and let its effect be prospective, and not retrospective.

There are gentlemen here who differ from me, and among them the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, [Mr. BAYLY.] I am willing always to give full weight to views coming from so eminent a quarter, but, at the same time, I do not see why the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] should not agree to the position that the same rule should be applied in regard to the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury as was applied by the last Congress to the Assistant Postmaster General. Put them both upon the same basis—let the law be perfected. These are all the remarks I desire to present at this time.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, followed, and advocated the joint resolution of the Senate, prescribing the mode of appointing the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. He argued at length to prove that he was correct in asserting, when this subject was under consideration in the House the other day, that the Constitution required officers of this grade to undergo the supervision of the Senate, and extensively quoted the debates on the formation of that instrument, in support of this position.

[Mr. B.'s remarks will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. B. having concluded—

Mr. PHILIPS obtained the floor.

Mr. HILLYER. I would suggest to the gentleman from Alabama to give way for a motion that the committee do now rise.

Mr. PHILIPS. I yield for that motion, if it be the pleasure of the committee.

Mr. HILLYER. I move that the committee do now rise.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the chairman (Mr. ORR) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly the annual message of the President of the United States, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. LETCHER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. DAWSON. I move that when this House adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

Several MEMBERS. Let us wait till to-morrow, and then adjourn over till Tuesday.

Mr. ENGLISH. I call for the yeas and nays upon the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. DAWSON.]

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CHURCHWELL demanded tellers upon the motion; which were ordered; and Messrs. JONES, of New York, and SAPP were appointed.

The question was taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 45.

The SPEAKER, (Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, in the chair.) The motion is lost, as nothing less than a majority can adjourn over longer than from day to day.

On motion by Mr. ASHE, the House then adjourned.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, December 23, 1853.

Prayer by the Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. STUART. I have been requested to present the memorial of Thomas G. Wickham and others, masters of first-class sailing vessels engaged in the lake trade, praying that a light-house may be erected at St. James, on Beaver Island, in Lake Michigan; which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

It was so referred.

Mr. WADE presented the petition of the heirs of Captain Joshua Chamberlain, praying compensation for services rendered by him in the revolutionary war; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, presented the petition of William Rees, praying to be allowed to locate ten thousand acres of land, in one tract, for a normal settlement; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BRIGHT. I present the memorial of Major J. S. Simonson, in behalf of himself and other officers of the regiment of mounted riflemen serving in Oregon, praying that the same extra pay which is allowed by the act of March 3, 1853, to the troops of the same regiment which is stationed at Fort Laramie, may be extended to those serving in Oregon. A similar petition was presented a few days ago by the Senator from California, [Mr. WELLER,] asking an increase of compensation for the troops serving in California. I see no reason why the same rate of compensation should not be allowed to those who served in Oregon at the same time; certainly, the expenses there are equal, if not greater; and I join with the Senator from California in urging the immediate consideration of the subject on the Committee on Military Affairs, to which I move that the petition be referred.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON presented the petition of James D. Cobb, praying to be allowed a just amount of arrearages of pay, as an officer of the Army, for having been dismissed from the same by the sentence of an illegal court-martial; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the memorial of the Legislature of Missouri, praying a grant of land to aid in the construction of the Mississippi branch of the St. Louis and Iron Mountain Railroad; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, two memorials of the Legislature of Missouri, praying a grant of land to aid in the construction of the North Missouri Railroad; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. FITZPATRICK presented the petition of Ann Simmons, widow of Samuel Simmons, a soldier who died in service, during the last war with Great Britain, praying a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FISH presented a petition of V. R. Hall and others, boatswains, gunners, carpenters, and sailmakers in the Navy, asking for an increase of pay; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

REPORT OF A COMMITTEE.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the petition of the legal representatives of John G. Mackall, deceased, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for their relief; which was read a first time, and passed to a second reading.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Mary W. Perrine be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. FITZPATRICK, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of William C. Easton be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to distribute the proceeds of the public lands among the States.

Mr. JAMES gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a joint resolution directing a sword to be presented to the nearest male relative of Major Samuel Ringgold, late of the United States Army.

Mr. BRODHEAD gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill making further provision against counterfeiting the current coin of the United States, and passing counterfeit coin.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. SEBASTIAN, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill giving further time for satisfying claims for bounty land for military services in the war of 1812; which was read a first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

OFFICERS OF THE SENATE.

On motion by Mr. MASON, it was Ordered, That the select committee, which was raised yesterday, to consider and report in regard to the proper organization of the officers of the Senate, be enlarged from three to five members.

The President appointed Messrs. MASON, CASS, CLAYTON, BAYARD, and PEARCE, as the committee.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON FRENCH SPOLIATIONS.

Mr. JOHNSON. I desire to ask the consent of the Senate to be excused from serving on the select committee, to which the bill and documents relating to French spoliation were referred, upon which I was placed by the Presiding Officer. I desire merely to say to the Senate, that I have already on my hands more business than I feel myself able to perform satisfactorily. I shall be glad, therefore, if the Senate will excuse me from serving on that select committee.

He was accordingly excused, and the President appointed Mr. ADAMS to fill the vacancy.

PRIVATE BILLS.

Mr. PRATT. As the morning business seems to be completed, I propose, with the consent of the Senate, that three or four bills which passed the Senate at the last session, and which have been reported again at this session from the Committee on Claims, be now taken up and passed. They were acted upon by the Senate at the last session, when there was a full Senate, and therefore I think the only objection which can be urged to their being taken up and passed now, by reason of there not being so many Senators present as might be necessary were it business which had not before received the consideration of the Senate, is obviated.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Maryland that there does not appear to be a quorum present at this time.

Mr. CHASE. One of the bills referred to by the honorable Senator from Maryland has been printed, and lies upon the tables of Senators. It is a bill "for the relief of the legal representatives of Major Caleb Swann, deceased." That bill is to provide for the payment of a very meritorious claim. It was reported upon favorably last year, after a very careful investigation, and it has again been reported upon favorably this year. The bill passed the Senate last session in a full Senate. I hope it will be the pleasure of the body to take it up and act upon it at this time.

Mr. BADGER. I have no objection to that course of proceeding, and I shall interpose none; but the Presiding Officer has announced that there is no quorum present, and I do not think we ought to proceed with any business until we ascertain that fact.

Mr. PRATT. There is a quorum now present.

Mr. BADGER. Very well.

Mr. CHASE's motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the legal representatives of Major Caleb Swann, the amount of his compensation as paymaster in the Army from July 1, to December 31, 1808, and a commission of one half of one per centum on the amount of bills of exchange negotiated by him under the directions of the War Department, for the purpose of raising money for the use of the Army.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

Mr. PRATT. I now ask the Senate to do me the favor to take up and consider one of the bills to which I have referred, and which has been reported by the Committee on Claims. I refer to the bill "for the relief of the legal representatives of Doctor William Somerville, deceased," which was passed in a full Senate at the last session of Congress.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that the bill has been sent to the printer, and has not yet been returned.

CRYSTAL PALACE EXHIBITION.

The PRESIDENT. I have received a letter from Theodore Sedgwick, President of the Association for the Exhibition of the Industry of all Nations, with a request to lay it before the Senate. It will be read.

The letter was read. It invites the members of the Senate to visit the Exhibition of the Industry of all Nations, now open in the city of New York, and incloses tickets, on the presumption that it would be more convenient for members of the Senate to go singly, at such times as might suit them, rather than go in a body; though, if they prefer the latter course, the Association will be ready to receive them.

The letter was ordered to lie on the table.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. GWIN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill "to continue in force the act entitled, 'An act to ascertain and settle the private land claims in California,' and for other purposes;" which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. PETTIT subsequently said: Mr. President, I desire to report back from the Committee on Private Land Claims, the bill introduced this morning by the Senator from California. I have consulted with a majority of the members of that committee, and they are satisfied that the bill ought to be reported back without amendment, and passed at once. I therefore report it back, and ask that it may now be put upon its passage.

Mr. GWIN. I hope the bill will be taken up and acted upon immediately. It simply continues the board of land commissioners in California for a short time longer.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to continue in force the act of March 3, 1851, "to ascertain and settle the private land claims in the State of California," until the 3d of March, 1855, in order to enable the board of commissioners to determine the claims presented under that act. It also proposes to authorize the board to appoint one or more competent persons, not exceeding three, as commissioners to take testimony to be used before the board, at a compensation not exceeding ten dollars per diem.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

On motion, the Senate adjourned to Tuesday.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 23, 1853.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m.

Prayer by the Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

LIEUTENANT GENERAL BY BREVET.

A message was received from the Senate by the hands of Mr. MACHEN, informing the House that the Senate had passed a bill authorizing the President of the United States to confer the title of lieutenant general by brevet for eminent services; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

HOLIDAYS.

Mr. ORR. With the view of enabling the members of this House to participate in the festivities of the coming week, I move that when this House adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Tuesday next.

Mr. CLINGMAN. That is right.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CLERK.

The SPEAKER. I beg leave to present a communication from the Clerk of this House, to this body.

No objection being made, the communication was read, as follows:

OFFICE OF CLERK OF HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, }
WASHINGTON, December 23, 1853. }

SIR: Of the documents voted by the last House of Representatives to the members of that body, for distribution among the people, some have been published since the meeting of the present Congress, and after the expiration of the franking privilege of the retiring members. I have been called upon to decide whether the documents, thus published since the meeting of the Thirty-Third Congress, belong to the members of the House of the Thirty-Second Congress, or whether, as they are intended for distribution among the people under the frank of the member receiving them, they should not be disposed of, in whole or in part, to the members of the present House. The resolution under which these documents were voted is explicit; but the practice of the House has been, on one former occasion, at least, to disregard the resolution under circumstances similar to those which now exist.

The following letter from Mr. French, a former Clerk of this House, is referred to as covering the whole question:

OFFICE OF CLERK OF HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, }
January 21, 1846. }

To the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

SIR: On the 13th instant, the House passed a resolution in the following words:

"Resolved, That the Clerk of this House be, and he hereby is, directed to distribute the extra copies of Lieutenant Frémont's reports, ordered to be printed by the last House, amongst the members of the present House."

The document which the undersigned was thus directed to distribute to the members of this House, was ordered to be printed and distributed by a resolution of the last House of Representatives, adopted on the 25th day of February, 1845, in the following words:

"Resolved, That the Clerk of this House be, and he hereby is, directed to receive, in the recess of Congress, the reports of Lieutenant (now brevet captain) Frémont's expedition of 1843 and 1844, to Oregon and North California, as the same shall be published from the War Department; and that ten thousand extra copies thereof be printed, together with the lithographed maps and drawings accompanying the same, for the use of the members of the present Congress; and also the report of the same officer, of his expedition to the Rocky Mountains, in the year 1842, be reprinted, with the report of the last expedition, without the appendix of astronomical and meteorological observations."

In view of the contradiction in terms contained in the foregoing resolutions, the undersigned entertained doubts as to the effect of the resolution passed by the last House. It became a question in his mind whether that resolution did not vest a right of property in the document ordered by that resolution to be distributed, in the members of that Congress, of which those persons could alone divest themselves. And the Clerk having them in his possession, an order of a member of the last Congress, dated March 7, 1845, to deliver "all public documents or books" due to him as a member of the Twenty-Eighth Congress, to a gentleman in this city, deemed it proper, on the day of the adoption of the resolution on the 13th instant, by the present House, to address a letter to the Attorney General of the United States, setting out the facts, and respectfully requesting his opinion whether the Clerk could deliver the copies of Frémont's report, still undelivered, to the members of this House, without subjecting himself to a legal prosecution by members of the last House for thus disposing of books which they claimed as their property. And also whether, by the passage of the resolution of the 25th of February, 1845, the property of the books ordered vested in the members of the House which passed the resolution.

The Attorney General has not replied in writing, or officially, to the letter of the undersigned, but at a personal interview with that officer he declined giving an opinion, and advised the undersigned to bring all the facts before the House, through the Speaker.

The undersigned respectfully states, that no question has ever heretofore been made, within his knowledge, as to the private and personal right of a member to such books and documents as the House had, by resolution, ordered to be distributed among the members; and there are many cases on the files of the office where executors, administrators, and assignees have applied for, and received, the books and documents of their testators, intestates, or assignors; and there are now in the possession of the undersigned, as Clerk of this House, hundreds of volumes of books belonging to members of former Congresses, which he has ever held to be as sacredly their private property as he would the value in money of those same books deposited with him in trust.

There is no question that the members of the last House of Representatives, who are not members of this House, consider themselves entitled each to his portion of the ten thousand copies of Frémont's report, ordered by the resolution of the last House; and many of those members have sent to their successors in the present House orders upon the Clerk to deliver the copies to which they are entitled, to those successors, for distribution among their common constituents. Since the adoption by the House of the resolution of the 13th instant, the undersigned has received letters from several members of the last House of Representatives, who are not members of this House, protesting against the delivery of the copies of Frémont's report claimed by them, to any person other than themselves, except by their order.

Those letters are communicated herewith, together with a letter from a highly respectable member of this House, protesting generally, "in behalf of those who are absent, to my taking any step whatever to deprive them of Frémont's journal, to which they are entitled, by virtue of a solemn, a legal, and valid act of the last House of Representatives."

Under these circumstances, the undersigned feels that he is placed in a most unpleasant dilemma. While he may subject himself, on the one hand, to legal prosecution, by complying with the order of the 13th instant, he is aware that he may, on the other hand, incur blame and censure by failing to do so.

He knows, however, that in appealing, through you, to the House of Representatives, to relieve him in some way from the embarrassment in which he is placed, he appeals to a body composed of individuals not one of whom would require him to do an act which would have the remotest tendency to involve him in personal difficulty.

He therefore most respectfully, but earnestly, prays that the House may take such order in the premises as will relieve him from the unpleasant situation in which the conflicting resolutions of the last and present sessions above referred to have placed him.

With the disposition to carry out, promptly and faithfully, every order of the House of Representatives, of which he may be made the instrument, he subscribes himself,

Most respectfully, your obedient servant,

B. B. FRENCH,

Clerk of the House of Representatives.

HON JOHN W. DAVIS, Speaker of the House.

The proceedings of the House upon the aforesaid communication were as follows:

Mr. JAMES THOMPSON moved the following resolution: "Resolved, That the Clerk forthwith distribute the report of Frémont's expedition, according to the resolution of the House of 13th January, instant," which was adopted by the following vote: Yeas 94; nays 81.

It may be proper to add that in the Senate all the documents published are divided between the Senator elect and his predecessor, so long as the latter has the franking privilege, and when that expires all the remaining documents are delivered to his successor.

In order to settle the question, I am constrained to invoke the opinion of the House of Representatives, and will be gratified to carry out any instructions they may give on the subject.

Very respectfully, JOHN W. FORNEY.

HON. LINN BOYD, Speaker of the House.

Mr. ORR. This communication raises a legal question, which I think is entitled to the very respectful consideration of a committee. I therefore move that the communication be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope the gentleman will include in his motion also that to print.

Mr. ORR. I have no objection if that is desired. I see, however, no necessity for its being printed.

Mr. HOUSTON. The whole question is presented before us in the communication; I should be glad to see it in print.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I suppose the printing of the communication will be entirely unnecessary, as it will go entire into the columns of the Globe and be printed, and before the members, in that form, by to-morrow morning, so that every person who wishes to examine it can have the opportunity. I hope, therefore, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] will not insist upon his motion to refer to a committee, but will withdraw it, and substitute in its place a motion that the Clerk of the House be directed to deliver to the members of the present House all documents, extra copies of which were ordered to be printed by the last House of Representatives for distribution, but not delivered before the meeting of the present Congress.

Sir, all the extra copies of those documents were ordered for distribution among the people, and not for the purpose of private emolument, or benefit of the members who happened at the time to be representing particular districts. Such books as are voted to the member for himself, become his private property, and the House have no right, by any subsequent order, to interfere with them. When the House, however, orders ten thousand extra copies of the Census Report, or one hundred thousand extra copies of the Patent Office Report for distribution, those documents are not designed for the member's private benefit. He is but the trustee for the people of his district, and must, in good faith, distribute them among his constituents.

Mr. RIDDLE. I ask the gentleman from Tennessee what provision he would make in cases where a portion of documents have been delivered to members of the old Congress, and the remainder of the same documents have not been delivered?

Mr. JONES. I am not aware that any such cases exist.

Mr. RIDDLE. A portion of Andrews's report has been distributed, but the maps and charts which should accompany the work have not been delivered.

Mr. JONES. Then they would have to be distributed by the members of the present Congress. But I ask the gentleman how many of the members of the last Congress would be willing to pay the postage upon those documents, to send them to their old constituents? Many of those members have removed from the districts which they then represented, and in such cases the people of the districts will be deprived of the works ordered by the House for their benefit, if you say the members of the last House shall have them. Under the operation of the existing law, they lost, at the expiration of the last Congress, their right to the franking privilege, and I presume few of them would be willing to pay the postage upon the documents.

Sir, during the last Congress there was but one gentleman here from the State of Arkansas. There are two gentlemen here now, representing the two districts in that State, who have not been here before. One gentleman from that State, who was on this floor in the last Congress, has been called to occupy a position in the other wing of this Capitol. He will get his portion of documents there, and the gentlemen here will frank them to the different parts of that State. So, sir, with the State of Mississippi. There is not a solitary member here from that State who was here during the last Congress. So it is with the State of Louisiana, and in a great measure such is the case in regard to New York, and several other States. With many of the States the delegations have been materially changed. Some of the gentlemen who were here during the last Congress are now in California, and will perhaps never return to the districts which they formerly represented here. What, then, is to become of the documents to which they were entitled? Are they to be sent to California? Why, sir, some of those gentlemen have died; and are we to send documents to their administrators? What would become of them? Why, they would be sold at private sale, or at public auction, as our documents have been sold time and again, for mere waste paper, instead of being distributed through the various districts of the several States for the benefit of which these extra documents were printed. I think that we are bound, if we would do right, to direct the Clerk to deliver those extra copies which are not yet distributed to the gentlemen who now represent the districts in which it was intended they should be circulated, who are ready and willing to send them out to the country where they were originally designed to go. If the gentleman who offered this motion to refer will withdraw it, I will make the motion I have indicated.

Mr. ORR. I do not propose to controvert any of the views stated, or of the positions taken by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES.] It may be quite right and proper that all these extra documents ordered to be printed by the last Congress, which have not been delivered during the recess, should go to the successors of those gentlemen who served in the last Congress. All that, I say, may be right and proper, but there is a legal question in the way, which I imagine cannot be properly determined unless we send it to the consideration of the Committee on the Judiciary. The argument of my friend from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] is an argument which should be addressed to that committee, and they should report on the propriety of sending these documents to the successors of those who, during the last Congress, would have been entitled to them.

But gentlemen must see the very awkward position in which the Clerk would be placed, as well as ourselves, unless this question is settled. The gentleman from Delaware [Mr. RIDDLE] propounded to the gentleman from Tennessee a very significant question. He said that there were some works which had not yet been completed—which had only been published in parts—and he desired to know what was to be done with them. I believe that the third volume (if there were three volumes) of the President's message to the last session and the accompanying documents has not been delivered. At all events I have not mine yet.

Now, you will give two volumes of this message and documents to the old members, and the third volume to the new members, having no reference to anything except the proceedings of the last Congress, and thus breaking the set. I think, therefore, that this reference should be made to the Judiciary Committee. They can examine the question, and decide whether the new members are to be entitled to these books. Their decision is necessary in another point of view. It is admitted that this matter should go to the committee referred to, in order that they may decide whether the Clerk should be protected or not from the various annoyances, and even suits at law, which may be brought against him.

On these considerations, I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection to the reference, and let this question go to the Judiciary Committee.

[Loud cries of "Move the previous question!" and "No, no!"]

Mr. ORR. I do not like to make a speech, and then to move the previous question. There seems to be a great disposition on the part of the House that the previous question should be moved. I will, as such seems to be the wish of the House, demand the previous question; and if the House concur with the demand, well and good. If not, I shall be quite as well satisfied.

Mr. FLORENCE. Will the gentleman from South Carolina allow me a few moments?

[Cries of "Oh, no!"]

Mr. ORR. I cannot.

Mr. FLORENCE. Is it in order to move to lay the motion to refer upon the table?

The SPEAKER. That motion would carry the letter of the Clerk with it.

Mr. FLORENCE. I do not wish to interrupt the regular proceedings of the House, but I do desire—

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. The question is on seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. ORR. On that question, I demand tellers. Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CLINGMAN and ORR were appointed.

The question was then put; and the tellers reported—ayes 78, noes 44.

So the previous question received a second.

Mr. LANE. I would request the honorable gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] to withdraw his motion.

The SPEAKER. It is not now within the power of the gentleman from South Carolina to withdraw his motion.

Mr. FLORENCE. Is it in order to demand the yeas and nays on the question to sustain the call for the previous question?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. FLORENCE. I demand the yeas and nays then on that question.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The main question was then ordered to be put.

The question was taken, and it was decided in the negative.

So the House refused to refer the communication to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FLORENCE. Mr. Speaker, stronger reasons have occurred to my mind than those urged by the gentleman from Delaware, [Mr. RIDDLE,] why the suggestion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] should not be adopted by the House. Andrews's report, and the Report of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey, have both been sent to members without the maps which are to accompany them, and by which they are made valuable.

Mr. LETCHER. I rise to a question of order. There is no question before the House, and therefore, as I understand the rules, discussion is out of order.

The SPEAKER. The motion to refer the communication to the Committee on the Judiciary having been voted down, there is now no question before the House, and, as suggested by the gentleman from Virginia, discussion is out of order.

Mr. FLORENCE. I move that the communication be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and would inquire of the Chair whether that motion is not debatable?

The SPEAKER. It is debatable.

Mr. FLORENCE. When interrupted, I was going on to say that a difficulty might occur which, perhaps, the members of this House have not thought of, and which those who have spoken on the subject could not have anticipated. In the document room below stairs, there has been a great anxiety to get off all the documents to the members of the last House who have not been reelected to this, to which the officers having in charge their distribution considered, from a sense of its justice, and from usage which has doubtless established a precedent, which I regard a safe one, they were entitled. The probability is, consequently, that two thirds of the members of the last Congress have received their documents. The other third who have come back to Congress have not yet received all of their documents. The distinction in the distribution during the recess was made because after a certain time—the first of November or the first of December—the franking privilege of members of the last Congress not elected to this ceased; and hence, unless they received their documents previous to that time, they could not distribute them among their constituents under their frank.

Now, sir, I have received copies of Andrews's report, and not the maps which are to go with it. The members of the last Congress who have not come back to this Congress may have been placed in the same situation; and, as was suggested by the gentleman from Delaware, [Mr. RIDDLE,] how are you to make the distinction? The maps and the books are related to each other so intimately that one of them is useless without the other. Hence, if the old members have received one part, and the new members the other part, they are valueless to either party to whom they may have been addressed. The third part of the President's message is in the same situation, as was stated by the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR.] It strikes me, as it will, no doubt, gentlemen who were members of the last Congress, that when a question similar to this was mooted upon this floor, in relation to the Census Report, it was said very clearly and distinctly—and if gentlemen will refer to the Congressional reports they will see that I am supported in my assertion—that copies of the Census were to be distributed to members of the Thirty-Second Congress; and they are to be thus distributed.

It seems to me, sir, that, so far as an expression of the opinion of the House is concerned, that expression is binding upon the officers of this House, and binding upon the members of this House; and those documents should be distributed to the members of the last Congress.

I have heard it said, sir, that some of the members of the last Congress are dead. A colleague of mine, sitting along side of me, says his immediate predecessor has died since the last Congress. It seems to me it would be very proper to make a distinction in such cases. It is impossible that the documents can have a proper distribution through any other channel than the gentleman who has succeeded him. Where members of the last Congress are living, they probably have pledged themselves to their former constituents, and to public institutions within their own districts, to distribute those works; and it is the duty of this House, towards those who have so pledged themselves, to place them in a position in which they can redeem those pledges.

I will state for myself, that so far as copies of the Census are concerned, I have promised them to public institutions, and public institutions only, existing within my district; and had I not been returned to this Congress, and were this Congress to refuse what I consider to be my right, that is, control of the distribution of these documents, I should conceive it to be an exceedingly hard case. Acting under this impression, and it being the solemn conviction of my judgment, allow me to ask this House to pursue the course indicated by it when the vote which was taken at the time the Census was ordered to be printed by the last Congress, led all who were present to believe would be religiously adhered to; and it is no more than just, in my opinion, that all the documents which were ordered to be printed by the Thirty-Second Congress should be forwarded to members of that Congress, except, perhaps, in case of the death of a member; and, in that event, his successor may, with great propriety, be intrusted with the delivery of them.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I was of the opinion that it was unnecessary to refer this matter to the Committee on the Judiciary, because I believed there was no legal question involved. So far as the books are concerned, which are given to members for their own use—I mean the regular and usual number authorized to be printed by this House—they belong to the members as their private property. The extra numbers are given to them for the purpose of being distributed, and it is a matter between the member and his constituents whether he distributes them in conformity to their wants and requirements, whether he properly performed his duties as a public agent. Now, if the remaining books are given to the present members, who were not members of the last Congress, to be distributed, it imposes upon them the duty of inquiring to what persons the other part of the books have been distributed; and it is a question between him and his constituents whether he give the third volume of the President's message to those who have received the first and second numbers; and there is no one to whom this duty can properly be confided except the present representative, who has been designated by his constituents to perform the duties of his predecessor.

There are other difficulties mentioned by the gentleman, which might be imposed upon individuals standing in the position in which I stand. I do not represent the same congressional district which I represented in the last Congress. I represent a portion of the district which was represented by Mr. WILLIAMS, in that Congress. My colleague [Mr. ETHERIDGE] represents a portion of that district and a portion of other districts; and while there were eleven Representatives in the last Congress, there are only ten in the present from the State. I think that we ought to give these books to the members of the present Congress, and impose upon them the duty of ascertaining to whom they are to be distributed, and impose upon them, also, the labor and responsibility of doing it correctly. They are the proper persons, in my judgment, upon whom the responsibility ought to fall. I think, therefore, that the resolution suggested by my colleague, ought to be adopted—distributing the books among members of the present Congress.

Mr. JONES. As nothing can be gained by referring this subject to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, I hope that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FLORENCE] will withdraw that motion, so that we may take a vote upon the question whether we will order these books to be distributed to members of this House or not.

Mr. HENN. I move the previous question.

Mr. FLORENCE. I will withdraw my motion.

Mr. JONES. I now move that the Clerk be directed to deliver to members of this House, all extra copies of documents which were ordered for distribution at the last Congress, but not delivered before the present Congress; and upon that motion I ask the previous question.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire to ask the honorable gentleman from Tennessee under what rule he proposes to make this distribution?

Mr. JONES. Under the same rule by which you distribute books ordered by this House.

Mr. WASHBURN. The State of Illinois has two more members, and the districts there are entirely changed.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been demanded, and debate is out of order.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I appeal to gentlemen to allow this matter to go to some committee, who may present it in a proper shape.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I desire to know if the resolution is intended to direct the Clerk to distribute all the extra copies of books now on hand, and ordered to be published by the last Congress, whether a different distribution has been ordered by law or not? If I am not mistaken, some of the books, when ordered, were directed to be distributed among the members of the House then ordering them.

The SPEAKER. No debate is in order, unless the demand for the previous question be withdrawn.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. ORR. I must call for the yeas and nays upon the passage of the resolution. The House will involve themselves in difficulty if they undertake to pass it.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only twenty voting therefor.

The question was then taken, and the resolution adopted.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that the vote last taken, by which the resolution was adopted, be reconsidered, and that the motion to reconsider do lie upon the table.

The question was taken, and the latter motion agreed to.

NOTICE OF A BILL.

Mr. BARKSDALE gave notice that to-morrow, or some subsequent day, he would introduce a bill of the following title:

"A bill granting the right of way and making a donation of public land to the States of Mississippi, Alabama, and Louisiana, in aid of the construction of certain railroads therein mentioned."

BUSINESS ON THE SPEAKER'S TABLE.

The first business in order being the consideration of business on the Speaker's table, the following joint resolution was taken up, read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

A bill for the relief of the owners of the brig Kate Boyd.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put, and the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. EDGERTON. As this is private bill day, and objection day, it being the last Friday in the month, and as there are some bills upon the private calendar which could very well be disposed of to-day, I move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House upon the private calendar.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The gentleman says this is private bill day and objection day, which is true; but as I suppose there has not much business yet been referred to that committee, I give notice that if the gentleman's motion fails, I will then move that the rules be suspended and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. EDGERTON. It is true that there are but few bills as yet upon that calendar, and for that reason it will take but a very short time to dispose of them. If they are objected to, of course, they are disposed of at once; and if not, I shall ask that they may be reported to the House.

Mr. JONES. Have the reports accompanying the bill been printed?

Mr. EDGERTON. In some cases they have not, and for that reason may be objected to, and will consume no time. It will take but a few minutes to go through with the calendar, and I hope the motion will be adopted.

The question was put, and the House refused to go into a Committee of the Whole House—ayes 61, noes 66.

Mr. JONES. I now submit the motion, that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. EWING. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being put on the motion to adjourn a division was demanded; and there were—ayes 41, noes not counted.

Mr. EWING demanded tellers; which were not ordered; and the question being again put, was decided in the negative.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question then recurred on the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

PRINTING OF THE LAST CENSUS.

Mr. CHANDLER. Before the question is taken upon that motion, I desire to ask the unanimous consent of the House to put a question to the Committee on Printing.

No objection was made.

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to know whether the report of the Census Bureau is in a situation in which the egregious errors which are found in it may be corrected—whether the type is standing or distributed, or whether the report is to go forth with all its acknowledged faults and imperfections, and thus greatly mislead the community in very important matters?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. This is out of order, and I object.

Several MEMBERS. Well, well, let us have an answer to the question.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee persist in his objection?

Mr. JONES. I do.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hear no answer to my question.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the inquiry propounded by the gentleman from Pennsylvania cannot be proceeded with. The question, therefore, now is on the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was then put; and, on a division being demanded, there were—ayes 81, noes not counted.

So the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ORR in the chair.)

REFERENCE OF PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The CHAIRMAN stated that when the committee rose yesterday, the subject then under consideration was the reference of these several portions of the message of the President of the United States to the committees which had been suggested, and that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PHILIPS] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. PHILIPS said the question before the committee was the reference of the President's message; and yet, from the latitude of debate, not only had the principles of the message been involved, but the question of slavery, the conduct of Captain Ingraham, the Koszta affair, and the constitutionality of the act of 1849, which invested in the Secretary of the Treasury the appointment of the Assistant Secretary. And whatever else was to be involved in the discussion, or on what other unknown sea they were yet to be launched, no one could tell; not even that notorious person, the "oldest inhabitant."

He could not say that he was surprised by the sentiments which fell from the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SMITH,] and from the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GIDDINGS,] though he confessed the sentiments in themselves were somewhat startling. He repeated, he was not surprised, because those stereotyped sentimentalities which issue from the lips of Abolitionists had fallen too often on the ear of the country to excite at this day the least emotion of surprise. Inevitable, unmeasured and unsparing abuse, had been poured out by the gentlemen on the institutions of the South, and southern members have maintained their seats in quiet, in decorum, and without reply. Nay, more: they had been called on to listen to the remarks of those who, denying the obligation of their constitutional oath, would falsify history and the plain provisions of the Constitution to support and sustain them in the violation of their pledged faith.

This institution of slavery had been inherited. It was sacred to him by the Federal compact. He would not lend himself to do what he knew was the cherished object of those gentlemen; that they might establish this place as the center from which they may speed their fiery arrows to every section of the Union to light up a flame of discord. When the Constitution shall fail to secure southern rights, for which it was ordained, he was strong in the expression of the belief that this institution had inherent power enough to protect itself.

He then referred to what he termed the novel idea of Mr. SMITH, of New York, namely, that Secretary Marcy did not go further than he did in the Koszta affair, and declare to the world that even if Koszta was not a citizen of the United States by law, he was one by the rule of reason and justice. He said that citizenship exists only under the conditions, limitations, and restraints, which the law imposes. But the sword of Captain Ingraham and the pen of Secretary Marcy are destined to joint immortality.

He then replied, at length, to the constitutional argument of Mr. BAYLY, delivered yesterday, in relation to the mode of appointing the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, contending that the appointment was not one of those designed by the Constitution to be confirmed by the Senate.

[The speech of Mr. PHILIPS will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, now claimed the floor, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. CRAIGE. I rise to a question of order. I ask how this question comes before the committee? The House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, the President's message being the subject under consideration. Now, as the subject of the appointment of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury is not referred to in the President's message, I submit that it is not regularly before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been the usual practice of the House, when in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for gentlemen to debate almost any question which was pending before Congress.

Mr. CRAIGE. That is not the question upon which I made my point of order. The gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. BAYLY,] as I understand it, proposes to amend a resolution which is before the Committee on the Judiciary—the resolution relating to the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman as proposing to amend the resolutions submitted by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON,] in respect to the reference of the President's message, which he had the right to do.

Mr. BAYLY. That is what I proposed to do.

Mr. CRAIGE. I am not aware that the gentleman from Alabama has offered any resolutions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offered a series of resolutions for referring to the appropriate standing committees the President's message; which resolutions are open to amendment.

Mr. BAYLY. I ask the Clerk to read that resolution which refers a certain portion of the message to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The resolution was read, as follows:

"5. Resolved, That so much of said message and accompanying documents as relates to the enlargement and modification of the present judicial system of the United States, and to the prevention of frauds upon the Pension Bureau, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary."

Mr. BAYLY. I move to add, at the end of the resolution, the following:

And, also, whether the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury should be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury alone, or by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Mr. HOUSTON. I rise to a question of order. Mr. BAYLY. I will save the gentleman from Alabama that trouble. I know he is going to say that the subject of my amendment is not in the President's message at all.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is my point.

Mr. BAYLY. The gentleman is correct. I withdraw my amendment, and move to strike out the following resolution:

"2. Resolved, That so much of said message and accompanying papers as relates to the existing tariff, and recommend a revision and change of its provisions; so much as relates to the condition of the Treasury and finances of the Government; to the public debt and its payment; the estimated receipts and expenditures for the ensuing fiscal year, be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means."

Mr. HOUSTON. I rise to another question of order. The question now before the committee is upon the distribution or reference of the President's message, upon which the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] has once addressed the committee. Now, by reference to the rule—and I have not recently read it—the Chair will discover that no member is allowed to speak twice upon the same question. I am perfectly willing to hear the gentleman from Virginia speak upon this question another hour, but there are plenty of other opportunities. I raise the point of order now, because there is a principle involved; and if we permit its invasion now, we shall never be able to get the President's message referred. If any member is allowed to move amendments at pleasure, and to go on for an hour to speak upon each, there will be no end to speeches.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that nevertheless the gentleman has a right to move to amend.

Mr. BAYLY. If the Chair will allow me, I will explain the principle upon which I moved the amendment. The resolutions before the Committee are upon the subject of the President's message. I have moved to strike out the resolution proposing to refer certain portions of it to the Committee on Ways and Means; that is, I move that none of it be referred to that committee. I am ready to acknowledge that the amendment is not one that should be adopted. My only object is to give me an opportunity to speak again, which I could not otherwise have.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is in order in moving his amendment, and is entitled to the floor to speak upon it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to another question of order. Suppose the gentleman from Virginia had, yesterday, two minutes before his hour had expired—while he still held the floor—moved an amendment, would that have entitled him to another hour's speech? If it would not, then I think that an hour having intervened, which has been occupied by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. PHILIPS], will not confer upon the gentleman from Virginia the right to move an amendment, and, upon that motion to amend, to make another hour's speech.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that such has been the practice of the House under the 37th rule. That rule provides that "No member shall speak more than once upon the same question, without leave of the House."

That is the first provision in the rule, and as it stood at an early day; but it was subsequently amended, and it now continues to read, "unless he be the mover, proposer, or introducer of the matter pending; in which case, he shall be permitted to speak in reply, but not until every member choosing to speak shall have spoken."

The Chair is aware that the practice of the House has been to allow a member to move an amendment to the pending proposition, thus changing the nature of the proposition, and upon that amendment to make another speech. The Chair desires to state, however, that he would not have recognized the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] if any other gentleman had risen and sought the floor. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Virginia is in order. He has moved an amendment, and upon that amendment he is entitled to occupy the floor for one hour.

Mr. JONES. I would respectfully ask the Chair if the practice to which he refers did not arise under the five-minutes rule, and refer to five-minute speeches only?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not. It evidently, to the mind of the Chair, is the meaning of the 37th rule, and the Chair makes his decision under that rule.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask the Chair if the practice to which he refers is not confined strictly, and in every case, to a resolution or bill which is pending before the House, and under, and by virtue of the five-minutes' rule referred to by the gentleman from Tennessee. I would like the Chair to refer me to a single instance in which this practice has been observed in the distribution of the President's message to the several committees. I confess that, in a service of some ten or twelve years, I have never known such to be the case.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is decidedly of opinion that the precedent has been set since he has had the honor of occupying a seat upon the floor of this House. It is very clear that no member would be entitled to speak twice upon the same question without the permission of the House; but it is certainly competent, as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOUSTON] must know, to move to amend a bill or resolution; and that, by such motion, the whole subject is entirely changed, and the gentleman moving the amendment is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HOUSTON. Then I present another point of order for the consideration of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama will state his point of order.

Mr. HOUSTON. It is whether, when an avowal is made to the House that the object of offering an amendment is merely to obtain an opportunity of making another long speech—I ask, I say, whether, in administering the rules of this House, it is the duty of the Chair to allow such a practice?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can only decide upon the question when it comes up upon an amendment. If the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] is germane to the resolutions offered by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON], the Chair is bound to entertain that amendment, and the right of the gentleman offering it to address the House thereupon accrues.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I move to amend, by striking out the resolution referring all these subjects to the Committee on Ways and Means, and to propose that, instead of that committee, they be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HOUSTON. I rise now to another point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama will state his question of order.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] moves to refer all those parts of the President's message, and accompanying documents, to the Committee on Commerce, in preference to the Committee on Ways and Means—the committee to which these portions are usually referred. There is a rule of the House—I cannot call to mind its number at this moment, but I am satisfied that such a rule exists—which absolutely requires that these things should be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Alabama be kind enough to indicate the rule to which he refers?

Mr. HOUSTON. I cannot recollect what the number of the rule is; but I am very certain that there is such a rule, directing that certain subjects shall be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, so that I think the motion of the gentleman from Virginia is out of order when he proposes to change the reference.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman suspend for a moment, until the Chair has an opportunity of looking at the rules?

Mr. HOUSTON. I will; and I am very certain the Chair will find such a rule.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. To save further time and trouble, I will withdraw my motion to change the reference.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I understand the Chair already to have decided this question upon a point wholly different from those which have been raised by these gentlemen, and that was, that nobody else sought the floor but Mr. BAYLY; and by the rule, if I remember it correctly, any one is allowed to speak as often as he pleases, provided there is no one else seeking the floor at the same time, and proposing to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule reads, "No member shall speak more than once on the same question, without leave of the House."

The Chair stated that he would not have recognized the gentleman from Virginia, if anybody else had sought the floor; but as no one did so, and as the gentleman from Virginia rose in his place and proposed to amend the resolutions of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON], now before the committee, the Chair assigned him the floor, and will entertain the amendment, if it is germane to the resolutions.

Mr. BAYLY. I believe I can submit an additional resolution. This is an amendment which is certainly in order. I move to refer the question of the propriety of laying tonnage duties, as the means of improving harbors, to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the gentleman will have the resolutions read, he will find that it is already proposed to refer that subject to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BAYLY. Very well. Then I move to refer it to the Committee on Roads and Canals. [Laughter.] Is that in order?

Mr. HOUSTON. The point I presented in connection with the Committee on Ways and Means would apply to this committee also. All subjects relating to the commerce of the country must go to the Committee on Commerce. By reading the rule creating the Committee on Roads and Canals, you will see that this committee is expressly confined to the subject of rivers and roads.

Mr. BAYLY. I will relieve the Chair, if he pleases. We all know that we are not going to do anything else to-day. The House will adjourn shortly, and if there is an indisposition on the part of the committee to allow me to say a few words in reply to the gentleman from Alabama on this subject, I will not say a word.

[Loud cries of "Go on! go on!"]

Mr. HOUSTON. It is due to myself that I should say now, that in that aspect of the case I have not the least objection to the gentleman's proceeding with his remarks. I was not willing, however, to have the practice invaded in this regard, as it would prevent me from getting along with the business that necessarily proceeds from the committee of which I am the head. I have no earthly objection to the gentleman being allowed to speak.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, took the floor, and replied to the arguments advanced by Mr. PHILIPS. He argued at length to show that the office of Assistant Secretary of the Treasury was not an inferior one, but an office of that grade, which the Constitution required should receive the confirmation of the Senate.

[See Appendix for Mr. BAYLY's speech.]

Mr. WHEELER next obtained the floor, and moved that the committee rise; which motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman (Mr. ORR) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the state of the Union generally, and particularly the annual message of the President of the United States, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

CRYSTAL PALACE EXHIBITION.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will suspend his motion for a moment, the Chair will present to the House a letter from Theodore Sedgwick, President of the "Exhibition of the Industry of all Nations."

No objection being made, the letter was read, containing an invitation from the directors of said association, to the Members of the House of Representatives, to visit the exhibition now open in New York.

The letter was accompanied by tickets for the members individually.

The question was then taken on Mr. WALBRIDGE's motion, and the House adjourned till Tuesday next.

The Journal of Friday was read and approved.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. SEWARD presented the petition of the

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33d CONGRESS, 1st Session.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 3, 1854.

NEW SERIES.....No. 7.

heirs-at-law of Francis Mountz; the petition of the heirs-at-law of Thomas Reid; the petition of the heirs-at-law of Garret Tunison; the petition of the heirs-at-law of Samuel Gibbs; the petition of the heirs-at-law of Clement Gosselin; the petition of the heirs-at-law of James Sawyer; and the petition of the heirs-at-law of Andrew Finck, praying to be allowed for the depreciation of commutation certificates; which were referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin, presented the memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, praying a grant of land to aid in the construction of the Rock River Valley Union Railroad; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, the petition of sundry citizens of Wisconsin, asking the preemption of the even sections of land in the grant of land for the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin rivers; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, presented the petition of certain officers of the army stationed at Fort Kearney, praying for an increase of their rations; which, together with a letter from the War Department on the subject, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of William L. S. Dearing, praying compensation for surveying certain public lands, and losses occasioned thereby; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Also, the petition of William Bowmer, of Wisconsin, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WADE presented the petition of the board of trade of the city of Cleveland, praying a grant of land in aid of the construction of a ship canal around Niagara falls; which was referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. PRATT presented the memorial of the heirs of Lieutenant Colonel Uriah Forrest for half-pay, under resolves of Congress of 10th April, and 21st October, 1780, with interest, deducting seven years' half-pay advanced by the State of Maryland, also with interest; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. WELLER presented the petition of Nathaniel Frye, asking compensation for performing the duties of Paymaster General, during the sickness of that officer from June 19, 1818, to August 26, 1819; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of Cyrus Palmer, and Lafayette Bach, owners of the schooner Damarisco, praying compensation for rescuing certain shipwrecked American seamen, under contract with the collector of the customs at the port of Puget's Sound; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PETITIONS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. SEWARD, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the several cases of the heirs of Colonel Philip Van Cortlandt, the heirs of Colonel Peter Gansevoort, the heirs of Lieutenant William Beaumont, the heirs of Lieutenant Nathan Weeks, the heirs of Surgeon Nicholas Schuyler, the heirs of Ensign Derrick Schuyler, the heirs of Major Wills Clift, the heirs of Captain Lemuel Clift, the heirs of Lieutenant Samuel Lewis, the heirs of Lieutenant Joshua Danforth, and the heirs of General James Clinton be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion by Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of James Pool be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, for the purpose of presentation in the House of Representatives.

On motion by Mr. SLIDELL, it was Ordered, That the petition of William Chandler be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. SLIDELL presented the credentials of his election as a Senator from the State of Louisiana, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of the Hon. PIERRE SOULE; which were read and placed on file. When he took his seat at the commencement of the session, these credentials had not arrived.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SEWARD, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to provide for a military and postal railroad through the Territories of the United States lying between the Atlantic States and the State of California; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. The bill was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SLIDELL, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to remove the obstructions to navigation in the mouth of the Mississippi, at the Southwest Pass and Pass à l'Ouvre; which was read a first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to establish a navy-yard and depot near the city of New Orleans; which was read a first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

ONONDAGA AND TURK'S ISLAND SALT.

Mr. SEWARD submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War furnish to the Senate copies of all the reports made by officers of the Army within the last three years, of experiments for testing the relative efficacy and usefulness of the Onondaga solar salt and the Turk's Island salt, in the cure and packing of provisions, together with a copy of the instructions under which such experiments were made, with any other information which the Department may have illustrating the results of said experiments.

MAJOR CALEB SWANN.

Mr. ADAMS. I wish to move a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill for the relief of the heirs of Major Caleb Swann was passed on Friday last. I understand that the object of the Committee on Claims was to allow the same compensation by that bill as was allowed by a bill which passed this body at the last session. It was originally reported with an allowance of a commission of one half of one per cent., but on further consideration the committee deemed it proper to allow one per cent. I understand from the committee that the bill was by mistake reported at this session so as to give only one half of one per cent. I desire now, therefore, to move a reconsideration of the vote on the passage of the bill, and have it entered upon the Journal.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Department of the Interior, in answer to a resolution of the Senate, communicating information respecting the allowances made in the expenditures for running the northern boundary line of Iowa; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a report of the Secretary of the Senate in relation to the contingent fund of the Senate; which was ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF ALBEMARLE SOUND.

Mr. BADGER asked, and by unanimous consent, obtained leave to introduce a bill to amend "An act making appropriations for the improvement of certain harbors and rivers," approved August 30, 1852; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

The bill proposes to amend the act of August 30, 1852, by striking out the words "by the construction of a breakwater across Croatan sound," from the clause appropriating $50,000 "for reopening the communication between Albemarle sound and the Atlantic ocean, by the construction of a breakwater across Croatan sound."

Mr. BADGER. The bill explains itself; but I will state that an appropriation of $50,000 was made for reopening that inlet "by the construction of a breakwater." But when the War Department sent out officers to make the necessary examinations, it was ascertained that the construction of a breakwater would involve a very large expenditure, and would, in fact, be useless; but the Secretary did not feel at liberty to apply the money to any other purpose than that which was specified in the act. The object of this bill is to allow the Department to apply the money for the reopening of the inlet by striking out the words "by the construction of a breakwater." It is to take away the restriction as to the manner in which the money shall be applied.

The bill was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole, and no amendment being made, it was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read a third time and passed.

DEATH OF HON. BROOKINS CAMPBELL.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McKEAN, Chief Clerk, announcing the death of the Hon. BROOKINS CAMPBELL, a member of that House from the State of Tennessee, and the proceedings of the House thereon; which were read.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Mr. President, thrice within the last few days have we been called to do honor to the dead. This Hall, draped in the insignia of mourning, announces to us and the country that some distinguished personage has been called from the walks of men, and that the nation honors his memory. I need not remind you, sir, that the object of this honored reminiscence was the Vice President of the nation. A few days after paying this mournful tribute of respect to this departed patriot, we were summoned to perform a like sad office in doing honor to the memory of one of our colleagues, Mr. Atherton, a Senator from New Hampshire. To-day we are called to mourn the loss of one of the people's Representatives in the other branch of the National Council.

How strikingly, Mr. President, should these oft-repeated bereavements admonish us of the uncertain tenure of everything that is human; how forcibly should it teach us "what shadows we are, what shadows we pursue!" The message from the House of Representatives informs us that BROOKINS CAMPBELL is no more: he departed this life in this city on Sunday last, about one o'clock. He is numbered with the dead, having passed to that bourne from which there is no return.

Mr. CAMPBELL, the Representative of the First Congressional District of Tennessee, reached this city, in feeble health, about the opening of the present session of Congress. His health continued to decline until nature, wearied with the unequal contest, yielded to the stern fiat of Heaven, and the spirit, released from its fetters, winged its flight to the invisible world. The casket remains, but the jewel is gone.

The honored subject of this humble tribute was a native of Tennessee; born in the county of Washington, in the year 1808. For many years he was a member of the Legislature of the State, and in 1845 was chosen to preside over the deliberations of its House of Representatives. In the commencement of the war with Mexico he was appointed assistant quartermaster, and in the discharge of the duties of this arduous service, he doubtless contracted the disease that has thus prematurely closed a life full of hope and promise.

Thus, again, Mr. President, is the nation called to mourn the loss of another of its sons, whose life was given to vindicate its honor and defend its flag. What multitudes of that patriot army have been gathered to their fathers, and now sleep the long sleep of death! Many fell in the fierce conflict of arms, and many more by the slow but no less fatal progress of disease. Though many sleep beneath a foreign soil, in a stranger land, and others were permitted to be buried with their fathers—yet, sir, scattered as are their remains, varied as were their fortunes and their deaths, they are not forgotten. Their deeds and their memories are graven on a nation's heart, where they will live, and freshen, and bloom, as long as liberty shall have a name, or freedom a home.

I know, Mr. President, that eulogies are often as unmeaning as they are unmerited. I can never deal in mere panegyric. I shall say no more than is due to truth and justice. BROOKINS CAMPBELL was an honest man; and in all the varied relations of life vindicated his title to this high distinction. As husband, father, and friend, he was affectionate, kind, just, and true. But all these virtues clustering around him and shedding their lustre on his pathway of life, were not sufficient to shield him from the shafts of death. The devoted fondness of a wife, a child, and friends, afforded no immunity from the dread fiat. If a life of usefulness to his family, his friends, and his country, could have availed anything, then he had not died. But alas, how impotent is all human effort; how unheeded the entreaties of friendship; how unavailing the tears of love and affection! Who but the Omnipotent can arrest the demands of insatiate Death, or stay its fearful desolations? The decree is irrevocable—dust thou art, and to dust shalt thou return; he has met the demand, and sleeps quietly.

Whilst we, his colleagues, who knew him, and knew him only to love and admire, mourn his loss; whilst his State, and a large, large circle of friends will join us in our sad regrets, yet there is a heart on which this painful event will fall with crushing force—the companion of his bosom, the object of his devoted affection.

If the sincerest sympathy, or aught of human effort, or human kindness could avail anything to lighten this blow, or soothe the anguished spirit, it would be freely offered. But here all earthly efforts fail: all human consolations are mere mockeries. We are left to commend her to Him who tempereth the wind to the shorn lamb, and hath promised to be a father to the fatherless, and husband to the widow. As a last tribute of respect and affection to the memory of the dead, I offer, Mr. President, the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has received with deep sensibility the message from the House of Representatives announcing the death of the Hon. BROOKINS CAMPBELL, a Representative from the State of Tennessee.

Resolved, That in token of respect for the memory of the deceased, the Senate will attend his funeral at the hour appointed by the House of Representatives, and will wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

Resolved, That, as a further mark of respect for the memory of the deceased, the Senate do now adjourn.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 27, 1853.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m.

Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of Friday was read and approved.

DEATH OF HON. BROOKINS CAMPBELL.

Mr. SMITH, of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, twice have we been called upon to mourn the loss of distinguished public servants since the meeting of the present Congress. And to-day I am instructed to ask the indulgence of the House to pause in its labors, while I perform the melancholy duty of announcing the death of my worthy colleague and friend, the Hon. BROOKINS CAMPBELL, of the First Congressional District of the State of Tennessee. He died in this city on Sunday last, at one o'clock, p. m., leaving a fond wife, and infant daughter, to mourn the loss of a kind husband and father. It is hard, sir, to die under any circumstances, but peculiarly so when away from home, and deprived of the kind and delicate attentions of that ministering angel—a wife—whose tears soften the pillow of the dying husband, and whose presence blunts even the sting of death itself. Such, however, was the misfortune of Mr. CAMPBELL. He left home about the 20th of November, in feeble health, and came here to enter upon the discharge of the duties of the important trust confided to him by a generous constituency.

Soon after his arrival in this city, he was confined to a sick bed, by a lingering disease, which baffled the best skill of the medical profession, and prevented him from ever taking his seat in this Hall, as a member of this body. Conscious of his situation and impending dissolution, it will be gratifying to his bereaved family and friends to know that he met the dread summons with calmness and Christian resignation—with a firm belief of his qualification and complete preparation to pass from a world of sorrow to one of eternal rest.

Mr. CAMPBELL was born in Washington county, in the State of Tennessee, in the year 1808, and continued to reside in his native county up to the day of his death. The many public trusts conferred upon him by his immediate neighbors and friends attest more strongly than I can by language his many private virtues, and his sincere and unwavering devotion to the public interest.

In 1835 he was elected a representative to the State Legislature from his native county, and was reelected in 1837. In 1841 he was again returned to the popular branch of the Legislature of his State, and continued a member of that body, at each successive session, until 1846. In 1845 he was, by the unanimous vote of the Democratic members of the House of Representatives of his State, chosen as the presiding officer of that body. It was in this responsible position that Mr. CAMPBELL exhibited, in a high degree, those excellent qualities of head and heart which so endeared him to his friends, and won for him the admiration of his political opponents. His urbanity of manner, amenity of disposition, honesty of purpose, and impartiality of decision, gained for him that respect and confidence of every member of the House, so necessary to the preservation of decorum and good order in a Legislative Assembly.

In 1846, Mr. CAMPBELL was appointed, by President Polk, an assistant quartermaster to the army of the United States, then in active service on the plains of Mexico. He repaired promptly to the post assigned him by his Government, and discharged the duties of his office with an ability and fidelity which gained for him, not only the good opinion and universal respect of the division of the army with which he was associated, but the hearty approval of the President of the United States. It was in that foreign clime, and while in the military service of his country, he contracted the fatal disease which has cut him off in the meridian of life and "in the midst of his usefulness."

In 1850 he was again elected a Representative to the State Legislature, and by his wise, zealous, and successful advocacy of those public measures of that session—which looked to the development of the resources, and the promotion of the prosperity of the whole State—Mr. CAMPBELL acquired an influence and power possessed by but few other members of either branch of the General Assembly. In gratitude for his distinguished services, as well as on account of his ability and purity of character, he was chosen by his district, in August last, to represent it in this branch of the National Legislature.

In politics, Mr. CAMPBELL was a Democrat, and radical, too, in his political faith. He engaged actively in most of the political struggles in his native State since 1834. But no prejudice, no political excitement, could make him swerve from the path of religious duty.

For some time past he had desired to represent his district in the Congress of the United States. He reached the goal of his ambition, and arrived here in time only for his soul to take its departure from the capital of the nation to that city above, "not made with hands, eternal in the Heavens."

He

"So lived, that when the summons came to join
The innumerable caravan that moves
To that mysterious realm, where each shall take
His chamber in the silent halls of death,
He went, not like the quarry slave at night,
Scourged to his dungeon, but sustained and soothed
By an unfaltering trust; approached the grave
Like one that draws the drapery of his couch
About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams."

In token of respect for his memory, and as an expression of our sympathy with his bereaved family, I move the adoption of the following resolutions:

Resolved, That this House deeply laments the death of the honorable BROOKINS CAMPBELL, who, at the time of his decease, was a member of this House from the First district of Tennessee, and tenders to his widow a sincere sympathy in this most afflictive bereavement.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate a copy of the foregoing resolution to the widow of the deceased; and, further, that he communicate these proceedings to the Senate.

Resolved, That the members and officers of this House will attend the funeral of the deceased to-morrow, at twelve o'clock, m.

Resolved, As a further mark of respect for the memory of the deceased, that the members and officers of this House will wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days, and that this House do now adjourn.

The resolutions having been read,

Mr. CARUTHERS said: A residence of many years in the State of Tennessee, where I learned to admire the character of BROOKINS CAMPBELL—intimacy ripened into the warmest friendship between him and my relations there—having often seen him in his place in the councils of his State, and knowing much of the deep love Tennessee bore the man and will bear his memory, makes it, perhaps, peculiarly proper that I should mingle my voice with his colleagues in mournful expression of their State's and the country's bereavement.

How sadly frequent have become these occasions in this Hall. The mourning in which it is shrouded speaks gloomily yet eloquently of the memory of the late high-souled and chivalrous Vice President of the United States. The voice of eulogy of the lamented Atherton, and of sorrow for his death, still lingers here.

To-day, for the third time during this session, (of yet but a few weeks,) we are mourners—mourning the loss of the gifted and pure. The death of Mr. CAMPBELL has fallen upon this House—upon the country—upon his family, with all the crushing and stunning force of an unexpected bereavement. His district, the country, had scarce heard the story of his illness—his wife, the wife of his love, had not heard the story of his danger; but his death is to fall upon her heart as the lightning of Heaven falls, shivering to ruin all its cherished hopes. It may carry with it a balm of some soothing to that crushed and bleeding heart, to know that a nation appreciates highly his lofty talents, his extensive usefulness, his unwavering firmness, his unbending integrity, his pure patriotism, his charming social qualities; that his last hours were tended with all the kind ministrations of friendship, and his death grieved by all who knew him—for they all loved him—with all the agony of a personal bereavement.

Beloved in his life, mourned in his death, he has gone to that shadowy land from which there is no returning. He was cut down in the bloom of his manhood—in the pride of his intellect—in the service of his country. How impressively sad this warning, teaching of the mutability of human life—of how powerless are the earthly hands of love and of friendship to save, and teaching, too, how sincerely the good and the wise, and the kind are deplored. When the sad tidings shall go through the land, with its wail of anguish, that BROOKINS CAMPBELL is dead, Tennessee, his own beloved Tennessee, will feel that she has lost one of the noblest and best of her noble and good sons. Tennessee, Alabama, New Hampshire, a bereaved trio, weep over their honored dead. Missouri would mingle her voice and her tears with their voices and their tears. I second the resolutions of my honorable friend from Tennessee.

The question was then taken on the resolutions, and they were agreed to; and

The House thereupon adjourned till to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, December 28, 1853.

FUNERAL OF HON. BROOKINS CAMPBELL.

In accordance with the resolution adopted yesterday, the Senate proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives, for the purpose of attending the services connected with the funeral of the Hon. BROOKINS CAMPBELL, deceased, late a member of that House from the State of Tennessee.

On the conclusion of the services, the Senators returned to their Chamber.

On motion by Mr. BADGER, the reading of the Journal was dispensed with.

The Senate then adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 28, 1853.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m., for the purpose of attending the funeral obsequies of Hon. BROOKINS CAMPBELL, late the Representative from the First Congressional District of the State of Tennessee.

Rev. Mr. MILBURN, Chaplain to the House, offered up a suitable prayer.

After a brief interval, the corpse of the deceased member was borne into the Hall in charge of the Committee of Arrangements, attended by the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House, and by the pall-bearers, and followed by the Senators and Representatives from the State of Tennessee as mourners. The coffin was placed in the area immediately in front of the Clerk's desk.

At a quarter past twelve o'clock, the Senate of the United States, preceded by its officers, entered the Hall, and were received by the House standing. The Senators took seats assigned to them on the right of the Speaker's chair. The Presiding Officer of the Senate (Hon. DAVID R. ATCHISON, of Missouri) was conducted to a seat on the left of the Speaker.

The President of the United States, and the members of his Cabinet, and the Supreme Court of the United States, accompanied by their officers, subsequently entered the Hall, and having been received by the House standing, were conducted to appropriate seats on the right and left of the Speaker's chair.

Services appropriate to the occasion were then conducted by Rev. HENRY SLICER, Chaplain of the Senate, and a beautiful and impressive discourse was delivered by Rev. Mr. MILBURN, Chaplain of the House.

At the conclusion of these services, the funeral procession moved from the Hall to the Southern boat, in the following order:

The Chaplains of both Houses of Congress.

Physicians who attended the deceased.

Committee of Arrangements:

Mr. F. P. Stanton,	Mr. Samuel Caruthers,
Mr. W. M. Churchwell,	Mr. Wm. Appleton,
Mr. James L. Orr,	Mr. John L. Taylor,
Mr. John G. Davis,	Mr. Wm. R. Smith,
Mr. William Cullom.

Pall-bearers:

Mr. Harry Hibbard,	Mr. James Meacham,
Mr. William S. Ashe,	Mr. Leander M. Cox,
Mr. John L. Dawson,	Mr. Bernhart Henn,
Mr. Thos. J. D. Fuller,	Mr. Theodore G. Hunt.

The family and friends of the deceased.

The Senators and Representatives from the State of Tennessee, as mourners.

The Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives.

The House of Representatives, preceded by their Speaker and Clerk.

The other officers of the House of Representatives.

The Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate.

The Senate of the United States, preceded by their Presiding Officer and Secretary.

and their Secretary.

The other officers of the Senate.

The President of the United States.

The Heads of Departments.

The Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, and its officers.

The Diplomatic Corps.

Judges of the United States.

Officers of the Executive Departments.

Officers of the Army and Navy.

The Mayor of Washington.

Citizens and strangers.

At twenty minutes past two o'clock the Speaker again called the House to order.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL SATURDAY.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I move that when this House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Saturday next.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion by Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana, the House then adjourned.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, December 29, 1853.

Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of Friday was read and approved.

Hon. SAMUEL S. PHELPS, of Vermont, appeared in his seat this morning.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. SEWARD presented the petition of John Bamsey, praying the passage of an act authorizing the locating of a land warrant, granted him for military services during the late war with Great Britain, on any of the public lands subject to private entry; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. WADE presented the petition of John Brown, praying for back pension from the time he was disabled in the service of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SUMNER. I present a memorial of the American Peace Society, signed by their president, William Jay, in which they request that this body will sanction the principle of arbitration in the settlement of international questions; which I ask may be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

It was so referred.

Mr. SLIDELL presented the petition of Alexander Lea, of Mississippi, praying compensation for losses sustained by the destruction of a lighthouse at Chandeleur Island, on the coast of Mississippi, of which he was keeper; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SEBASTIAN presented the petition of Jonathan E. Ferris, asking an allowance for services rendered in the naval service of the United States, as lieutenant-commanding, while holding the position of sailing master; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SLIDELL presented the petition of Caleb Green, late clerk of the district court of the United States for the western district of Louisiana, praying the reimbursement of office rent paid by him; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BRODHEAD presented the petition of the children of George Felker, praying that the same allowance may be made to them as would have been made if their father had not been stricken from the pension roll; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion by Mr. PETTIT, it was Ordered, That the memorial and papers of John Epes Cowan be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

On motion by Mr. WADE, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Cadwallader Wallace be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

On motion by Mr. SUMNER, it was Ordered, That the petition of the heirs of Benjamin and Nathaniel Goddard be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, for the purpose of presentation in the House of Representatives.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Charles Cooper & Co. be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. DAWSON, it was Ordered, That the petition and accompanying papers of Cyrus H. McCormick be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

On motion by Mr. DAWSON, it was Ordered, That the petition of Catharine B. Turner, widow of Commodore Daniel Turner, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

On motion by Mr. WILLIAMS, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of Israel Ketchum be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by the PRESIDENT pro tempore, it was Ordered, That the documents in the case of Henry C. Miller, Philip W. Thompson, and Jesse B. Turley be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

On motion by Mr. BRODHEAD, it was Ordered, That the memorial of William Clark be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

UNITED STATES ARMORY AT CANNELTON, INDIANA.

Mr. PETTIT submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs, in taking into consideration that part of the report of the Secretary of War which alludes to the removal of one of the armories of the United States, or the establishment of a new one, be instructed to inquire into the expediency of locating such removed, or new armory, at Cannelton, in the State of Indiana.

Mr. PETTIT. I desire to send to the committee, with that resolution, a pamphlet, showing the advantages connected with that town for an armory, together with a letter of my own, and one of Hamilton Smith, upon the subject. I ask that they may be referred to the committee.

They were so referred.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. ALLEN gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill for increasing the compensation of the district judge of the United States for the district of Rhode Island.

Mr. SLIDELL gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill for the relief of Richard King.

BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill granting to the States of Missouri, Illinois, Indiana, and Ohio the right of way for, and a portion of the public lands to aid in the construction of, a railroad from Kansas, via Jefferson City, St. Louis, and Vincennes, to Cincinnati, with a branch from Vincennes to Louisville, Kentucky; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JAMES, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a joint resolution for the presentation of a sword to the nearest male relative of Major Samuel Ringgold; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed. It is as follows:

Be it resolved, &c., That in testimony of the appreciation by Congress of the gallant acts and private worth of the late Major Samuel Ringgold, who was slain, in command of the light artillery, in the glorious battle of Palo Alto—the first in the war with Mexico—the President of the United States is requested to present a sword to the nearest male relative of that distinguished officer.

REPORT FROM A STANDING COMMITTEE.

Mr. BRODHEAD. The Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the memorial of John Gonder, jr., and John Duff, has instructed me to report a bill for their relief. This is a bill that was reported unanimously by the Committee on Naval Affairs at the last session. It received the favorable action of the Senate, and was passed. I ask that the bill may now be read through, that the Senate may understand its purpose, and I will then ask that it be put on its passage, the reason for which I will explain in a few words.

The bill was read a first and second time. It proposes to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to discontinue a suit brought against John Gonder, jr., and John Duff, in the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, for the alleged violation of a contract made the 20th June, 1846, to furnish stone for the dry dock at the Brooklyn navy-yard.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Pennsylvania that it is doubtful whether there is a quorum present. I have, therefore, instructed the Sergeant-at-Arms to ascertain that fact.

The Sergeant-at-Arms reported that there were but twenty-seven Senators present.

No quorum being present; on motion,
The Senate adjourned.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, December 30, 1853.

Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT TO TUESDAY.

Mr. PETTIT. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Tuesday next.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Treasury Department, transmitting, in compliance with the act of March 3, 1853, a report of Professor A. D. Bache, Superintendent of the Coast Survey, showing the number and names of the persons employed in the Coast Survey during the year ending June 30, 1853, their compensation, and the time of their employment, together with a statement of all expenditures made under the direction of the Superintendent; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, the report of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey was referred to the Committee on Printing.

PETITION.

Mr. BENJAMIN presented the petition of Henry Yates and Richard McIntyre, praying for permission to locate certain lands; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. FITZPATRICK, it was Ordered, That the petition of Thomas Rhodes be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

On motion by Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, it was Ordered, That the memorial and petition of Jacob Gideon, praying compensation for past services in the execution of certain binding for the Navy Department, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. FITZPATRICK gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Joshua Kennedy, deceased.

Mr. FISH gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to authorize the business of banking in the District of Columbia, and to regulate the issuing and circulation of notes as money.

REPORTS FROM A STANDING COMMITTEE.

Mr. SEBASTIAN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was referred the petition of John B. and Thomas Johnson, praying remuneration for expenses incurred in defending a defective title to land from the United States, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of Priscilla Prewitt, reported a bill for the relief of the heirs and representatives of Uriah Prewitt, deceased; which was read, and passed to the second reading.

Mr. ALLEN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was referred a bill for the relief of Ira Baldwin, reported back the same without amendment.

COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am requested by the Senator from Florida, [Mr. MALLORY,] who is now at his lodgings, to submit a motion to the Senate to excuse him from serving on the Printing Committee. The state of his health is such that he thinks he will be totally unable to discharge the duties that will be devolved on him by that position. I therefore submit the motion to excuse him, at his request.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I now submit a motion that the President pro tempore fill the vacancy occasioned by the honorable Senator's resignation.

The motion was agreed to, and Mr. FITZPATRICK was appointed.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, December 31, 1853.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m.

Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM H. MILBURN.

The Journal of Wednesday was read and approved.

REPORT OF THE COAST SURVEY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Treasury Department, transmitting, for the information of the House, the report made to that Department by Professor A. D. Bache, Superintendent of the Coast Survey, showing the progress of said work during the year ending November 1st, 1853, with the accompanying map prepared at the Coast Survey Office, in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress, approved March 3d, 1853.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that that communication be laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. It has been usual to move the printing of an extra number of this communication. I do not recollect what the extra number usually has been; but I will move that ten thousand extra copies be printed, so that the subject may go to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I have a resolution which covers the gentleman's suggestion; it is as follows:

Resolved, That ten thousand copies of the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, communicating the report of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey for the year 1853, in addition to the usual number, be printed; five thousand thereof for the use of the House, and the remainder for the use of the Coast Survey Office; and that the same be printed and bound with the plates, in quarto form, and that the plates be printed under the superintendence of the Coast Survey.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move that ten thousand extra copies be printed; and that that motion be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kentucky withdraw his resolution?

Mr. STANTON. I do, sir.

The question was then taken on Mr. HOUSTON's motion, and it was agreed to.

OBSTRUCTION TO TRAVEL AT ERIE.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand an account of the proceedings of a large meeting of citizens of the State of Indiana, held at the city of Indianapolis, on the 24th day of this month. I have not filed it with the Clerk, and had it referred, as I might have done under the rules of the House; but because of the weighty character of the meeting, the distinguished position of many of the gentlemen who took part in its proceedings, and because of the character and great importance of the question considered, I have felt it my duty to present it directly and publicly to the House, and to ask that it be by the House referred to the appropriate committee. The people convened to make a proper "expression in regard to the outrages at Erie, in breaking up a great national thoroughfare." I ask the unanimous consent of the House that the account of their proceedings may be presented and properly referred.

For many days, mobs, and large bodies of armed men, at and near the city of Erie, in the State of Pennsylvania, have held, and by menaces, force, and bloodshed, do hold and obstruct one of the great channels of commerce and travel between the east and the northwest; and now the property and persons of the people may not in safety pass that way.

By one of the resolutions of the meeting at Indianapolis, "the attention of the General Government is earnestly called to the lawless interruption of commerce, and the public mails, by the Erie rioters," "and Congress and the National Executive are asked to take such action as may be consistent with their delegated powers, to suppress the evil and prevent the recurrence of a similar calamity."

Sir, this is not a matter of local interest and concern alone. It is not alone a question between the people of Erie and the railroad companies. New York has an interest in the question. Indiana and all the West is a party to it. It is now of national importance and consequence. The fact that the local authorities seem to sympathize with, if they do not abet, this great public wrong, gives it additional and thrilling interest and importance.

If companies of six, and seven, and eight hundred armed men had invaded our borders, and impaired our internal commerce, stopped our mails, and hindered the free intercourse of our people, the attention of the nation would at once have been arrested, and all the power of the Government commanded. Sir, the same article, section, and clause of the Constitution which gives this Government power to repel invasions, confers the power, and imposes the correlative obligation, to suppress insurrections. I will not undertake to say what line of conduct the Government ought to adopt in this case, but I will say that its importance demands a most careful and earnest consideration. I therefore move that the report of the proceedings of the meeting at Indianapolis be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McNAIR. The Legislature of Pennsylvania is about to assemble; and I have no doubt that it will take this subject up for consideration, so far as Erie is concerned. In my opinion, the suggestion of the gentleman is not at all necessary, so far as we are concerned in that State. I have no doubt, though I cannot say so positively, that Governor Bigler will make mention of the matter in his message, and that then an immediate settlement of the difficulty will be had.

Mr. RITCHIE, of Pennsylvania. I can state a reason, Mr. Speaker, in addition to that already stated by my colleague, why this subject should not be brought before the House at all. This whole subject is at present before the supreme court of Pennsylvania, and also before the district court of the United States, sitting at Pittsburgh. They have ample jurisdiction to decide this whole question in accordance with the laws as they now exist.

The gentleman from Indiana, as I have been informed, is entirely in error in regard to the nature of the whole case. The facts, as I have been informed, are simply these: This railroad, which passes through the county of Erie, was authorized to be constructed at a particular gauge—four feet eight inches and a half—such as is authorized by the general railroad law of Pennsylvania. In defiance of that law, this railroad company laid down its rails at a gauge of six feet, in order to accommodate gauges on different parts of the same road, making a break in their road at some town in the State of New York, by the name of Dunkirk, instead of at Erie, where it ought to be. The six feet gauge was authorized to be brought into the town of Erie on one side, and carried forward on the other side, at a gauge of four feet eight inches and a half. The railroad company, in defiance of this law, laid down the whole track at a gauge of six feet, and they have been thus the first aggressors. I am informed that the people of Erie are acting under the legal advice of some of the most eminent counsel of the bar at that place, based on information of all the facts in the case.

There are differences of opinion among different counsel in different portions of Pennsylvania; but the whole subject is before the United States district court for the western district of Pennsylvania, and before the supreme court of Pennsylvania. I am informed that there will not be the slightest difficulty in enforcing any order of the courts. The parties will submit at once. It is therefore entirely unnecessary to ask action of the House in the matter; and the proceedings in Indiana must have been had under an entire misapprehension.

Mr. BOYCE. This is one of those accidents to which the northern States are and will be subject, because they have not the institution of slavery among them. [Laughter.] We from the South are sorry for them. We have long since seen this, and believe that it is only the beginning of the end. If we can do anything for the members from those States, we shall be glad to do so, for we of the South are conservative. You must tell us, however, what we can do for you. At present we can only offer you our sympathies. It is one of those misfortunes to which you will be exposed from having the whole of your population made up of freemen. [Laughter.]

Mr. DICK. As a Representative, in part, of the State of Pennsylvania, I think it incumbent upon me to state the history of the origin of the difficulty which has occurred in Erie county. Originally, this road, from the State line of New York to the city of Erie, was constructed with a six-foot gauge. An arrangement had been entered into by the New York and Erie road with the Northeast State Line road, to construct their road from the town of Dunkirk to the State line of New York, and thereby connect with the six-foot track from the city of Erie. It seems to me that the Lake Shore road—

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana, (interrupting.) I rise to a question of order. It is this: Is it in order to enter into this discussion upon a mere motion to refer the memorial from the State of Indiana? The motion was made to refer, and, as I understand the matter, it has been referred.

The SPEAKER. The memorial has not been referred, and it is not in order to refer it, if there be any objection.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. This memorial ought to be referred to a committee. But I object to the wide range which this debate is about to take on the Erie riots.

My colleague [Mr. HENDRICKS] presented this memorial, and made a short explanation of its objects and contents. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RITCHIE] has replied; now my only object is to put a stop to this debate, which is clearly out of order at this time. Let the memorial go to the Committee on Military Affairs under the rule, and upon their report the whole question involved will be legitimately before the House for discussion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RITCHIE] did object to any action being had upon that subject. The rule in such cases is, that the memorial must come before this body by presentation at the Clerk's table, and be referred under the supervision of the Speaker.

Mr. ORR. I desire to say one word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DICK] is upon the floor, and was interrupted by a question of order.

Mr. ORR. I was simply going to suggest that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. DAVIS] should not raise a question of order upon the gentleman from Pennsylvania. His colleague [Mr. HENDRICKS] made a statement in reference to this difficulty, and it is but common justice that the gentleman from Pennsylvania should be allowed to make an explanation in reference to the same subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HENDRICKS] made his remarks by the unanimous consent of the House, and the Chair was not disposed to interrupt other gentlemen who were speaking to the same subject.

Mr. DAVIS. When my colleague [Mr. HENDRICKS] presented this memorial, he made a short explanation of the facts contained in it. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RITCHIE] then replied to those statements at some length. Now, this debate is taking a very wide range, and I desire to know if such debate is in order, after the explanation of my colleague, and the reply thereto by the gentleman from Pennsylvania? Is it in order to enter into a discussion of the whole merits of these Erie riots?

The SPEAKER. Discussion is not in order.

Mr. RITCHIE, of Pennsylvania. I perceive that the gentleman, [Mr. DICK,] who is the immediate Representative of Erie, is upon the floor. I supposed, when I made my remarks, that he was absent from town, and hence I interfered in this matter. I hope the House will allow him to proceed with his remarks.

Mr. RICHARDSON. As I understand it, the question upon the reception of a petition, raises the whole merits of the question contained in it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that debate is not in order, if objected to by any member of the House; and that it is not in order to present the memorial, if objected to. The Chair understands that it has been objected to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and therefore there is no question before the House.

Mr. HENDRICKS. I wish, then, that under the supervision of the Chair, this memorial may be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means, to introduce "A bill making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending the 30th June, 1855;" and I move that it be printed, with the accompanying papers, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

I am instructed, also, by the same committee, to introduce "A bill making appropriations for the transportation of the United States mail, by ocean steamers and otherwise, during the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1855;" and I ask that it be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was then taken, and the bills were accordingly ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am instructed by the Committee on Ways and Means to ask that they be discharged from so much of the estimates of the Secretary of War as relate to rivers and harbors, and that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. EWING. I object to that reference, and would suggest that the reference be made to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. HOUSTON. I am perfectly willing that the matter should go there; and my own judgment was that it should take that course.

Mr. EWING. I desire to say but a single word, and give my reason for the reference I ask. The Committee on Commerce for several Congresses past has had this matter under their consideration, and made reports upon the subject. During the last Congress they reported a bill for which I could not conscientiously cast my vote, after having advocated the propriety and constitutionality of these appropriations during the whole of my canvass at home. After the principle announced by the chairman of the Committee on Commerce the other day, as the principle which governs them in these appropriations, I think they demonstrate themselves as unfit for the duty intrusted to them.

The chairman of that committee told us, with a tone of exultation, that they were disposed to do justice to all sections of the country, and in order to accomplish this they made an arbitrary division of these appropriations into three distinct parts, for three distinct divisions of the country, without reference to the wants of either of these sections of the country—without reference to the constitutionality or propriety of the appropriations to be made. It is exactly under such a principle as that, that nine tenths of the appropriations of doubtful constitutionality have been made upon the Atlantic sea-board, where millions upon millions have been appropriated, with lavish prodigality, in the history of the past, before the commerce of the West had an existence; and now, as an arbitrary division of the spoils is to be made to them, the Big Soduses and the Little Soduses must be hunted up, and places which are not entitled to appropriations, upon any principle of propriety or constitutionality, must come in to receive their share of such arbitrary distribution.

I insist that this subject shall go to the Committee on Roads and Canals, composed, fortunately for us who live in the Mississippi valley, of a majority of men living in that valley. Under the peculiar difficulties which surround this subject, with our President not living in that section—I offer it as an excuse for him, and not by way of accusation—and, I presume, finding it impossible to appreciate, understand, and sympathize with the condition of things in that valley—seemingly—and I will venture so far upon exegesis as to hazard that expression—I say, with our President seeming to disapprove of such appropriations upon the part of Congress, and with the peculiar difficulties which surround us, we claim, as I think we have the right to do, that the committee having this subject in charge should be, for once, constituted favorably to making appropriations for the benefit of the Mississippi valley.

I say the President seems to be opposed to these appropriations. I labored through that part of his message with some difficulty in respect to its interpretation. I do not know but the whole document furnishes, perhaps, a rather wide field for exegetical criticism. I labored, however, carefully and laboriously on through that portion of it which seems to refer to appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors—until I arrived at that point where he seems to recommend to Congress the levying of tonnage duties for the purpose of making such improvements, and there, as the navigators of western waters say, "I struck a fog, and had to tie up all night."

But, Mr. Speaker, I am not disposed to detain the House at this time. I may, perhaps, at some future time present my views upon this subject as briefly as possible, for I never make hour speeches. I do not care to have my right to the floor knocked off under the auctioneer's hammer. I prefer to dispose of it by private transfer. I say I may, perhaps, at some future time, if I can get the floor, make a short speech upon this subject, in behalf of the small minority of this House, laboring, as we are, under the weight of the frown and disapprobation of the Executive. If this subject is not sent to a committee whose policy, as already set forth, I fear would strangle it in its infancy, I will unite, as far as my feeble abilities will enable me, with those who are struggling to enforce the just claims of the country from which I come.

The question being first upon the motion to refer to the Committee on Commerce, it was put, and upon a division, there were 45 in the affirmative.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered; only 21 members voting therefor.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I demand tellers upon the call for the yeas and nays.

A VOICE. Too late.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have the right to demand tellers.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's right would have been clear, if he had demanded tellers in time. The Chair, however, will put the question upon the call, if no one objects.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the Chair will allow me, I will suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EWING] that he allow this subject to go to the Committee on Commerce for the present; he can then move to reconsider, and the question can come up some other day upon the motion when the House is full. There is a very slim attendance to-day, perhaps not a quorum, and there will be difficulty in settling the question at this time. There is other business which I hope will be attended to to-day, and I therefore suggest to the gentleman that he allow the matter to take the course recommended by the Committee on Ways and Means for the present, and it can come up at some other time upon a reconsideration.

Mr. EWING. I have no objection to the course suggested by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSTON,] if it be the wish of the House, and will withdraw my motion.

A MEMBER. I object.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I rise to make a motion, which, I suppose, will take precedence of those now pending. I presume it is in order to move to postpone the further consideration of this subject until some future day, and that such a motion will take precedence of the one made by the gentleman. If it be postponed until, perhaps, Tuesday next, we shall probably then have a full House, and the matter could be fairly tested. At least, I presume there will be no objection to its being postponed until Tuesday or Wednesday. A motion to commit would keep it before the House.

The SPEAKER. It may be postponed to a day certain.

Mr. CLINGMAN. My motion was to postpone it until Tuesday.

Mr. PRESTON. I entirely agree with my colleague, that—

The SPEAKER. The question is not debatable.

Mr. PRESTON. I was not going to debate it. I think it may, perhaps, be best for our interest that it should be referred to the committee to which the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means moved its reference. I therefore trust that the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] may prevail. But I would suggest that I do not think there will be a quorum present on even Tuesday, to which day it is most probable we will adjourn; and as there seems to be a disposition to have this question discussed when a quorum is present, I would suggest to the gentleman from North Carolina to amend his motion, so as to postpone it until Friday next.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky, and will so modify my motion as to have the question postponed until Friday next.

The question was then taken, on the motion to postpone until Friday next, and it was agreed to.

SUPPLY OF WATER FOR WASHINGTON AND GEORGETOWN.

On motion by Mr. HOUSTON, the Committee on Ways and Means was discharged from so much of the estimates of the Secretary of War as referred to supplying the citizens of Washington and Georgetown with water; and the same was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PHELPS, of Missouri, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported the following bill; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying documents, ordered to be printed:

"A bill making appropriations for the naval service for the year ending 30th June, 1855."

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I move that when this House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next.

The motion was agreed to.

EMPLOYEES IN THE COAST SURVEY.

The SPEAKER. By permission of the House, the Chair will present a communication from the Treasury Department.

The communication was read. It was dated the 27th instant, signed by A. D. Bache, Superintendent of the Coast Survey, showing the number and names of the persons employed during the last fiscal year in that department of the public service, the business connected therewith, the amount of compensation, &c., &c.

Mr. HOUSTON. That report is made in pursuance of the requirements of a law passed last session; and I move that, for the present, the report be laid upon the table.

The motion to lay the report upon the table was agreed to.

HENRY LEWIS.

Mr. MACE, from the Committee on Claims, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and ordered to be printed:

"A bill for the relief of Henry Lewis, of Clinton county, Indiana."

Mr. MACE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a resolution.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Several MEMBERS. Read the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is the reading of the resolution objected to?

Mr. WALSH. It is.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. LETCHER, from the Committee on Claims, made adverse reports on the petitions of John P. Shelden and Martin L. Patterson; which were ordered to lie upon the table, and be printed.

Mr. EASTMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the adverse report on the petition of John P. Shelden was ordered to lie upon the table, and asked that the motion be entered for consideration on some future day.

It was so ordered.

Mr. MILLER, of Missouri, from the Committee on Claims, reported the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and ordered to be printed:

"A bill for the relief of Captain George Sympton, of Galveston."

Mr. PRESTON gave notice that he would to-morrow, or on some future day, introduce a bill concerning the Louisville and Portland Canal.

Mr. HENDRICKS, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported "a bill for the relief of William Blake;" which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HENDRICKS, from the same committee, reported adversely to the prayer of the petition of Eliza Merrill, of Bangor, Maine, for arrears of pension due James Merrill; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. HENDRICKS, from the same committee, reported adversely in the case of John Droat; which report was ordered to lie upon the table, and be printed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I wish it to be entered on the Journal, for action hereafter, that the vote by which the report just made was laid upon the table, be reconsidered.

BOUNTY LAND LAW.

Mr. BISSELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported "A bill to repeal the first proviso of the fourth section of the act entitled 'an act granting bounty land to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States,' approved September 28, 1850;" which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. B. I am willing myself that the bill should go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; but it is suggested that the House might save itself that trouble, and pass the bill at once. I will say, by way of explanation of its intent—

Mr. McMULLIN. I object to the bill being passed at this time.

Mr. BISSELL. Very well. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

GENERAL WOOL.

Mr. BISSELL. The Committee on Military Affairs have directed me to report the following resolutions to the House, with the recommendation that they do pass:

Resolved, unanimously, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the thanks of Congress are due, and are hereby tendered, to Brevet Major General John E. Wool, for his distinguished services in the late war with Mexico, and especially for the skill, enterprise, and courage which distinguished his conduct at the battle of Buena Vista.

Resolved, That the President be requested to cause a sword, with suitable devices, to be presented to General Wool, as a testimonial of the high sense entertained by Congress of his gallant and judicious conduct on that memorable occasion.

Resolved, That the President be requested to cause a copy of the foregoing resolutions to be transmitted to General Wool.

The resolutions were read a second time.

Mr. BISSELL. I hope no objection, similar to the one made a few moments ago, will be made to the immediate consideration and adoption of these resolutions. If there be any objection, I am well aware, this not being a day on which I can move to suspend the rules, that the resolutions must necessarily go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I do not interpose any objection to the passage of the resolutions reported by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BISSELL] whenever there is a quorum present. It is evident there is no quorum here, and it is wrong to legislate without a quorum.

Mr. BISSELL. If there is no quorum, and that be conceded, I am not disposed to press the question; though I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee, that I particularly desire that these resolutions should pass pretty soon. The distinguished man, whom these resolutions are designed to honor appropriately, is about to depart on an important expedition to the Pacific coast. It will gratify him very much, and it will gratify the whole country, if these resolutions should pass before he takes his departure. It is a matter of mere sentiment and feeling.

Mr. JONES. I would suggest to the gentleman that he withdraw these resolutions, and present them the next day of our meeting, which will be Tuesday next.

The SPEAKER. Or postpone the consideration of them until that time.

Mr. JONES. To save the question, I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. CLINGMAN. No, no. Do not adjourn.

Mr. BISSELL. If the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] will permit me, and it be in order, I move that it be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. JONES. There is no objection to that, as I believe the list of committees have been called through for reports.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the resolutions will be referred as moved by the gentleman from Illinois.

CALL FOR RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] will withdraw the motion to adjourn. I suggest to him that we should allow the States to be called over, and let gentlemen get their bills before the committees. We have had a week of holidays, and we can sit here an hour or two for that purpose.

Mr. JONES. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER then commenced the call of the States for resolutions, beginning with the State of Maine.

NAVY STEAMERS.

Mr. MACDONALD presented a resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy communicate to this House, the information called for by the following interrogatories:

1st. The number and names of steamers built for the Navy in each year since January, 1836, their power, tonnage, proportion of guns to the ton, as actually armed, and the length of time between the commencement of each vessel and her sailing on her first cruise.

2d. The actual cost of each vessel from the time of their commencement till first commissioned for sea service, the number of times repaired or altered in the United States, and the cost of such repairs before proceeding to sea.

3d. The number of times each steamer has undergone foreign repairs, on foreign stations, from accident, and the nature and cause of such accident, as well as the cost of such repairs.

4th. The actual cost of each steamer in the Navy, from the time of building until the end of the fiscal year 1853, including repairs, of whatever description, the actual service at sea performed by each vessel, as well as the aggregate cost of the entire steam navy, and the various experiments connected therewith, until the close of the fiscal year 1853.

5th. The names of the head of bureaus, constructors, engineers, and other persons concerned in the construction or equipment of each and every steamer in the Navy.

6th. The present condition of the steam navy, including readiness for immediate service, capacity for conveying fuel, accommodating crew, and ratio of guns to tonnage.

7th. The number of steamers purchased for the Navy, their first cost, the amount expended to fit them for war vessels, the power, burden, proportion of actual armament and tonnage, entire cost of repairs of all kinds, to the close of the fiscal year 1853, the service performed, their present condition and fitness for service, and the names of the agent who made the purchase for the Government.

Mr. MACDONALD. I would state that this information from the Navy Department is nearly prepared, under a resolution of a similar character passed by the last Congress. It will only be necessary to extend the tables from 1852 to 1853. Under the rules of the House, a resolution, asking for information, would have to lie over, but I trust that this being short we will act upon it now. I hope that there will be no objection to this course, so that we may have this information early for our intelligent action upon questions which will be shortly before us.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. WALSH. I rise to a question of order. I made objection to the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear any objection.

Mr. WALSH. I think I made it loud enough to be heard upon the other side of the Hall.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WALSH] is not in order. As objection is made, the resolution will lie over.

On motion by Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine, it was Ordered, That he have leave to withdraw from the files of the House the petition and papers of Benjamin Bibbins, and that they be referred to the Pension Bureau.

Mr. APPLETON. I ask leave to introduce "A bill to provide for the accommodation of the courts of the United States in the district of Massachusetts."

The bill was read the first and second time by its title.

Mr. MILLSON. Is there any motion to refer the bill?

The SPEAKER. There is not.

Mr. MILLSON. Has the bill been reported from any committee?

The SPEAKER. It has not been so reported.

Mr. MILLSON. I move then to refer it to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. No objection being made, it will be so ordered.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's objection is overruled by the Chair, the business before the body being in order, under the rules of the House.

Mr. HENN. I think it is unfair to absent members of the House, that we should go on with the business; and I therefore move that the House adjourn.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I hope not. We have had a week's holiday, and let us now go on with our business to-day.

The question was then taken upon Mr. HENN's motion, and it was decided in the negative.

So the House refused to adjourn.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. ABERCROMBIE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw from its files the petition and papers in the case of Charles E. Gunter, for the purpose of reference to a committee of the House. I will state, for the information of the House, that a bill passed the House for the relief of the petitioner, and the papers are on file. I now desire to withdraw them, and have them referred to the Committee on Claims, in order that the case may again come up for the action of the House.

A MEMBER. Is that in order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's object can be accomplished under the rule, by making application at the Clerk's desk, and not in open House.

OUTRAGES UPON AMERICAN CITIZENS.

Mr. INGERSOLL. If it be in order, I wish now to call up the resolution offered by me the other day, calling upon the President of the United States for copies of the correspondence between this Government and Spain, relative to the seizure and imprisonment of Captain Thaddeus Beecher, and the officers and crew, of the schooner North Carolina. It is merely a resolution of inquiry, to which I presume there will be no objection, and I wish to put it upon its passage.

Several Voices. That is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The resolution, having lain over one day, comes up in order, in the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. When the resolution went over, it took its place upon the Calendar.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I rise to a point of order. I submit that in calling the States for resolutions, when a resolution goes over, it does not come up in order upon the next resolution day, but takes its place upon the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. If there be a rule requiring that disposition, the Chair asks the gentleman to direct his attention to it.

Mr. CLINGMAN. My objection is that we are now calling the States for resolutions, and it has never been the practice that resolutions of this character, lying over from a previous day, should come up under the call.

The SPEAKER. The Chair doubts whether it was not the first business in order before the call commenced.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I think that has not been the practice of the House.

Mr. JONES. I should suppose, if resolutions lying over, under this rule, came up as suggested by the Chair, they would come up in their order. Now, if there be no Calendar kept by the Speaker for that purpose, they must go upon the Speaker's table, and will come up in their order, when that class of business is before the House. If members have the right to call up resolutions of this character, during the call of the States for resolutions, and they give rise to debate, and consume the time of the House, I ask when can we have another call for resolutions? You cannot do it to-morrow. The rule is, since you have abolished the calling of States for petitions, that committees shall be first called for reports, and then the States called for resolutions. If any resolution, offered under this rule, gives rise to debate, it must go over—not certainly to come up the next day, when the same State is called. The reason for prescribing in the rule that resolutions giving rise to debate shall go over, is to give members an opportunity to get their business before the House; and if such resolutions are to come up the next day during the call, the whole object of the rule would be defeated.

The SPEAKER. If they do not come up the next day, the question is, when shall they be in order? The Chair is of the opinion, that during the whole of the last Congress, this question never once arose, and he does not recollect what was the practice of the House previous to that time. He is, however, of the opinion, that if a resolution, giving rise to debate, goes over under the rule, having lain for one day, it comes up first in order on the day following, when it is debatable.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Suppose it gives rise to debate, when will you call the States for resolutions again?

The SPEAKER. The States having all been called, it seems to the Chair that resolutions lying over under the rule, should be called up for action.

Mr. MACDONALD. I ask the attention of the Chair to the 61st rule, which is as follows:

"61. A proposition requesting information from the President of the United States, or directing it to be furnished by the head of either of the Executive Departments, or by the Postmaster General—or to print an extra number of any document, or other matter, excepting messages of the President to both Houses at the commencement of each session of Congress, and the reports and documents connected with, or referred to in it, shall lie on the table one day, for consideration, unless otherwise ordered by the unanimous consent of the House; and all such propositions shall be taken up for consideration in the order they were presented, immediately after reports are called for from select committees; and, when adopted, the Clerk shall cause the same to be delivered."

The SPEAKER. The Chair is inclined to think that they would come up before the next call under the rule.

LANDS FOR SCHOOLS AND RAILROADS.

Mr. BENNETT, by the unanimous consent of the House introduced—

"A bill granting lands equally to the several States, to aid in the construction of railroads, and for the support of schools;" which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. BENNETT. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. HENN. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SAPP. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the motion being agreed to,

The House adjourned to meet again on Tuesday next, at twelve o'clock, m.

IN SENATE.

Tuesday, January 3, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of Friday was read and approved.

Hon. ANDREW P. BUTLER, of South Carolina, Hon. HENRY S. GEYER, of Missouri, and Hon. SAM HOUSTON, of Texas, appeared in their seats this morning.

VERMONT SENATORIAL REPRESENTATION.

Mr. SEWARD. I desire to call the attention of the Senate to a question of privilege. We have seen, sir, during the last week, an honorable gentleman from the State of Vermont arrive here, take his seat as a member of this body, and I am sure that all the members of this body, like myself, are proud to receive him and welcome him here. At the same time it is known to the Senate that the circumstances under which he appears now to resume his seat are peculiar; and they are said (though I do not know that it is the fact) to be new. I refer to the honorable gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. PHELPS.]

The facts are understood to be these: During the recess of the Legislature of Vermont, he was appointed by the Governor of that State to fill the vacancy which had happened during the recess, by the death of the Hon. William Upham, who belonged to that class of Senators whose terms expire on the 4th of March, 1855. Mr. Phelps appeared and took his seat, and attended during the last special session of the Senate. It is understood that since that time the Legislature of the State of Vermont has convened, and has adjourned sine die without filling the vacancy. The question which arises is, whether, by that adjournment of the Legislature, the seat of the honorable Senator from Vermont has been vacated or not? It is a question proper to be brought before the Senate. Somebody must bring it before this body. It seemed to the gentlemen on this side of the Hall to be ungracious that the question should be required to be raised on the opposite side of the Chamber; and after consultation with the honorable Senator himself, and with friends, it seemed proper, at least not unbecoming, that I should raise the question; because I have heretofore objected somewhat strenuously to the admission of Senators coming into the Chamber on the opposite side of the Hall, and have required a diligent scrutiny into the circumstances attending their cases. It has been thought, also, that no one could doubt my desire that the State of Vermont should be fully represented here, or my equally strong desire that it should be represented here in the person of the honorable Senator who now claims the seat, if it can be so consistently with the Constitution and laws. Under these circumstances, I beg leave to submit the following resolution:

Whereas, the Hon. SAMUEL S. PHELPS was appointed by his Excellency the Governor of Vermont, in the recess of the Legislature of that State, to fill the vacancy in the Senate of the United States, which happened by the death of the Hon. William Upham, a Senator whose term of six years would have continued till the 4th of March, 1855; and

Whereas, it is understood that since that temporary appointment was made, the Legislature of Vermont has been convened at their annual session, and has adjourned without filling such vacancy: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary inquire whether the Hon. SAMUEL S. PHELPS is entitled to retain his seat in the Senate of the United States.

If there be no objection, I ask the consideration of the resolution at this time.

Mr. BUTLER. I would inform the gentleman that, at this time, there is not a quorum of the Committee on the Judiciary in the city, and there is not likely to be one, as I understand, at present. I think these questions should be considered primarily by the Senate itself. I know that the same question has been before the Committee on the Judiciary on a former occasion. But on another occasion, I believe in the case of the honorable Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. Dixon,] it was considered proper that the Senate itself should take up the subject and dispose of it. I think that is the proper mode; and I would suggest, therefore, to the honorable gentleman from New York, to withdraw his motion to refer the resolution to the committee, particularly as the reference will delay final action upon the question.

Mr. BADGER. Let it stand till to-morrow.

Mr. SEWARD. I am willing to delay the motion till to-morrow.

The question on the resolution was therefore postponed.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. PETTIT presented the memorial of several citizens of Indiana, in favor of the construction of a ship canal around the Falls of Niagara; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a joint resolution of the General Assembly of Indiana on the same subject; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SEWARD presented sundry petitions of citizens of the city of Oswego, business men in that city, asking aid for the construction of a ship canal around the Falls of Niagara; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented the petition of Joseph L. Smith, praying that copies of the Patent Office Reports, and reports from certain other Departments, be distributed among the common schools of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. SHIELDS presented the petition of the widow of General Childs, praying for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented the petition of Morris Powers, praying for a pension in consequence of wounds received by him in the war with Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a petition of citizens of the city of Washington, for the improvement of Delaware avenue; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, the petition of John Reynolds, and other citizens of Illinois, praying the establishment of a subterranean line of telegraph from St. Louis to San Francisco; which was referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. BRIGHT presented the petition of David Hines, praying compensation for damages sustained in consequence of a change in the grade of Pennsylvania avenue; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, the petition of J. S. Neal, praying that the name of his vessel may be changed; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SUMNER presented the memorial of Edward Hamilton, asking that the present duty upon coal may be repealed, and that hereafter that article may be allowed to enter free of duty into the ports of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. FISH presented the petition of Hammond Howe and others, praying for an amendment of the laws for the safety of passengers on board steamboats, requiring the adoption of John Thomas's improvement in steamboats; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BUTLER presented the petition of M. C. Mordecai, Isaac E. Hertz, and others, of the firm of Mordecai & Co., of Charleston, South Carolina, praying that the name of a brig owned by them may be changed to Emma Eger; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CHASE presented the memorial of Isaac Moore and others, soldiers in the war of 1812, praying for a grant of the same amount of land as is already provided by law for the soldiers who served in the Mexican war; which, together with a letter on the subject, was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CHASE. Mr. President, I have also a memorial of John Lea, a citizen of Cincinnati, which I am requested to present to the Senate. He represents that, from the year 1832, his researches have been particularly directed to the discovery of a prophylactic against cholera, the general result of which is this: that in no case has that disease, within the range of his observations and examinations, attacked any person who used sandstone water and rain water. This is a fact of very great importance, if it can be properly authenticated. The memorialist prays for such action as Congress may see fit to take upon the subject. I ask that it may be referred to the special committee that has already been raised for the purpose of taking into consideration the causes of mortality on board of emigrant vessels.

The memorial was so referred.

Mr. HAMLIN presented a petition of citizens of Presque Isle and its vicinity, in the State of Maine, praying that a mail route may be established from the boundary line between that State and the Province of New Brunswick to Aroostook; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the memorial of Helen Mackay, widow and administratrix of Colonel Eneas Mackay, deceased, praying that the accounting officers may be directed to receive certain vouchers as evidence in the settlement of her husband's accounts; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of James McDaniel and others, praying the establishment of a tri-weekly mail from Kansas to Platte City, Missouri; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, submitted documents in the case of Z. C. Ingram, praying to be relieved from a judgment obtained against him by the United States; which were referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. BADGER presented the petition of the administrator of David Richardson, a soldier during the revolutionary war, praying to be allowed the difference between the pension he received and the amount he represents him to have been entitled to; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. PETTIT, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of J. L. Collins be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and, together with additional evidence submitted by him, referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. STUART, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Ezra Williams be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. CASS, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers in the case of John Bronson be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. FOOT, it was Ordered, That the petition of the administrator of Michael Evely be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion by Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, it was Ordered, That the petition of Orson Young be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion by Mr. SLIDELL, it was Ordered, That the petition of Richard King be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

On motion by Mr. SLIDELL, it was Ordered, That the petition of Francis Barnes be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

On motion by Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, it was Ordered, That the legal representatives of John Rice Jones have leave to withdraw their petition and papers, in order to be presented in the House of Representatives.

On motion by Mr. JONES, of Iowa, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw the petition of William Hempstead and others in behalf of David L. Davis, in order to be presented in the House of Representatives.

On motion by Mr. STUART, it was Ordered, That the petition of William Woodbridge and Henry Chipman be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

On motion by Mr. STUART, it was Ordered, That the petition of J. Logan Chipman, one of the heirs of Keauinsee Shawanah, a Chippewa chief, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. BRIGHT gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to provide a site, and for the construction of a suitable building, for the accommodation of the district and circuit courts, and a post office of the United States, at Indianapolis, in the State of Indiana.

Also, a bill to establish a court for the investigation of claims against the United States.

Mr. JAMES gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill for the relief of the officers and soldiers who served in the Rhode Island brigade in the revolutionary war.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WELLER, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to provide for the transportation of the United States mail in steamships, between San Francisco and California, via the Sandwich Islands and China, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time by unanimous consent.

Mr. WELLER. As that is a subject which may elicit a good deal of discussion, I desire that the bill be printed, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill making a grant of land to the State of California to aid in the construction of railroads from San Francisco to San José, Benicia to Marysville, Sacramento City, via Auburn to Nevada City, and Stockton to Sonora; which was read a first and second time, by unanimous consent, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, as that bill is of a form somewhat different from previous bills which we have passed, and which contain a surplusage, in my opinion, granting the right of way, a general bill having been passed granting the right of way, I move that the bill be printed for the information of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRODHEAD, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill making further provision against counterfeiting the current coin of the United States, and passing counterfeit coin; which was read a first and second time by unanimous consent.

Mr. BRODHEAD. As the bill makes provision for the punishment of offenders against the law, I move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHIELDS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill to divide the State of Illinois into two judicial districts; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives was received by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it had passed a bill to change the name of the American-built brig John Dutton, and to grant a register in her name. Also, that it had passed a joint resolution of thanks to General John E. Wool.

BOOKS FOR MEMBERS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. BADGER asked and obtained the unanimous consent of the Senate to introduce a joint resolution for supplying new members of the Senate and House of Representatives with such books of a public character as have been heretofore supplied; which was read a first and second time, by unanimous consent, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to direct that each of the new members of the two Houses of Congress be supplied with the same number and description of books of a public character as were supplied to each member of the Senate or House of Representatives during the last Congress; provided they be furnished by the publishers at prices not exceeding those at which they have been heretofore supplied for the use of the members of either House.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. GWIN. A few days ago I introduced a bill entitled "A bill concerning the district courts of the United States in California," the object of which was to authorize the President to appoint a judge for the southern district of California, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. There is not a quorum of that committee present; but the question has been examined by a member of the committee, [Mr. PETTIT] who was present when the bill was introduced, and upon whose motion it was referred to the committee; and he is perfectly satisfied that the bill ought to pass. It is one of pressing necessity to the State, and ought to be passed at once; and therefore I move that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from its consideration, in order to bring it before the Senate for its action at this time.

Mr. PETTIT. When the bill to which the Senator from California refers was introduced, I moved its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary, as it proposed to make some change in the judicial system of one of the States, believing that it was proper that that reference should be made; but it is true, as the Senator says, that there never has been a quorum of the committee present to act upon the bill; indeed, throughout a great portion of the time that the Senate has been in session, there has been no other member of the Committee but myself present. At the instance of the Senator, I have examined the bill, have conversed with both Senators from California in regard to it, and am satisfied that it ought to pass. There is nothing wrong in it. After the investigation which I have given to it, I do not see that any alteration is necessary in the bill, and I therefore join with the honorable Senator in asking that the committee be discharged from its consideration. I have myself brought the bill into the Senate, and now send it to the Secretary.

The motion to discharge the committee was agreed to; and on motion by Mr. GWIN, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole. No amendment being proposed, it was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

REPORT FROM THE LAND OFFICE.

Mr. SHIELDS. I was not present when the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office was presented to the Senate. It has been usual to ask for the printing of a certain number of copies, for the purpose of retaining them in the office for future use, and also to send them to the different bureaus; I will, therefore, ask for the printing of five hundred extra copies of that report.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I would ask my colleague whether it has not been usual to order an extra number of copies for the use of the Senate, and to take five hundred copies out of that number for the purpose to which he has referred?

Mr. SHIELDS. I would say to my colleague that these copies are asked for a special purpose—to be filed away in the office for future use.

The PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest that the motion goes to the Committee on Printing, unless the Senate dispense with the rules.

The motion was so referred.

VICTOR MORASS.

Mr. PETTIT, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was referred the petition of Victor Morass, praying the confirmation of his title to a tract of land in the Detroit land district, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill to authorize Victor Morass to relinquish certain lands, and enter the same quantity elsewhere; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading.

On motion by Mr. PETTIT, the bill was read a second time, and considered by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to authorize Victor Morass to enter without payment, at any land office in the State of Michigan, two hundred and eighty acres of land, provided that he shall file with the Secretary of the Interior good and sufficient deed or deeds of release to the United States, of the claim confirmed to him under the act approved April 17, 1828.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

HEIRS OF DR. WILLIAM SOMERVILLE.

Mr. PRATT. About ten days since the Senate agreed to take up the bill for the relief of the heirs of Dr. William Somerville. It is a bill which has heretofore passed the Senate in a full Senate, and would have been passed on the day referred to by me but for the ascertainment—which was accidental, I believe—that no quorum was present. I hope the Senate will consent to take up and pass the bill at this time.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to direct the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department to ascertain the value of the property of the late Dr. William Somerville, of Calvert county, Maryland, which was destroyed by the British troops during the invasion of that State in 1814, in consequence of its occupancy by the troops in the service of the United States, and to pay them the amount so found due.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN OHIO.

Mr. CHASE. Mr. President, some days since I introduced a bill to divide the State of Ohio into two judicial districts, and to provide for holding the district and circuit courts of the United States therein. This bill received the favorable consideration of the Committee on the Judiciary at the last session of Congress, and was then passed by the Senate; but it failed in the House of Representatives, in consequence of not being reached. I move that it be taken up and acted upon at this time.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. BADGER. I presume this is identical with the bill which was passed at the last session, and therefore it is hardly necessary to read it again. I hope the question will be taken upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. PETTIT. I think the bill ought either to be read, or to be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. It has not been referred.

Mr. BADGER. Then I have no objection to the reading of the bill.

The Secretary continued and finished the reading. The bill proposes to enact, that the counties of Belmont, Guernsey, Muskingum, Licking, Franklin, Madison, Champaign, Shelby, and Mercer, and all that part of Ohio lying south of them, shall be the southern district of Ohio, the courts for which shall be held at the city of Cincinnati; and the remaining portion of the State shall constitute another district, to be called the northern district of Ohio, the courts for which shall be held at Cleveland. The bill makes provision for the appointment of a district judge for the northern district, and of a district attorney and marshal for the southern district, and makes other provisions in reference to the proposed division.

Mr. WELLER. I wish to ask the Senator from Ohio whether the Legislature of the State of Ohio has taken any action upon this subject, and if so, what that action has been?

Mr. CHASE. I am not aware of any recent action by the Legislature, nor can I answer the question of the Senator as to whether any action has been taken.

Mr. WELLER. I asked the question because my action here upon this bill will depend upon the fact whether the Legislature of Ohio desires that this division shall take place. It seems to me that if the public interests there demanded this division, the Legislature would have taken some action in regard to it. There is a diversity of opinion, I know, amongst the citizens of that State in regard to the necessity for this division; and I should be much better satisfied if the Legislature had expressed some opinion in regard to it.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I see now clearly that the Senator from Indiana was right in requiring that this bill should be read, and that I very properly put force upon my own inclinations, and concluded to listen to certain parts of it. I am very strongly inclined to think that the last section in this bill is founded upon an erroneous principle. It provides that the judge of the district court, for each of the proposed districts in Ohio, shall reside at the place where the court is to be held; the necessary consequence of which is, that in the appointments to be made, nobody will be, practically, eligible for the station, except the particular members of the bar who happen to live at the towns or places where the court is to be held. Sir, I think this is not exactly the way to coerce the performance of duties from judges. The range of selection ought not, in my opinion, to be narrowed when the Executive comes to make the appointment, which, practically, it would be under this bill.

I would therefore suggest to the Senator from Ohio, that perhaps it would be better that we should have a report from the Committee on the Judiciary in regard to this bill; and if he will not take it to be at all unkind in reference to his measure, I will move its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. COOPER in the chair.) The question is upon the motion to refer.

Mr. CHASE. I do not understand that that motion has been made by my friend from North Carolina.

Mr. BADGER. Yes, sir, I made the motion.

Mr. CHASE. Then I trust the Senator will withdraw the motion after a statement to which, I hope, he will listen. This bill was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary heretofore, and it then contained the same provision which is now objected to. It was reported upon favorably, and received the action of the Senate at the last session, and was passed, I think, without a dissenting voice. I would not object to a reference to the committee, I should not have objected at the time the bill was introduced, if it had not been known that there was but a single member of that committee then present. There is not now a quorum of that committee present, and it is uncertain when there will be. Under those circumstances it seemed to me that the unanimous action of a former committee, and the favorable action of the Senate upon it at a former session, might well be taken in lieu of a report at this session. I hope, therefore, that my friend from North Carolina will withdraw his motion to refer, unless there be some special reason for it.

In regard to the objection which is made to the last section of the bill, I will say that it was contained in the former bill, but I am not at all strenuous about retaining it. The section will not, however, by any means have the effect which is contemplated. It requires the judge for the southern district to reside in the city of Cincinnati, where the courts of the southern district are directed to be held, and the judge of the northern district to reside at the city of Cleveland, where the courts for the northern district are directed to be held. I think that the difficulty will not be so much in confining the selection to judges from those particular places as it will be in selecting from the number of candidates who will present themselves from different sections of the State. This provision is not objected to by any gentleman from Ohio, so far as I am aware; it is not objected to by either of the Senators from Ohio; and I trust, therefore, we may be allowed to manage our local bills in our own way, having those provisions in them which are satisfactory to the gentlemen concerned in their passage.

So far as the action of the Legislature is concerned, I beg leave to say that we are not, I believe, here in the habit of waiting for the instructions of our Legislature upon every question before we act upon those matters which concern the interests of our State. It is enough for me that there is a decided majority of the delegation from Ohio, of both parties, in the other House, who desire the passage of this bill, that the bar and the suitors throughout the State desire its passage, and that it will result, in my judgment, in a very large economy to the Government. I might illustrate this, if it were required, by a reference to a recent suit, very well known throughout the country as the Martha Washington case, where witnesses, residing for the most part at Cincinnati, were all to be summoned to Columbus; and finally the case actually went against the Government, because, as is supposed, it was impossible to get all the witnesses to attend in the interior of the State. This division is demanded by the public interests; it is demanded by the wishes of the people; it is demanded by the desires of those who are concerned in the administration of justice; it is desired by a majority of the delegation from Ohio; it is concurred in by both her Senators; and I trust the bill will be allowed to pass.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I fear that the state of facts which the Senator from Ohio has brought to the attention of the Senate proves, not that we ought not now to pass this bill without its undergoing the revision of a committee, but that we acted at the last session of Congress too much under the influence of favor without a particular inquiry into the character of the measure which we were passing. Now, sir, I do not think that the provision of the bill to which I have objected is one of that local character which should be left to be settled, as an affair of their own, by the Ohio delegation; very far from it, sir. The judges of the United States in Ohio are appointed, far less for the benefit of the citizens of Ohio than for the benefit of the citizens of other States. They are judges of the nation. They hold courts to take cognizance of pleas between the citizens of other States and the citizens of Ohio. We of other States look up to them specially for the administration of justice, in cases where it was supposed by the framers of our institutions we might not have the same confident reason to expect its impartial administration from the local tribunals. To say, then, that the constitution and regulation of the courts of the United States, to be held in the individual States, is to be treated as a matter of local concern, and to be settled according to the views or wishes of the representatives of the locality, is, I think, to introduce a principle entirely at war with the very purpose for which those courts were established.

I look upon this provision as wrong in principle. It is the commencement of a system of restrictions by law upon the judges, which may be of the most mischievous character. It is a matter of no importance to suitors where the judge resides, in what part of his district he resides, provided he is always at the place where the courts are to be held to transact the public business of the country, when it is necessary for him to be there. If the duties of his office require him to be there all the time, of course he will reside there. The manifest propriety and the convenience of the thing would dictate that result to him; but if the duties of his office can be as well discharged by his living ten, fifteen, twenty, or thirty miles from the city or town in which the court is to be held, I pray you, what advantage is gained to the world, what to the nation, what to the suitors, by imposing upon him, by law, a particular locality of residence? I think it is wrong in principle. Our friends from Ohio may be willing to put such restrictions upon their local judges. That is their affair. Let them put it there if they please, but not upon judges who are appointed under the Constitution of the United States mainly to administer justice to those who are citizens of other States.

However, sir, I do not wish to go into this question now. I merely wish to say, that having discovered that the bill contains this objectionable provision, it seems to me that it is proper that it should undergo the revision of the Committee on the Judiciary. That course will take very little time. There will be a majority of the committee here to-morrow. There are three members of the committee here now, and the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] who is a member of the committee, will be here to-morrow; and I really think it will be worth while to have the delay of a day or two, in order to allow this matter to be looked into.

Mr. PRATT. Mr. President, the feature of this bill which is objected to by the Senator from North Carolina, does not apply to the appointment, but to the location of the judge after he shall have been appointed. If the bill be adopted as presented, I apprehend the President will have the whole State of Ohio from which to make the selection; but the judges, when selected, will be obliged to reside at Cincinnati or Cleveland, where the courts are to be held. Now, I apprehend, that the feature which is objected to, is one which would be beneficial. If it would be so inconvenient to reside at the seat of justice, that a gentleman living elsewhere would not accept the judgeship if coupled with that condition, it might also be so inconvenient as to prevent that gentleman attending when the services of the public would require his attention. Practically, I know, sir, that the Executive has attempted to enforce, with out law, the very provision which is incorporated into this bill; for in a recent appointment in my own State, I know that the late President of the United States made it a condition precedent on the part of the parties who were applicants for the situation, that they should agree, if appointed, to reside at the city of Baltimore, where the United States courts are held. I thought myself that that was right, because I have known that there was, with regard to my own district, almost every day, business occurring there which required the attention of the judge in Chambers; and I know that a gentleman would not be so efficient a judge for the United States, if he resided some twenty or thirty miles from the city at which the courts were held, as he would be if he resided there. I have said that the late President of the United States required that the persons who were applicants for the judgeship, in my district, should consent to reside, if appointed, at the city of Baltimore. That grew out of some necessity. It grew out of the fact that heretofore, where judges in Maryland had accepted that position, and had resided at a distance from the city of Baltimore, they were not so attentive as the people thought the public interests required. The President of the United States in that case, without authority of law, attempted to carry out the very provision which the Senator from Ohio has introduced into this bill. If that be the only objection to the bill, I can see no utility in its being referred now to the Committee on the Judiciary, which is composed of nearly the same members as it was at the last session, when the same committee reported this bill with this identical provision in it.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I was entirely aware of the particular form of the provision which is contained in this bill, and I did not suppose that the bill contained anything directory on the President in the selection of the persons to hold the office; but I inferred, that practically the provision to which I have objected would reduce the range of selection to the members of the bar of the cities of Cincinnati and Cleveland, because it is not to be conceived, I imagine, that gentlemen of the legal attainments which ought to be possessed by persons who hold these offices, would remove to those cities for the very moderate compensation which the bill proposes to give. Now, sir, in regard to the propriety of this provision, there are one or two other views of it which are entitled to consideration. Suppose the provision to be enacted, and a judge should not reside at the place required, what is your remedy? Will you sue him?

Mr. PRATT. Impeach him.

Mr. BADGER. Very well. I will say to my friend, that if the judge does not attend the court and discharge his duty, it would be proper to impeach him; but if you make a provision by law that he shall reside at a particular place, it gives you no other remedy—no other power of coercion—except, at last, impeachment. Is it not just as easy to impeach him for a neglect to discharge his duty, as for a failure to reside at the place where the courts must be held?

Mr. PRATT. Every one knows, Mr. President, the great difficulty which always occurs in cases of impeachment for breach of duty. You have to prove before the proper authorities before whom the impeachment is to be tried the breach of duty; but where you have a specific regulation that the officer is to reside at a particular place, and he does not reside there, the impeachment necessarily prevails. If the man does not live there, he disqualifies himself, and therefore his impeachment would certainly be more effectual in such a case than in the mere case of breach of duty.

Mr. BADGER. I think, Mr. President, that my friend would find considerable difficulty in making out that proposition; for, in the first place, a man is not impeachable for any and every cause—he is not impeachable for the violation of any and every law. Under the Constitution he is impeachable only for treason, and high crimes and misdemeanors—official high crimes and misdemeanors. I will say to my friend that if, under such provision of law, a judge should be impeached, and the allegation should be, that he did not reside in the city of Cincinnati, where the law required him to reside, and it appeared that, notwithstanding he had discharged all the duties of his office faithfully, it would require a good deal more authority than I have ever heard on such a subject, or that occurs to me now, to establish that his failure to reside there was a high crime and misdemeanor for which he would be removable under the Constitution. I do not hold that Congress, by passing a law, can make anything a high crime or an impeachable misdemeanor—not a whit more in this particular case, if the duties of the office are discharged, than if an act of Congress regulated the judges' robes, and that act was departed from in some slight and unimportant particular.

But, sir, if we are going to have the system to which I object introduced, let it be by a general law applicable to all the judges. I object either to applying it capriciously to one district or part of the Union, or to allowing our friends in any particular locality to pass such provisions as they think proper with regard to the district judges of the United States.

A word now in regard to what the Senator from Maryland stated was done by the late President of the United States. That was a very different affair from this. The President had no idea that he was imposing a law of conduct upon the gentleman whom he was to appoint, but he said, "I think it important in the condition of the business of the United States, in such a court as that for the district of Maryland, that the judge should reside in Baltimore, and therefore, I wish you to understand, that if you are appointed, it is with the understanding between you and me, as a matter of honorable pledge between gentlemen, that you will make your residence in the city of Baltimore." That is the whole of it. The late President of the United States never had any idea that he was imposing any legal authority; not at all. But, sir, I should be very glad to have the bill undergo the revision of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion to refer was agreed to.

JOSHUA KENNEDY.

Mr. FITZPATRICK, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Joshua Kennedy, deceased; which was read and ordered to a second reading.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. It is unnecessary to trouble the standing committee with the consideration of this bill. It has been reported upon favorably three times, at least, in this body, and has been passed here three times. It is the identical bill which has already passed this body. It has also been passed in the House of Representatives on several occasions, but failed here. I ask the indulgence of the Senate to have the report read, and the bill considered at the present time.

No objection being made, the bill was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the Secretary of the Treasury pay to the legal representatives of Joshua Kennedy, deceased, the sum of $6,500, in full compensation for the destruction of property by the Creek Indians in 1813.

The report of the committee of the last session was read, in which they state that, having examined the case with great care, they fully concur in the report of the committee of the House of Representatives on the same subject. They state that they entered on the examination of the case with some distrust of its justice, occasioned by the fact that it had remained unsettled so long, although a committee had been appointed for the express purpose of examining this and similar claims. They, however, ascertained that the delay had not been caused by any laches on the part of the petitioner. Inasmuch as the destruction of the property for which indemnity was asked, took place while the troops of the United States occupied it, and there could be no doubt that such occupation was the cause of its destruction, the committee thought that the case came within the spirit, if not the letter, of the law of 1816, and other subsequent acts; and they therefore recommended the passage of the accompanying bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. SHIELDS. I desire to ask the honorable Senator from Alabama whether the bill has been submitted to the consideration of a committee of this body, and reported upon?

Mr. FITZPATRICK. The report which has been read was made to this body at the last session.

I will inform the honorable gentleman from Illinois that it has passed this body three times, and has been reported upon favorably, either in this House or the other, eight times. It has undergone every species of examination which was possible, and has passed both Houses, but not at the same session, in consequence of want of time to consider it in one body or the other. It has been thoroughly and rigidly scrutinized.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

MAJOR CALEB SWAN.

Mr. CHASE. I desire to ask the Senate to take up for consideration a motion submitted by the honorable Senator from Mississippi [Mr. ADAMS] to reconsider the vote on the passage of the bill for the relief of the heirs of Major Caleb Swan, deceased. I move that the Senate proceed to consider it.

The motion was agreed to, and the motion to reconsider was also agreed to.

Mr. CHASE. I now move to amend the bill by striking out the words "one half of," so that the allowance shall be a commission of one per cent.

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill, as amended, passed.

RELIEF OF JOSEPH GONDER AND ANOTHER.

On motion by Mr. BRODHEAD, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill from the Committee on Naval Affairs, for the relief of Joseph Gonder, jr., and John Duff. It authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to discontinue the suit brought against Joseph Gonder, jr., and John Duff, in the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, for the alleged violation of a contract to furnish stone for the dry-dock at the Brooklyn navy-yard.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. President, before we pass that bill, I should like to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to give some explanation of it. It may be that it is a proper bill; but at all events, before we decide upon it, I should like to know what are the reasons for its passage. I am not willing to let it pass without being satisfied of the grounds upon which we are asked to pass it.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I shall take great pleasure in giving my friend from California a brief statement of the facts relating to the case; and I am quite certain that, when he hears the statement, he will agree to the passage of the bill.

The memorial of the parties whom it is proposed to relieve, was presented to the Senate at the last session of Congress; it received the unanimous approval of the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which it was referred, and a bill for their relief passed the Senate without objection. It is to relieve them from a suit brought against them in the United States court for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, upon the recommendation of the Navy Department. There was an alleged violation of a contract which was entered into by these gentlemen for supplying stone at New York. The Department thought it was necessary to bring the suit, but determined, at the same time, to recommend Congress to grant relief. The head of the Bureau of Docks and Yards says:

"The case is one which will enlist the sympathy, and perhaps the favorable consideration, of Congress."

The engineer of the work also says:

"In arranging the plans of the work, I deemed it necessary to make radical changes in the arrangement and size of the stone."

And hence it was impossible for the gentlemen, under the circumstances, to comply with the provisions of the contract. I could read the letters from the Navy Department, and also from the engineer, but it may not be necessary. I hope, therefore, under the circumstances, there will be no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. PETTIT. Before the Senator from Pennsylvania takes his seat, I desire to ask him why the Secretary of the Navy is directed to dismiss this suit? Why can he not act himself? Why should not the President direct it to be discontinued?

Mr. BRODHEAD. The subject pertains to that Department, and the suit was brought under instructions from it. It became necessary, under the rules of the Department, that the suit should be instituted; but the Secretary of the Navy recommends that it be not prosecuted.

Mr. PETTIT. The Secretary of the Navy so recommends?

Mr. BROADHEAD. The head of the Bureau of Docks and Yards does, and the recommendation is sent here by the Secretary of the Navy.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

THE ARKANSAS RIVER.

Mr. JOHNSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to communicate to the Senate all the information on file in his department respecting the execution of so much of the law approved the 30th day of August, 1852, for the improvement of rivers and harbors, as makes an appropriation for the Arkansas river; how far the sum appropriated for that purpose has been expended; for what purposes, and for what kind and amount of service; also, how much has been expended in the construction of snag-boats for said river.

CAPITOL EXTENSION.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, submitted the following resolution for consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings be instructed to inquire whether any change in the plan of the Capitol extension has been made since the adjournment of the last Congress, and if so, by what authority such alteration has been made, and whether such change, if any, involves an additional expenditure of the public money.

SMALL NOTES IN THE DISTRICT.

On the motion of Mr. ADAMS, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill to suppress the circulation of small notes as a currency in the District of Columbia.

The amendment reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia was agreed to by the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, when the bill was under its consideration on Wednesday, the 21st ultimo.

Mr. ADAMS. At the instance of the Mayor of Georgetown, I have consented to propose an amendment to the bill. I learn from him that the authorities of Georgetown have no opposition to make to the bill; but, owing to the amount of small notes which they have in circulation, they ask until the first day of July next to take up that circulation. I have thought it not an unreasonable request, and have agreed to offer an amendment to that effect.

Mr. SHIELDS. How long a time does the Mayor of Georgetown ask?

Mr. ADAMS. Until the first day of July next. That will afford them ample time to take up the circulation. The bill seems to meet the approbation of the authorities of the District, so far as I have had an opportunity to learn from my intercourse with them; and as they only desire that its operation should be postponed until the time mentioned, I move to amend the bill by striking out of the ninth section the words "the passage thereof," and insert the words "provided that this act shall take effect, and be in force, from and after the first day of July next."

Mr. BADGER. I will suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that by the adoption of that amendment we may find ourselves in a difficulty. It is altogether probable that the bill will not be acted upon by the House of Representatives until July is past; and, if so, by the adoption of the amendment, instead of making the bill take effect from and after the first of July of this year, it will have the effect to postpone it a year longer; because the act will speak, at the time of its passage, of "first day of July next" after its passage. I would suggest, therefore, to the Senator that he modify his amendment so as to make it take effect from and after the first day of July, 1854.

Mr. ADAMS. I have no objection to that. I would suggest, however, to the Senator from North Carolina, that I have no doubt the bill will pass the House of Representatives earlier than he anticipates; and by putting that time in it, public attention in the District will be directed to it. It is the time which the authorities ask. I have no doubt, from the fact that a similar bill passed the other House at the last session, by a large majority, and from the general desire of the country that the bill shall pass, that it will be favorably acted upon finally before the time specified arrives. If, however, it should not, it will be an easy matter for the House to amend the bill in accordance with the circumstances of the case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. COOPER in the chair.) Does the Senator from North Carolina move to amend the amendment?

Mr. BADGER. No, sir; I cheerfully yield to the suggestion of the honorable Senator, and am very glad to hear his remark, because I know he would not speak so, unless he had reason to think that the House would act upon the bill in a few days.

Mr. DAWSON. I think the time from which the bill is to take effect should be extended still further than is proposed by the Senator from Mississippi. I understand that the corporation of Georgetown have about $60,000 of notes in circulation, and the means will have to be raised to take up their circulation. I think they will be unable to do it by the time proposed. It is proper that they should have time to withdraw their notes from circulation, and therefore I suggest to my honorable friend to modify his amendment, so as to make it read the first of November next. Let the authorities have time to prepare to redeem their bills. No injury can result from it.

Mr. ADAMS. As I have already stated, I have adopted the time that the Mayor himself suggested—he, as I understood, representing the views, fully expressed, of his board. I have adopted his own time; and I think it is sufficient to enable them to conform to the object of the bill.

Mr. DAWSON. It will require an effort on the part of the corporation to take up the circulation of their notes, and sufficient time should be given to them to adopt the necessary measures to do so. I therefore move to amend the amendment by striking out July and inserting November. No harm can result to any one from doing that.

Mr. ADAMS. Under other circumstances, I would accept that proposition; but the Mayor of Georgetown called upon me in person, and asked only for the time which I propose. I understood from him that it would be sufficient. If he had asked a longer time, I would have yielded it.

Mr. PETTIT. I desire to say that the Mayor of Georgetown called upon me, and had with me a conversation precisely similar to that detailed by the honorable Senator from Mississippi. He did not deem it prudent to ask any longer time than the Senator proposes to give. He said that until the first day of July next would afford ample opportunity to take up their circulation.

Mr. DAWSON. I have no doubt that the statements made by the honorable Senator are correct; but no harm can be done by extending the time.

Mr. BRIGHT. I desire to make a statement to the honorable Senator from Mississippi, which I have erroneously omitted to make before. I certainly intended to suggest to the honorable Senator that the Mayor called here for the purpose of seeing him, but as the honorable gentleman was not in his place, the Mayor desired me to say to him that it is his wish that the time should be extended twelve months. He believes that a less time than that would really embarrass the operations of the corporation. He said, what I repeat here, that he could see no good reason why the time should not be given. I hope, therefore, the honorable Senator will not press his amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to, and the amendment as amended was agreed to. The bill was then reported to the Senate as amended; and the amendment was concurred in; and the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read a third time and passed.

BANKING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. FISH, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to authorize the business of banking in the District of Columbia, and to regulate the issuing and circulation of notes as money; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

CLAIMS AGAINST HAYTI.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COOPER in the chair) laid before the Senate a communication from the President of the United States, in answer to a resolution of the Senate of January 18, 1853, with regard to the claims of American citizens against Hayti, and the correspondence of the special agent sent to Hayti and San Domingo in 1849, transmitting a report of the Secretary of State, and various documents connected therewith; which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

CLAYTON-BULWER TREATY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, in answer to a resolution of the Senate of December 12, 1853, calling for any correspondence which had taken place between the Government of the United States and that of Great Britain on any subject growing out of the treaty of Washington of July 4, 1850.

Mr. CASS. Those documents are long; and I suppose it will not be necessary to read them. I move that they lie upon the table and be printed.

Mr. CLAYTON. I hold in my hand a paper which I should like to have printed in connection with those documents. As I understand, sir, those documents contain the construction which the British Government place upon the treaty of Washington of July 4, 1850, and the construction of their law officer. I hold in my hand the opinion of the Attorney General of the United States, at the time the treaty was negotiated, giving his construction to the treaty. I would simply ask that it be printed in connection with the documents which have been transmitted to us.

Mr. CASS. There are some very extraordinary disclosures in those documents, which are calculated to excite a good deal of attention in the country. There are set up in them claims, on the part of England, which go entirely, in my opinion, to nullify the treaty; and among them is the opinion of the Queen's Advocate, supporting those pretensions. The honorable Senator from Delaware has done me the honor to show me the paper to which he alludes, and a most powerful document it is. Mr. Johnson, who wrote it, was, at the time of the negotiation of the treaty, the Attorney General of the United States. It is exceedingly proper, I think, that it should be printed with the others, and go out to the country at the same time with them. There is a portion of it connected with the declaration, which was annexed to the treaty, with which I do not agree, as I have already stated; but with respect to the main part of the paper, contesting the claims of England in relation to that treaty, the effect of which would be to nullify the treaty, I consider it a very powerful and able document—one which would give great satisfaction to the American people. I trust, therefore, the Senate will suffer it to be printed with the other documents.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLAYTON. The next disposition which will be made of the documents, will be, I suppose, to refer them to the Committee on Foreign Relations. As they are very important, I trust that the Senate will unanimously consent to have them read before that action is taken. I ask that they may be read, so that the Senate may understand them.

No objection was made; and the documents were accordingly read.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. President, I have a few remarks to make in regard to the papers which have been communicated to us by the President, before their reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations. Among the documents which have been communicated by the President are two letters, to which I take special exception. One is a letter from the Earl of Clarendon to Mr. Cramp-ton, dated the 27th of May, 1853; the other is from the Queen's advocate to the British Minister for Foreign Affairs, Lord Clarendon, dated the 15th of April previous. They show that the remarks which I made in my place here, as a Senator, on the 8th of March last, were formally transmitted by the British Minister to the British Cabinet, there taken into consideration, and referred to Doctors Commons; that an opinion was obtained from the Queen's Advocate, reviewing my remarks, and that the review was then sent back to this Government. For what purpose, sir? The call made by the resolution of the Senate, presented by the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. Cass,] was dated the 12th of December. That was the day on which that resolution passed. Three days afterwards, on the 15th of December last, the British Minister took off, if I may use the phrase, the injunction of secrecy from these dispatches, and communicated them officially to the American Secretary of State, so that those papers reviewing my speech in the Senate of the United States, might be transmitted to this body under the call of the 12th of December. Remember, sir, that the first communication of Mr. Crampton, transmitting these two letters, was a confidential one. The veil of secrecy was over the papers. They could not have been sent to the Senate under the call of the 12th of December, if the British Minister had not moved again, seemingly for the very purpose of placing the papers within the reach of the call, so that I might be met here upon the floor by Lord Clarendon and Mr. Hardinge, the Queen's advocate.

Sir, I should have no objections whatever, if the Earl of Clarendon were upon this floor, and entitled to the privileges of a Senator of the United States, to meet him in fair, manly argument upon this whole question; I should not flinch from the controversy if the Queen's advocate were by his side aiding in the discussion; but I do object, as a Senator of the United States, to this mode of reviewing in a British cabinet, speeches made by me in Congress, because this mode of managing the controversy allows me no fair play. If his lordship were here discussing the question with me, I could, as I should to one of my brother Senators in debate, put questions to him that might elicit confessions, both of fact and of law, all-important for the decision of the controversy between us. But now, I can make no rejoinder whatever to his replication.

The two papers to which I have referred contain nothing but a dogmatical assertion that the treaty of the 4th of July, 1850, means this and that. There is no argument in the papers. If those whose names are subscribed to them were here, and should make these declarations in my hearing, upon their responsibility as Senators of the United States, I could call for the argument to sustain the assertions. But, sir, as it is, I say, with all due deference to others, that my rights as a member of Congress have been invaded by this whole proceeding; and I rise for the purpose of protesting against it. I do not now intend to go into any discussion as to the proper construction of that treaty. On some future occasion I shall do so; and I shall then meet what is contained in these papers, and whatever can be said from any quarter on that question, and I shall be happy to do so; but for the present, as I have said, my chief object is to protest against this proceeding as inconsistent with my rights as a Senator.

The British Government has the undoubted right to read and review anything that we say here; but was it ever before known, in the history of this country, that a speech made by a member of Congress, was thus reviewed by order of one of the British Cabinet, and the review sent back to the body of which he was a member? I do not remember, and I do not believe there has ever been, in the history of the country, a parallel instance to this. In 1848 a discussion did arise between Mr. Buchanan, as Secretary of State, and Mr. De la Rosa, the Mexican Minister, residing near this Government, on this subject. At that time President Polk had sent to the House of Representatives a message vindicating his course in regard to what is called "the Mexican protocol." I mean the protocol of conferences made at Queretaro, between Messrs. Sevier and Clifford on the one side, and Mr. De la Rosa on the other, professing to make explanations of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo. In one of Mr. De la Rosa's notes he undertook to review the debates in Congress upon that message of the President, and also the message itself. Mr. Buchanan replied to him. As I think that the remarks then made by the Secretary of State are appropriate now, I ask the Secretary to read a passage which I have marked from Mr. Buchanan's answer.

The Secretary read as follows:

"I have been this minute in detailing the substance of your note for the purpose of showing that it clearly raises the question, whether a foreign Minister, accredited to the United States, has the right to ask explanations from the President concerning the debates and proceedings of Congress, or any message which he may transmit to either House, in the exercise of his constitutional power and duty.

"Under the Constitution of the United States, Congress is a distinct, independent, and coordinate branch of the Federal Government. Their legislative powers and duties are of the most important and responsible character. The President himself possesses no power whatever to question or to control their proceedings, except in the single case of the qualified veto, conferred upon him by the Constitution. To secure their absolute freedom of discussion, a vital principle in every popular Government, the Constitution itself declares, in regard to Senators and Representatives, that 'for any speech or debate, in either House, they shall not be questioned in any other place.' The President would violate the most sacred rights of the legislative branch of the Government if he were to criticize or condemn any portion of their proceedings, even to his own countrymen: much less, therefore, can he be called upon by the representative of a foreign Government for any explanation, condemnation, defense, or approval of these proceedings. For them, Congress is responsible to their own constituents and their country, and to no other human power. This inviolability is essential to the permanence of our free institutions.

"It is believed that, so far as regards the debates or proceedings of Congress, this is the first occasion in our history on which it has become necessary to address the representative of any foreign Government. Not so in relation to the messages of the President to Congress. There is, at least, one case of a similar character, which you may find in the archives of your own legation. Mr. Castillo, one of your predecessors, in a note of the 11th December, 1835, addressed to Mr. Forsyth, then Secretary of State, called upon him for an explanation of the meaning of a paragraph relating to Mexico, contained in President Jackson's annual message to Congress, of December, 1835. The answer of Mr. Forsyth was prompt and decided. In a note, dated on the 16th December, 1835, he informed Mr. Castillo 'that remarks made by the President in a message to Congress are not deemed a proper subject upon which to enter into explanation with the representative of a foreign Government.' On a somewhat similar occasion, Mr. Livingston, then our Minister to France, on the 13th January, 1833, informed the French Minister of Foreign Affairs that, in the message of President Jackson to Congress, of the previous December, 'there was nothing addressed to the French nation'; and he likened it, very properly, 'to a proceeding well known in the French law, (a family council) in which their concerns and interests are discussed, but of which, in our case, the debates were necessarily public.'"

"Under our Constitution, it is the duty of the President, from time to time to give to the Congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall deem necessary and expedient." It is indispensable to the independent action of the Government that these communications between its coordinate branches should be free and unreserved. These are properly likened, by Mr. Livingston, to a family council. It is a domestic concern, with which foreign nations have no right to interfere. If this were otherwise, if the representative of a foreign Government could ask the President for explanations of such parts of his messages to Congress, or of their proceedings, as might, in the opinion of such Minister, prove unsatisfactory to his Government at home, this would necessarily either impose a restraint on the freedom of action both of the President and Congress, or involve the Executive in endless and useless discussions with the other Powers of the world."

MR. CLAYTON. Mr. President, my object in making this protest against what I deem to be a violation of my rights as a Senator on this floor, is not with a view to evade the discussion that is tendered by the British Minister. I repeat, sir, that, at a suitable time, when the honorable Senator who made this call shall have been heard, I shall avail myself of an opportunity of meeting the whole question; and I shall endeavor to show that the dogmatical assertions contained in these diplomatic dispatches, are not worthy of the high sources from which they have emanated.

I do not desire to be understood, by anything which I have said or may say, as imputing intentional wrong to Lord Clarendon, or to the distinguished and amiable gentleman who represents the British Government here. My associations with the latter gentleman have been such as have taught me to respect and admire him; but I cannot avoid lamenting on this occasion that he should have fallen into such an error; and I am rather inclined to think, casting the mantle of charity over this act, that it has been done by the order of his Government without reflection. I hope, sir, that as this has been the first instance in the history of this Government in which such a thing was ever attempted, it may be the last in which any foreign Minister may venture to intrude himself upon our family councils.

Now, sir, a few words in regard to what is contained in the note of the 27th of May last. It never was contended by me that the British protectorate, eo nomine, was abolished by the treaty of 1850. What I contended for, and what I think I can show beyond doubt to be true, is, that the treaty disarmed the protectorate.

It is stated, in the letter of the 27th of May, that Her Britannic Majesty's Government did not, by the treaty, intend to renounce the protectorate. I have not claimed that they did. In another note, one dated, I think, on the 29th of April, not a month before the date of the note to which I last adverted, this remarkable expression is contained: Great Britain, in case our Government does not make a treaty supplementary or additional to the treaty of 1850, "will retain her position with regard to the Mosquito territory, which the convention of 1850, if practically carried out, was calculated and intended to modify; and which, as its provisions have not been carried out, has not altered." That, if I understand the English language, is a distinct concession in that dispatch, that the treaty was both calculated and intended to modify and alter the position which Great Britain held in reference to the Mosquito country, but for the reason given. Well, what is the reason assigned for her refusal to permit it to be modified and altered agreeably to the intention of the treaty? Because, says the British Minister, the provisions of the treaty have not been practically carried out. What is the meaning of that? Is it pretended that this Government has refused to carry out the provisions of the treaty? No, sir; it is not pretended anywhere, in that or any other correspondence which we have seen, that this Government has not acted in perfect good faith with Great Britain, with reference to this as well as every other treaty.

It has been suggested to me that perhaps the British Government mean by this to contend that because the canal, which was contemplated by the treaty, has not been made, therefore the provisions of the treaty have not been carried out. If that pretext is set up for the sake of getting rid of the stipulations contained in the convention, then, I ask, is there anything in the treaty that binds us to make the canal? No, sir. This Government did not guaranty that the company engaged in the construction of the canal, or which it was said was about to be engaged in its construction, should complete it or even begin it. If, then, the canal has not been made by the company, with what sort of propriety can Great Britain contend that she is exonerated from the stipulations of the treaty, alleging that its provisions have not been practically carried out? If any other construction can be put upon these words, in this dispatch, by the ingenuity of any man, I should be very happy to hear him.

I repeat, that I consider that very statement as a distinct admission by the British Government that the convention of 1850 was both calculated and intended to modify and alter the position of the British Government in regard to the Mosquito country.

It appears that the letters of the Earl of Clarendon, addressed to Mr. Crampton nominally, but really to the American Secretary of State, have this great object in view: to induce this Government to make another treaty in addition to the treaty of 1850, which the British Government would like better. They are not well pleased with the treaty of 1850; but the American Secretary of State, very properly, I think, passes over all the implanations of the British Government to make another treaty, and goes on quietly, in his note to Mr. Ingersoll, to discuss the rights of the American Transit Company at Punta Arinas. In the final letter, in reply to the Secretary's note to Mr. Ingersoll, the Earl of Clarendon states that he considers the tone of Mr. Marcy's note as hostile, or, at all events, such as was not to have been hoped for under the circumstances. What was it that was regarded as hostile in the note of the Secretary? There was nothing in the expressions which were hostile; but I suppose that the thing which was felt most deeply was the silence of Mr. Marcy in answer to all those entreaties or implanations to which I have referred. That silence, I presume, they interpreted rightly to mean that when the Secretary saw that a treaty had been made in plain language, binding the British Government not to occupy Central America, which they were not disposed to observe, he thought it would be very idle to attempt to make another.

It is said by the Earl of Clarendon that Great Britain intends, "religiously" to observe the stipulations of the treaty. Yes, sir, "religiously"—that is the word. By the second article of the treaty of Versailles, of the 3d of September, 1783, it was provided that the two parties to it should "exactly and religiously" observe all the provisions of all former treaties, and among the rest, of the treaty of Paris of 1763, the object of the seventeenth article of which last treaty was to prevent the British from occupying this very country about which we are now debating. They obligated themselves "religiously and exactly"—such are the words—to observe that treaty. It is interesting to look back at the history of the negotiations attending the treaty of 1783, and the conduct of Great Britain afterwards, to see how "religiously and exactly" those stipulations were observed.

Lord John Russell has, within the last year, published the correspondence of Charles James Fox, who was the British Premier at the time of the negotiation of the treaty of Versailles by the Duke of Manchester. By looking into the second volume of that correspondence, the minutes of the Cabinet to which the treaty of 1783 was referred, will be found. It will there be seen that the British Cabinet were recommended that the sixth Spanish article, as it was called—that is, the sixth article of that treaty—should be deferred for six months, and that the rest of the treaty should be signed by the negotiators. That article was the one which bound Great Britain not to occupy or hold any part of the Spanish continent embracing, as was understood, what we now call Central America and the Mosquito coast. Mr. Fox, as will be found by looking at the volume to which I have referred, immediately wrote to the King, (on the 18th July, 1783,) stating—

"There has been a great deal of discussion upon this matter; but it appearing to be still in our power to put our own interpretation upon the words 'Continent Espagnol,' and to determine upon prudential considerations whether the Mosquito shore comes under that description or not, it was the opinion of your Majesty's confidential servants present (except Lord Stormont) that the desirableness of getting the treaty signed ought to prevail."

Remark, sir, they were to determine the meaning of the treaty by prudential considerations only. Lord Russell says Fox was a statesman who never would condescend to an intrigue, and never would betray a principle.

It was soon found by the Spaniards that the considerations which were to govern in the construction of that treaty, were not the religious views of the case, but the "prudential considerations." If, from prudential considerations hereafter, says Mr. Fox, in effect, we should see fit to construe the words "Spanish continent" to mean something entirely different from what the Spaniards understood them to mean in the making of the treaty, we shall be at liberty to do so. This was the mental reservation made by one of the most fair and ingenious of British statesmen, at the time of negotiating a great treaty. The king wrote back, saying, in effect, that "it was a very untoward circumstance that a definitive treaty could not be made without leaving clear ground for fresh disputes."

In a few days, Mr. Fox wrote a letter to the Duke of Manchester, speaking of the sixth Spanish article; and then we learn how the intention of "religiously" observing the article was to be kept, when we find Mr. Fox speaking of it to the Duke as "the cursed clause in the sixth Spanish article." A short time after that, the British Ministry determined that the words "Spanish continent," did not mean what everybody else understood the Spanish continent was; but that the Spaniards had no possessions, and no right over that coast called the Mosquito coast; and so they resolved that the treaty was, in this respect, of no effect, and refused to evacuate the country.

The Spaniards were not very well satisfied with that. They complained of a breach of faith; and in three years afterwards they brought the British Government to another treaty—the treaty of London of July 14, 1786, which had no other object but to exclude them from this very country where they now claim full and absolute right, and over which, Mr. Harding says, they have dominion. The treaty of 1786, was drawn out at length in such strong language, that it was at last agreed that the English were bound to leave the country. The words "Spanish continent," were no longer left to be quibbled upon. They were compelled to leave that very Mosquito protectorate which Lord Clarendon says that Great Britain has continued for two hundred years.

After this, a motion was made in the House of Lords to censure the Ministry for the negotiation of the treaty of 1786, which compelled the British to abandon that country; and you will find, sir, by looking into the Parliamentary Register, that the great lion of the Administration of that day, Lord Chancellor Thurlow, participated in the discussion. In reply to all the attacks made by the other side upon the Ministry, he demonstrated beyond doubt, that Great Britain had no claim in that country; and so far from the opposition obtaining a vote of censure against the Ministry for abandoning the country, the vote in the House of Lords stood fifty-three to seventeen against the resolution of censure.

Shortly afterwards, Mr. Pitt succeeding Mr. Fox in the administration of the Government, introduced a bill into the House of Commons to indemnify the British subjects, who, allured into that country by the false claims of Great Britain, had settled there, and were compelled to evacuate by the treaty of 1786; and a sum, amounting to £12,500 sterling, was voted to them as an indemnity.

The British aggression in that country, peculiarly interesting to us as a nation, occurred six days after we made the treaty with Guadalupe Hidalgo, by which we acquired the country on the Pacific. Then this claim, through the Mosquito King, was renewed. The British ships-of-war, Alarm and Vixen, entered the river San Juan, drove the Nicaraguans from the town of San Juan de Nicaragua, called it Greytown, fought the Nicaraguans at Port Serrapape, drove them still further into the country; and finally Captain Locke, who was the commander of the expedition, made an arrangement with them, by which they were not to attempt again to disturb the title of the Mosquito King, under the penalty of war with Great Britain.

This brings us down to the time when the negotiations for the treaty of 1850 commenced. The object of those negotiations will be apparent from the brief history which I have given of the affair. I forbear to go into a discussion of the question of the proper construction of that treaty, which would not be very intelligible without the documents yet to be printed, reserving what I intend to say upon that subject for a future occasion.

Mr. PRATT. There is a single point to which I wish to ask the attention of the Senate. I have not had an opportunity of examining the papers, which my honorable friend himself appears to have had, but I have certainly very much misunderstood their purport from the reading of them by the Secretary, if the honorable Senator from Delaware is right in the protest which he has made against the action of the British Minister here, and the British Government in regard to himself. What is that action? He made a speech in the Senate, in which I, for one, entirely concurred. The British Minister, supposing that to be the best exposition of the views of the American Government on the subject, sent that speech to his Government, as exhibiting the views of the American Government. The Senator certainly cannot complain of that. The British Minister for Foreign Affairs sent the speech to the Queen's advocate for the purpose of having his opinion upon the construction of one of the articles of the treaty embraced in that speech of the honorable Senator, and that opinion was given to the British Minister for Foreign Affairs. It was afterward sent to the representative of the British Government here, and he showed it to the Secretary of State in a confidential communication. It remained as a confidential communication until after the Senate had requested the President to furnish the information embraced in the paper which has been read. How was the injunction of secrecy, originally placed upon that communication by the British Minister here, withdrawn? Was it by him? No, sir. By the reading of the paper, it appears that it was withdrawn at the request of the Secretary of State. The Secretary of State requested that the veil of secrecy might be withdrawn to enable him to send it here; therefore, the protest which the honorable Senator from Delaware designs to put here before the country against the action of the British Minister appropriately belongs, if the communication has been improperly brought here, to our own Secretary of State, who requested the withdrawal of the veil of secrecy which the British Minister had thrown around it, in order that he might send it here.

It is certainly very complimentary to the Senator from Delaware, that the British Government should have thought it necessary to have his speech sent to the Queen's advocate, for the purpose of getting the opinion of that officer in reference to the article of the treaty which was commented upon. There was nothing wrong in that, I suppose. He cannot object to that opinion being sent to the representative of the British Government here. The whole proceeding is very complimentary to the Senator. What, then, is the objection which is urged here as a protest against the action of the British Minister? It is that he has, at the instance of our own Secretary of State, consented to withdraw the obligation of secrecy which he had imposed, when he originally showed the communication to our Secretary, to enable him, in obedience to a request of the Senate, to send the paper to us. I rose simply for the purpose of doing what I thought was an act of justice to the representative of the British Government.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. President, the honorable Senator from Maryland, I think, overlooks entirely one point to which I would direct his attention. Does he think that it is competent for a foreign minister to address a note to our Government in reference to remarks made, or debates in Congress?

Mr. PRATT. Of course not.

Mr. CLAYTON. The honorable Senator concurs with me, then. Well, sir, the British Minister has done that very thing. He has done that for which Mr. Buchanan censured Mr. De la Rosa. He has taken the speech of a Senator on this floor, and made it the subject of comment in a note to the President of the United States; and there—I beg the attention of the honorable Senator to the fact—was the error, and against that I protest. Still more erroneous was it to throw this paper in the way of the resolution of the Senator from Michigan, so that it must necessarily be dragged before the Senate. The gentleman says he only consented to that. How that is I do not know. At any rate the paper could not have been sent here without his consent. The resolution did not cover it while it was an unofficial paper; but the moment it became, by the British Minister's consent, an official paper, the Secretary of State was bound to send it here. Whether there was any request made by the Secretary of State to the British Minister I know not.

Sir, it is not that I have felt personally aggrieved that I have made the remarks which I have made to-day; but I have thought it my duty to vindicate the rights of an American Senator in my own person. I should have made the same protest in the case of any other Senator; and I repeat, that I trust this will be the last time that any foreign minister will attempt to interfere in our family councils.

Mr. PRATT. I beg pardon for having trespassed upon the attention of the Senate with regard to this matter. The only difference between the Senator from Delaware and myself is with regard to the facts of the case. Is it an interference? If I understand the matter correctly, some time in May last this official communication was made by the British Minister to the Secretary of State of the United States. I am correct, I believe, in that. As far back, at least, as May, this communication was made. It was then confidential; it remained confidential.

Now, if there was an error, if there was an impropriety, if there was an impertinence on the part of the representative of the British Government, in making such an official communication to the representative of the American Government, it was for our Secretary of State to have frowned it down, and to have said that it was not legitimate for it to have been made. But the communication was made confidentially. That confidence was not withdrawn until the Senate had requested all the information upon this subject in the possession of the Department; and then it was withdrawn at the instance of the Secretary of State, and by his request. I do not apprehend, sir, that the representative of a foreign Government here, when he has acted at the request of the representative of our own Government, the Secretary of State, having the management of our foreign relations, can be accused of an impertinent interference with our family quarrels. In this case the British Minister has acted solely, as I have stated, at the request of our own Secretary, who has charge of our foreign relations.

Mr. CLAYTON. I do not know that it appears on the face of the paper that the British Minister acted solely at the request of the American Secretary of State. If the honorable gentleman so understood it, I did not hear it.

Mr. PRATT. I so understood the communication as it was read.

Mr. CLAYTON. I do not profess to have examined the paper with the view of ascertaining that fact. I do not suppose that the American Secretary of State ever attempted to interfere with the rights of this or the other branch of Congress.

Mr. PRATT. Nor I.

Mr. CLAYTON. And I shall be slow to believe that he has been actuated by any such purpose. But no matter who may be censurable for such an act, beyond all question, in my judgment, it was wrong; and if it is not rebuked it may introduce a precedent in consequence of which hereafter all the debates in this body may be reviewed abroad, and under the embarrassing circumstance to the members of not being allowed an opportunity to reply.

Mr. CASS. I imagine it will be found that these papers were the subject of conversation between the Secretary of State and the British Minister; and, after talking the subject over, and hearing the communication read, I imagine the Secretary of State asked for a copy of it. I suppose this to be the fact. Then it was communicated confidentially, and so it remained until that injunction of confidence was removed.

I wish to say, Mr. President, that if the papers come in from the printer to-morrow, as I hope they may, or as soon as they come in, I shall move to refer them to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and on that motion I shall ask the Senate to hear me on the subject on some convenient day, which I trust will be some time during the next week, if that will suit the honorable Senator from Delaware. I shall wait until the papers come in, and then I shall submit a motion to refer, in hopes that the Senate will hear me.

Mr. CLAYTON. Any time after the papers shall have been printed will be convenient to me.

Mr. CASS. Very well; I shall wait till the papers shall have been printed; and then I shall ask the Senate to hear me on some convenient day.

REFERENCE OF HOUSE BILLS.

The bill from the House of Representatives to change the name of the American-built brig "John Dutton," and to grant a register in her name, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The House joint resolution "of thanks to General John E. Wool," was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. BRODHEAD, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and, after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 3, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m.

Prayer by Rev. Mr. SLICER.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate by the hands of Mr. MACHEN, the Assistant Secretary, announcing that that body had passed certain bills, and desiring the concurrence of the House therein.

BILLS REPORTED.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Commerce, reported "A bill for the relief of Ferdinand Clark;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, was ordered to be printed.

Also, "A bill for the relief of Adolphus Mier & Co., of St. Louis;" which was read twice, and referred to a Committee of the Whole House.

BILL PASSED.

Mr. AIKEN, from the Committee on Commerce, reported "A bill to change the name of the American-built brig John Dutton, and to grant a register in her name; which was read twice by its title, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and, being engrossed, was subsequently read a third time, and passed.

SWAMP AND OVERFLOWED LANDS.

Mr. HENN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred House bill No. 9, "for the relief of the purchasers and locators of swamp and overflowed lands," reported back the same with an amendment, and with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill and amendment were referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

ROBERT GRIGNON.

Mr. EASTMAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and ordered to be printed:

"A bill for the relief of Robert Grignon."

On motion by Mr. BISSELL, the Committee on Military Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the petition of John R. Bond, praying compensation for his services as acting purser; and the same was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, of the petition of Mrs. Hope S. Newbold; and the same was referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

THANKS TO GENERAL WOOL.

Mr. BISSELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported joint resolutions of thanks to General John E. Wool; which were read a first and second time by their title.

Mr. BISSELL. I believe I never asked a favor of this House but once in my life, and I recollect very distinctly that it was not then granted. I now ask that these joint resolutions may be put upon their passage.

Mr. GIDDINGS. With the permission of the gentleman opposite, I would inquire what reason there is for passing these resolutions—what claim they have upon the House?

If I understand it, it is not in conformity with our practice. I think it is the first time within my recollection, when it has been proposed to tender the thanks of Congress, or to present a sword, to any officer, save the general commanding in any battle. I do not know that I am right in this. I believe I am, however. It is introducing a new principle, and a new practice. We have heretofore presented the thanks of Congress to the commander of the battle of Buena Vista, and to the officers and soldiers under his command. I may be mistaken in this, and if so, I hope the honorable chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs will correct me. But if I am not, we are now called upon to tender our thanks to General Wool a second time. Now, how far are we to carry the thing? Shall we again thank each officer or man who performed his duty gallantly at the battle of Buena Vista? Those men are as much entitled to it as General Wool is. If we do not adopt a similar resolution in relation to each of them, we shall do them injustice. I will not appeal to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BISSELL] himself, but I would ask others if that gentleman did not do his country as good service as General Wool did at Buena Vista? And shall we now omit that gentleman, and his gallant companions in arms, and tender our thanks to General Wool only, and present him alone with a sword, in token of the gratitude of the American nation, omitting all reference to the gentleman now on this floor, who served and participated in the dangers and honors of that day? It strikes me that would be wrong.

Now, I do not wish to interfere in this business; but I am of the impression that it is doing injustice to those of minor grade. Our practice has been to tender to the commander and his officers and soldiers our gratitude, and there, according to my recollection, it has ended. Another practice is to be introduced, and if it is to be carried out, we must go down to subalterns, and to every man who gallantly defended his country on that field, and fought as became an American soldier. And if we go down to the subaltern, is the soldier who fought there with equal courage and equal patriotism to be denied and passed over? Now, I believe it to be doing injustice to the other officers and soldiers to select one of the minor officers—any officer less than the commandant—and tender to him the formal gratitude of the nation. Sir, it is an affront offered to all minor officers and soldiers who participated on that occasion. Such is my impression. I am not aware of the particular circumstances which demand the passage of these resolutions at this time, and in order that the gentleman may place on the record the reasons which should urge us to their adoption, I will, if it meet with his approbation, as well as that of the House, move to refer them back to the Committee on Military Affairs. Let that committee report back to us the circumstances which require this proposed expression of gratitude at our hands. At present there is nothing of the kind on record. These resolutions come on the mere introduction of that committee. There are no facts stated which should justify us in turning aside from the transaction of our ordinary business to pass these resolutions. There is no committee responsible for them. There has been no written report; and, for the purpose of getting all the facts before the House, I would, in all kindness, move to recommend the resolutions, and let them go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; but I prefer that they should go to the gentleman himself, who is a friend of the measure, that he may report the reasons why we should turn aside to pass them.

Mr. BISSELL. I shall do little more in reply to the gentleman from Ohio, than to answer the questions which he propounded to me at the outset of his remarks, and I do strongly suspect, that in that answer, will be found the cause of the gentleman's hostility to this measure. He asks what is the occasion for the passage of these resolutions? The answer is, that it is for gallant services rendered to the country in its wars.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. BISSELL. Certainly, sir, for inquiry.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I would most respectfully inquire of the gentleman whether General Wool served more gallantly than the gentleman himself on that day at Buena Vista?

Mr. BISSELL. Neither myself nor any other friend of General Wool desire to avoid discussion as to his merits on this occasion; the only objection being that it would be an unnecessary consumption of the time of the House. No man, in my opinion, ever performed his duty more strictly and amply than General Wool did on the occasion alluded to; but I am not going into a debate on that point. I will simply remark, in addition to what I have already said, and then call for the previous question, that for services rendered in Mexico, General Taylor twice received the thanks of Congress and two gold medals. Generals Worth, Quitman, Twiggs, Butler, Henderson, and other generals, whom I do not now remember, as well as the eldest son of General Hamar, received swords for the same services. General Wool, as I apprehend, through pure omission, and not from design, has never been referred to in connection with the gallant services rendered in Mexico. I feel it in some measure a charge against me that it has been so; and I feel that I am now discharging an act of tardy justice, and for two reasons; in the first place, because I had the honor to serve under General Wool, and had personal knowledge of his merits; and, in the next place, because, since I have had the honor of serving in Congress, I have been on the Military Committee. Both reasons make it peculiarly appropriate that these resolutions should come from me. I have neglected the matter too long. May I not now ask the House whether the brilliant services of General Wool do not justify, and should secure, the immediate passage of those resolutions?

Mr. GIDDINGS. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me—

Mr. BISSELL. I understood the gentleman [Mr. GIDDINGS] to say, or to intimate, that these resolutions had not been before a committee.

Mr. GIDDINGS. No; will the gentleman permit me to correct his error?

Mr. BISSELL. Now, I would do almost anything in the matter with a great deal of pleasure, if I did not know the gentleman's [Mr. GIDDINGS] pertinacity, and that he is disposed to be troublesome to the House on occasions of this sort. He therefore must excuse me, if I decline to grant him any more patience on this occasion. I now, Mr. Speaker, move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded.

Mr. SKELTON. I ask for the reading of the resolutions.

The Clerk read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, unanimously, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the thanks of Congress are due, and are hereby tendered to Brevet Major General John E. Wool, for his distinguished services in the late war with Mexico, and especially for the skill, enterprise and courage which distinguished his conduct at the battle of Buena Vista.

Resolved, That the President be requested to cause a sword, with suitable devices, to be presented to General Wool, as a testimonial of the high sense entertained by Congress of his gallant and judicious conduct on that memorable occasion.

Resolved, That the President be requested to cause a copy of the foregoing resolutions to be transmitted to General Wool.

The main question on the adoption of the joint resolutions was then ordered.

The resolutions were then read a third time and passed.

Mr. BISSELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolutions had just been adopted, and to lay the motion to reconsider on the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

SWAMP AND WASTE LANDS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I ask to reconsider the vote by which a bill has just been referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of putting it upon its passage. It is the bill which has just been reported from the Committee on Public Lands, entitled, "An act granting relief to the purchasers and locators of swamp and waste lands."

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. The following is the amendment reported by the committee to the bill:

"Provided, That the proceeds of the land located under this act, shall be exclusively applied, as far as necessary, to the drainage of the swamp and overflowed lands in said State."

Mr. WASHBURN. I desire, Mr. Speaker, merely to state the reasons why I wish to have reconsidered the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The bill has been read from the Clerk's table, and gentlemen will see from that reading what it is. Under the act of September 28, 1850, granting to the State of Arkansas, and certain other States, the swamp lands lying within their limits, great confusion has arisen in regard to the location of those lands. Before the selections of these lands were made by the State, parties had gone on, and in good faith made their entries of them; and they are now claimed by the State, after they have been purchased in good faith by individuals.

This bill proposes a remedy for this state of things. It proposes that upon a relinquishment of these lands by the States in which they lie, that the entries by individuals shall hold good, while the States shall be permitted to select an equal quantity of land elsewhere in lieu thereof. It will be perceived that this bill takes nothing from the Treasury; and if this be not done under the law, and under the rule of the Land Office, purchasers of these lands will be permitted to apply for the repayment of the purchase money. That, sir, will not remedy the evil, although it will take from the Treasury an amount of money equal to that for which the lands would sell for at the minimum price. In many, and, in fact, in most of these cases, the settler has gone upon these lands, purchased them in good faith, and paid his money for them, and has placed improvements upon them which, in many cases, are of greater value than the original purchase money.

It is proposed, now, that where parties have gone on in good faith, and purchased and now hold these lands, that the State may relinquish its right to them, and select an equal quantity of land elsewhere.

Let me state a reason why there should be early action upon this matter. A great many patents have been suspended by the Land Office, amounting to between fifty and a hundred thousand, and a very large number have been made out by the office; and that bureau wants to have this matter settled in some way, so that it can go on in its ordinary routine of business. Again, there should be early action in regard to this matter, because titles are becoming more and more involved. The purchasers from Government are selling, and yet the States are coming in, under the construction given to this law, and claiming these lands as absolute grants to them from the time of the passage of the act.

I hope, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that the House will reconsider the vote by which this bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that it will be put upon its passage. I certainly see no objection to this course, nor to the bill itself, because, as I have stated before, it takes no money from the Government; and unless you give these lands, as the bill provides, these innocent purchasers will be permitted to come in, and, under the law, be entitled to receive from the Treasury the money they have paid for the land purchased by them. The question is, will you pay back this money to the purchaser of the land from your Treasury, or will you permit an equal quantity of land which is in market, and which you want to sell, to be taken in lieu of the money?

Mr. HILLYER. This bill requires more consideration than we are now prepared to give to it; I therefore move—

Mr. DISNEY, (interrupting.) If the gentleman will allow me one moment?

Mr. HILLYER. I yield for the moment.

Mr. DISNEY. I apprehend that no gentleman who possesses himself of the facts connected with this bill, will entertain any doubt as to the propriety of passing it. It will be well to state the facts: By the construction given at the Land Office to the act which has been alluded to by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WASHBURN,] it has been held that the title to all the swamp lands vested in the respective States, at and from the time of the passage of the act.

Mr. HILLYER, (resuming.) I cannot yield the floor to the gentleman for the purpose of making a speech. I understood the gentleman desired merely to make a remark. I move to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was put, and there were upon a division—ayes 78, noes not counted.

So the motion was agreed to.

GEORGE G. BISHOP, ETC.

Mr. HILL, in behalf of the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, introduced a bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, made the order of the day for to-morrow, and, with the report, ordered to be printed:

"A bill for the relief of George G. Bishop and the legal representatives of John Arnold, deceased."

The list of committees having been called through,

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky: I ask if the Committee on Printing has been called?

The SPEAKER. That committee being privileged to report at any time, is not regularly called at all. The gentleman has the right to make a report from that committee, if he desires.

REPORT OF THE COAST SURVEY.

Mr. STANTON, from the Committee on Printing, then presented the following resolution; which was read and adopted:

Resolved, That ten thousand copies of the Report of the Secretary of the Treasury, communicating the report of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey, for the year 1853, in addition to the usual number, be printed; six thousand copies thereof for the use of the House, and the remainder for distribution by the Coast Survey; that the same be printed and bound in quarto form, and that the plates be printed under the superintendence of the Coast Survey.

OUTRAGES UPON AMERICAN CITIZENS.

The following resolution, offered by Mr. INGERSOLL on the 14th December, having laid over one day under the rule, was taken up and adopted:

"Resolved, That the President of the United States is required to furnish Congress, if, in his opinion, the public interests will allow, with copies of all the correspondence that has passed between this Government and Spain relating to the seizure and imprisonment of Captain Thaddeus Beecher and the officers and crew of the schooner North Carolina, of and from New Haven, Connecticut, by the Spanish authorities at Porto Rico, in the month of March, 1850."

NAVAL STEAMERS.

The resolutions offered on Saturday last by Mr. MACDONALD, calling on the Secretary of the Navy for information concerning Navy steamers, was taken up, read, and adopted.

DISPOSAL OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

The SPEAKER. When the House was last in session, and pending the call of the States for resolutions, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNETT] introduced a bill "granting lands equally to the several States to aid in the construction of railroads, and for the support of schools." The bill was regularly introduced, and a motion having been made to refer it to the Committee on Public Lands, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] moved that it do lie upon the table, and upon that motion the yeas and nays were ordered; whereupon the House adjourned.

The question now is upon the motion to lay that bill upon the table.

Mr. BENNETT. I desire to raise a point of order upon that motion, to lay the bill upon the table. I insist that it was not in order, and could not take precedence of the motion to commit. The bill was introduced merely for the purpose of reference. It was not up for action, or discussion; but a motion was made to commit it to the Committee on Public Lands. When the State of New York was called for resolutions, that bill was regularly introduced under the 114th rule, and it falls under the same rule as resolutions are governed by. Now, under that rule, no resolution can be debated on the day on which it is presented. It is not open to debate, or discussion; and the same rule applies, of course, to bills introduced under the call for resolutions. The 46th rule, which gives a motion to lay on the table priority over other motions, only applies to cases in which the question "is under debate"—is up for discussion and action. In any other case, I insist that the motion first made must be first put.

I submit, then, first, that when a bill is introduced, and a motion is made to refer it to a committee, there can be no motion to lay it upon the table. It is not before the House. The bill is imperfect. It is not complete, according to Jefferson's Manual.

I submit, secondly, that even if such a motion could be made, it does not take priority of other motions, and, therefore, that the question on the motion to refer must be first put.

And, lastly, I insist that the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] was made too late. The Chair will recollect that I introduced this bill without objection; and that it was read a first and second time without objection. I then moved its reference to the Committee on Public Lands, and the Chair declared that it would be so ordered. And then, after that had taken place, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] rose and moved that the bill lie upon the table; and I insist that, under those circumstances, that unusual motion—to say the least of it—could not be made.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I submitted the motion that the bill do lie upon the table; and if I understand the rule under which the States are called for resolutions, it does not authorize a member to introduce a bill at that time.

It has been the practice to give leave at such time to introduce bills of which previous notice had been given; but suppose you place it on the ground that the gentleman had a right to introduce the bill when the State of New York was called for resolutions; that he did introduce it, and that there was no objection; and that it was read the first time; then the course would have been to submit a motion to reject it. That motion was not made. The bill was read a second time, and then it was open for commitment or amendment. If there were no amendment, or the motion of reference were voted down, then the question would be on the engrossment of the bill. Certainly, sir, after all these proceedings in the House, it is clearly within the rules to lay upon the table, to postpone to a day certain, to postpone indefinitely, or to submit any motion which could be made upon it, as if it had been referred to the committee and reported back here, and then gone through the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and come back here again. It was clearly in order to move to lay on the table at any time before the vote on reference was taken. The call for the yeas and nays was also certainly in accordance with the construction of the rule.

The SPEAKER. Under the 114th rule, the bill was regularly before the body, and the motion to lay on the table was clearly submitted in order. That motion was a highly privileged one; and the Chair has no doubt that the motion was properly made, or that it was in order for the House to refer or to postpone to a day certain, or to lay on the table. The motion to lay upon the table may be for to-day, or for all time to come, depending upon the action of the House thereafter.

Mr. BENNETT. Do I understand the Chair to say that the motion in chief was made in time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair so holds, no objection having been made at the time to the entertaining of the motion. It has been the habit of the Chair, in order to facilitate business, to ask members what action they propose in reference to bills which have been introduced, and on their reply, to state that it is so ordered, unless objected to—sometimes omitting the words "unless objected to."

Mr. BENNETT. My objection is, that this motion does not take priority. The 46th rule gives it priority when it arises on a question under debate. If I had moved to put the bill on its passage, such would have been the case. The 24th rule says that petitions shall not be debated on the day that they are presented; but the 25th rule goes on to say, that "resolutions shall then be called for in the same order, and disposed of by the same rules which apply to petitions;" and they consequently cannot be debated.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order raised by the gentleman from New York. The question now is upon the motion to lay on the table; and on that question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. ENGLISH. This bill has only been read by its title. I cannot vote for it without knowing its contents, and therefore demand that it be read through.

The Clerk then read the bill through.

Mr. McMULLIN. I should like very much to get the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] to withdraw his motion, so as to enable me to propound an interrogatory to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BENNETT.]

Mr. JONES withdrew the motion to lay on the table.

Mr. McMULLIN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to know from the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNETT] if he will accept of an amendment of such a character as that which I now send to the Clerk's desk to be read?

The Clerk read the following as the amendment proposed:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands inquire into the expediency of setting apart the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, and appropriating the same to the repairs and building up of the Navy; the surplus, if any, to be applied to the annual support of the Navy; and that said committee have leave to report by bill, or otherwise.

Mr. McMULLIN. Mr. Speaker, this land question has given rise to a great deal of discussion in the country. No subject has attracted more attention in my section than the bill which the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNETT] presented at the last Congress. Now, sir, I should like very much if the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] would not renew his motion to lay the bill upon the table, but let it be referred to a committee. That is usual, according to the courtesy of this House; and I think, sir, that when a committee shall have acted on the subject, we shall be able, at least, to defeat the object which the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNETT] has in view. This subject does demand the careful consideration of Congress; and I hope that the gentleman from Tennessee will allow it to be referred. I ask, therefore, that the subject of that resolution, which has just been read from the Clerk's desk, be referred to a committee, with a view to have it incorporated as part of the gentleman's [Mr. BENNETT's] bill, or as a substitute for such bill. I move, if it be in order, that the bill be referred to the appropriate committee, with instructions that my resolution shall be incorporated in, or taken as a substitute for the bill.

The SPEAKER. A motion is now pending that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. McMULLIN. Then I move to instruct that committee to inquire into the expediency of incorporating my proposition into the bill, or of making it a substitute for the same.

Mr. BENNETT. I can say that I have no objection to any instructions which may be given to the Committee on Public Lands, which the House will vote for. I thank the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. McMULLIN,] who, if he is opposed to the features of this bill, has at least the magnanimity to allow it to take the usual course, and go to a committee, and to let it come up for our consideration upon their report. In fact, this motion to lay the bill upon the table, before it has been referred to the consideration of a committee, is so unusual, that I have never before heard it made.

I wish to say to the gentleman that this bill is not precisely the bill of the last session although it does embrace and assert the principle that all the States have an interest in the public lands. That is what I contend for here, and shall continue to contend for. It is true that there are applications upon applications to the Committee on Public Lands for grants of lands. There are between forty and fifty applications from the western States, not for national roads, but for State and neighborhood roads. Lands have been granted year after year for these purposes, and I do not raise the question of the right to make such grants; and I do not oppose a reasonable grant of land for roads in the western States. What I contend for is, that if these grants are made for roads in the western States, it is reasonable and right and fair that some equivalent should be made to the old States, either in land warrants granted to them, or in some other way, by which they should receive their proportion of the benefits of these lands, in which all the States have an interest.

I shall take the opportunity to prove before this House, notwithstanding the report of the Secretary of the Interior—and I think the fact is capable of demonstration—that the public lands have cost the Government very much more than they have received for them; that the lands are greatly in debt to the Government; that they have been paid for by the old States as well as the new; and that it is not right or proper to give these lands to the western States, without some consideration to the old States. I think it can be demonstrated by the public records, that the public lands are largely in debt to the Government.

While I have the floor, I wish to state what the features of this bill are: This bill proposes, first, to grant to each of the western States, an equal proportion of land, to aid in the construction of railroads in their respective States; to give to each State a sufficient quantity to enable it to construct a road across the State each way, by a grant of six sections to each mile of road constructed.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Will the gentleman allow me to propound a question to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. McMULLIN:]

Mr. BENNETT. I have no objection.

Mr. CLINGMAN. On reading the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia, which he sent to the Clerk's table, and which has been read, it will be seen that it proposes an appropriation of the proceeds of the public lands to the support of the Navy. Now I suggest to that gentleman that the difficulty of his proposition is this, that it is evasive in its present shape. If we continue to make grants of land to railroad companies or to anybody else, we shall derive no revenue from the public lands, and hence no proceeds to apply to that purpose. I hope the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. McMULLIN] will modify his proposition so as to provide that all the lands shall be appropriated to that purpose, and thereby put it out of the power of Congress to vote them to railroad companies, States, or to anybody else. If he does that, I will vote for his proposition.

Mr. McMULLIN. I will say to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. BENNETT,] that I thought I had framed my proposition so as to provide that the surplus, if any, should take that destination; and I will most cheerfully modify my proposition so as to meet the views of the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] for we must meet this question in some shape or other. I do think that we had better refer this subject to a committee, giving them full and ample power to act upon this whole subject, without allowing the gentleman from New York, or gentlemen from other States, an opportunity to come forward and produce an exciting discussion, for the purpose of making capital at home. Let us meet this question like men and statesmen. I hope the gentleman from New York, if he desires, as he professes, that the old States should participate in a distribution of the public lands, will come forward and adopt my proposition as a substitute for his; and then every State in the Confederacy of States, will participate equitably, justly, and fairly in the sale and entire distribution of the public lands. I will, with great pleasure, adopt the suggestion of the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] but before I take my seat I desire to make a suggestion to the gentleman from New York, and appeal to his sense of justice. As the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] withdrew his motion to lay the bill upon the table, I hope that the gentleman from New York will close the debate upon this question by allowing the subject to be referred, and not occupy the time of the House unnecessarily with this matter.

Mr. BENNETT. What I have said already about the bill was entirely incidental, and I do not now desire to detain the House long. As a motion was made to lay the bill upon the table—thus not treating with ordinary courtesy a bill whose principles were sanctioned by the last Congress—I thought I ought to explain enough of it to show what the character of the bill was. While we see every session, more or less of the public lands granted to the West, and railroad grants made constantly to the new States, we find gentlemen from some of the old States—of this we have had an illustration this morning—who think it unconstitutional to distribute among the old States an acre of the public lands. You can build school-houses, academies, colleges, for the purposes of education at the West; and you can build court-houses and make roads for the improvement of the western States; but it is unconstitutional, in the opinion of these gentlemen, to appropriate a single acre of land, for the same purpose precisely, to any of the older States. They will allow lands to be granted to Missouri and Arkansas, but they have constitutional doubts about making such grants to Tennessee and old Virginia for the benefit of their schools and roads. I suppose that the States are all bound together in one common union; and if we have a constitutional right to make a grant of lands of this description to these States, we also have the same right to make the grants of a similar character to any other State, and that they cannot be confined to one State more than to another.

These grants of land have been made for almost every purpose under heaven. It may be asserted in round terms, without taking the trouble to go into detail upon this subject, that we have given away, since the land system was first established, more lands than have been sold. To whom have they been granted? They have been given exclusively to the western States; they have had the exclusive benefit of these grants, so far as grants have been made to any of the States. I desire to introduce a different principle; that is, that these lands shall be held as common property. In part these lands were granted to the General Government by the old States. In part, they have been purchased and acquired; and, in all these purchases, the old States have paid their portion of the purchase; when, therefore, they are granted for public purposes in one portion of the country, the same right should be extended to other portions of the Union. I am not wedded to this or that particular scheme. As far as the land is sold and the purchase money goes into the general Treasury, it is all right, as it is expended for the common good of all. So far as grants of lands are made, they should be made with reference to the benefit of all the States. I do not design to discuss this bill, but I ask simply that the same courtesy shall be extended to this bill that is extended to other bills, and that it shall be referred to the appropriate committee, who have already before them a great number of bills in regard to the public lands.

I hope some measure will be adopted by which these gifts will be made equal to all the States. I do not pretend that my bill will give as much to the old States as it does to the new ones; but it gives something to them, and it asserts the principle that all the States have an interest in the public lands. I do not wish to detain the House upon this subject, and I therefore call the previous question.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I do not propose to debate this question. It is the old land distribution scheme, which everybody understands. I move to lay the bill on the table, and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. MILLSON. Before voting upon the motion to lay upon the table, I desire to ask a question of the Chair. I want to know if the resolution of instructions offered by my colleague [Mr. McMULLIN] is not now pending?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. McMULLIN] proposed to amend the motion to refer by adding certain instructions to that committee. The motion to lay upon the table, however, carries with it the bill with the motion to refer and the amendment.

The question was taken, and the result was—yeas 61, nays 91; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Benton, Bissell, Boyce, Brooks, Chrisman, Cook, Craige, Cutting, John G. Davis, Eastman, Eddy, English, Faulkner, Flor-

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33d CONGRESS, 1st Session.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 5, 1854.

NEW SERIES....No. 8.

ence, Fuller, Greenwood, Hamilton, Andrew J. Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Houston, Johnson, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Knox, Lamb, Lindsley, McNair, McQueen, Mace, Maxwell, Smith Miller, Nichols, Noble, Norton, Orr, John Perkins, Phelps, Robbins, Ruffin, Shannon, Gerrit Smith, Hestor L. Stevens, Andrew Stuart, Vansant, Warren, Elihu B. Washburne, Wells, John Wentworth, Daniel B. Wright, and Yates—61.

YAYS—Messrs. Appleton, Ball, Belcher, Bennett, Benson, Boccock, Bridges, Campbell, Carpenter, Caskie, Chandler, Chase, Chastain, Churchwell, Clingman, Cobb, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Cullom, Dick, Disney, Dowdell, Dunbar, Edmunds, Edmundson, Ellison, Etheridge, Ewing, Farley, Fenton, Giddings, Grey, Grow, Aaron Harlan, Hastings, Haven, Hiestor, Hill, Hillyer, Hughes, Hunt, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, Kidwell, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, Lindsey, McCulloch, Macdonald, McDougall, McMullan, John G. Miller, Millson, Morrison, Murray, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peckham, Bishop Perkins, Phillips, Powell, Pratt, Puryear, Ready, Reese, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Rogers, Rowe, Reese, Sabin, Snapp, Seymour, Simmons, Skelton, William H. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Vail, Walbridge, Walsh, Israel Washburn, Tappan Wentworth, and Zollicoffer—91.

So the House rejected the motion to lay upon the table.

The question then recurred upon seconding the demand for the previous question; which having been taken, was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I desire to know if the proposition now before the House is upon the motion to refer?

The SPEAKER. It is upon the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. McMULLIN] to amend the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Public Lands. The amendment proposes to refer with instructions.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Then the effect of it is to commit with instructions. I hope it will be permitted to go to the committee without instructions.

Mr. CULLOM. Is not the question divisible, so that it may first be taken upon the motion to refer, and afterwards upon the instructions proposed by the gentleman from Virginia?

The SPEAKER. The question upon the instructions comes up first in order. It will then recur upon the motion to refer.

Mr. McNAIR. I call for the reading of the amendment.

It was again read by the Clerk.

The question was taken, and the amendment disagreed to.

The bill was then referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

PRESENTATION OF A PETITION.

Mr. SIMMONS, asked unanimous consent of the House to present the petition of Joseph Burden; and have it referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can present his petition at the Clerk's desk, and have it referred; but it cannot be done in open House.

Mr. SIMMONS. Will it be entered upon the Journal?

The SPEAKER. It will not be entered upon the Journal, but will be appropriately referred.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to give notice that on to-morrow, or some subsequent day, I will introduce a bill of the following title:

"A bill granting the right of way through the United States military lands at Plattsburg, in the State of New York, for a railroad from that place to Whitehall, or Fort Edward, and for a grant of public lands to aid in its construction."

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object.

Mr. SIMMONS. I have another petition, which I desire to present.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object to the presentation of petitions in this way. It is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair begs leave to state again to the gentleman from New York that petitions can be referred by application at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. SIMMONS. So I understand, but—

The SPEAKER. It cannot be done by motion in open House.

Mr. SIMMONS. I was going to give notice of my intention to introduce another bill.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I object to that also. It can be done at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. SIMMONS. Can I give notice of a bill in the same way?

The SPEAKER. You can.

REMOVAL OF JUDGE BRONSON.

Mr. CUTTING. I offer the following resolution:

Whereas, publications have appeared in the public prints purporting to be copies of a correspondence between the Secretary of the Treasury and Greene C. Bronson, the late Collector of the Customs for the Port of New York, relating to "the subject of the unfortunate division in the Democratic party in New York;" the distribution of offices "among the different sections of the party;" and in which, after referring "to that portion of the party to which Mr. Bronson adhered," the Secretary of the Treasury expressed an expectation that the Collector would "recognize the other portion of the party in the only way that would carry conviction with it;" which publications consist of alleged letters from the Secretary of the Treasury to the Collector aforesaid, bearing date respectively the 3d, 4th, and 22d days of October last, and of letters from the latter to the former, bearing date the 17th and 31st days of October last: And whereas, in the newspaper called "The Daily Union," of Wednesday, the 28th December last, it is stated, apparently "by authority," that the removal of Mr. Bronson was the act of the President, who "freely shoulders the entire responsibility," and justifies his act not merely upon the ground of alleged official insubordination, but upon the further distinct ground that the late Collector had "prostituted his office for political ends, and otherwise abused his official trust for party purposes;" therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate to this House a copy of the correspondence above referred to, (if any such there be,) and of any other letters that may have passed between himself and Greene C. Bronson, the late collector of the customs for the port of New York, relating to the subject-matter aforesaid.

As that resolution, sir, simply calls for copies of alleged correspondence, if any such exists, the moment has not arrived when these matters are susceptible of debate. I therefore do not propose to discuss it, but simply to ask for its adoption, in order that we may have, in an authentic shape, the charges contained in the correspondence of the Secretary, and the grounds upon which heremoved the collector, and that we may be able to ascertain whether one of those grounds was or was not that he had prostituted his office for political and party purposes. I content myself now simply with moving the adoption of that resolution; and I call for the previous question.

Mr. McMULLIN. I would inquire, Mr. Speaker, whether the resolution does not lie over one day under the rules of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about announcing that fact to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CUTTING. If the resolution be matter of debate, I understand that it goes over; but can it be a question of debate?

The SPEAKER. If objection be made at all, it must go over.

Mr. CUTTING. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to allow me to put the resolution on its passage.

The SPEAKER. So that there may be no misunderstanding, the Chair will refer to the rule bearing on the point that has been raised. The 61st rule reads as follows:

"61. A proposition requesting information from the President of the United States, or directing it to be furnished by the head of either of the Executive Departments, or by the Postmaster General—or to print an extra number of any document, or other matter, excepting messages of the President to both Houses at the commencement of each session of Congress, and the reports and documents connected with, or referred to in it, shall lie on the table one day, for consideration, unless otherwise ordered by the unanimous consent of the House; and all such propositions shall be taken up for consideration in the order they were presented, immediately after reports are called for from select committees; and, when adopted, the Clerk shall cause the same to be delivered."

Mr. CUTTING. As this matter is merely preliminary to an investigation of the question, whether or not the late collector of New York, Mr. Bronson, has been guilty of the high misdemeanor imputed to him, I trust no gentleman will desire that correspondence should be kept back. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to allow me to put the resolution on its passage.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana. I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The resolution must go over, if objection be made. The proposition to act on it, either by laying on the table or otherwise, is not in order at this time, the resolution not being up for the action of the body.

Mr. CUTTING. I have heard of no objection to the passage of the resolution.

Mr. BRIDGES. I object.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I trust the objection will be withdrawn. If this matter is to be considered and acted on, it may as well be done now as at any other time.

The objection was not withdrawn, and the resolution accordingly lies over.

DUNKIRK, A COLLECTION DISTRICT AND PORT OF ENTRY.

Mr. FENTON, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

"A bill creating a collection district in New York, to be called the district of Dunkirk, and constituting Dunkirk a port of entry."

ACCOUNTS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND NEW YORK.

Mr. FENTON, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title:

"A bill authorizing the payment of balances of the property accounts between the United States, and the State of New York, for military stores in the war of 1812."

Mr. FENTON said: I desire to put the bill on its passage, but before doing so, I shall submit a few words in explanation of its provisions. It is as it purports to be—

The SPEAKER. As the gentleman proposes to put the bill on its passage, it will be read in extenso.

The Clerk then read the bill through.

Mr. LETCHER. The bill must go to the Committee of the Whole, as an appropriation is provided for in it; but I intended to propose that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and let them report on it.

The SPEAKER. The bill containing an appropriation must, under the rules of the House, go to the Committee of the Whole, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. FENTON. Then I consent to its being referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

It was so referred.

Mr. FENTON. I submit, also, documents in explanation of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman propose that these communications accompany the bill?

Mr. FENTON. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. They will go to the committee with the bill.

SCHOOLCRAFT'S INDIAN HISTORY.

Mr. HUGHES offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be, and they are hereby, requested to inquire into the propriety of causing to be printed parts two and three of Schoolcraft's Indian history, for distribution to the new members of this House—one to each.

Mr. HUGHES. I introduce this resolution for the reason that, on inquiry, I find—

The SPEAKER. The resolution must go to the Committee on Printing, under the express rule of the House. It will be so referred.

COMPENSATION TO CERTAIN OFFICERS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. SKELTON offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That Thomas J. Galt, superintendent of the folding-room, S. H. Lamborn, superintendent of the document-room, Joseph L. Wright, in charge of the Register, and Christopher Cole, messenger to the Sergeant-at-Arms, be allowed the same annual compensation as received by the two messengers in the Clerk's office in charge of the books and stationery, commencing with the present Congress.

Mr. SKELTON. I move that the resolution be put upon its passage, and on that I call for the previous question.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Will the gentleman allow the resolution to be referred?

Mr. ORR. As the previous question has been moved without explanation, I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The question was taken, and the resolution was laid upon the table.

Mr. CLINGMAN moved to reconsider the vote last taken, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

THE SMITHSONIAN FUND.

Mr. CHANDLER offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That a select committee, consisting of nine members, be appointed, and instructed to inquire into the expediency of withdrawing from the Treasury of the United States the Smithsonian fund, and investing the same in sound stocks, or in such other way as may be to the interests of said fund.

Mr. CHANDLER. This money is lying in the Treasury of the United States, and the Government has to pay for the use of it, when it is buying up its own stock at a large premium. It is, therefore, desirable to place the fund in some other situation.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I desire to make one inquiry of the gentleman, and it is, whether there is any certainty that a method can be devised by which he can so invest this money in stocks, or in any other way, that, provided it should be lost, the Government will not have to refund it? We made one investment of a portion of this fund, and had to pay the amount of the investment.

Mr. CHANDLER. Invest it in eastern stocks, and not in western.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, called for the reading of the resolution, and no objection being made, it was accordingly again read.

The question was then taken on the adoption of the resolution; and there were, on a division—ayes 84; noes not counted.

So the resolution was adopted.

DISTRIBUTION OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. CHANDLER also offered a joint resolution, instructing the Committee on the Congressional Library to inquire into the propriety of providing for the distribution of certain public documents now in the State Department.

The resolution was read for information.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the House will allow me, I will say that there is a great call for certain documents, for completing sets of books, where partial distributions have been made. I learn from the State Department that these documents are there in great abundance, but that the Department wants authority to distribute them. This resolution does not confer the authority to distribute, but only authorizes an inquiry into the expediency of making such distribution.

The question was taken upon the adoption of the resolution, and it was decided in the affirmative.

NATIONAL FOUNDRY.

Mr. BRIDGES. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing a national foundry and armory in Allentown, in the county of Lehigh, State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I object.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House, the resolution of course lies over.

ASSAY OFFICE.

Mr. FLORENCE. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means be requested to inquire into the expediency of suspending the appropriations for so much of the building of the assay office for the city of New York as provides for a refining establishment in connection with the said assay office, and to report by bill, or otherwise, at as early a day as possible consistent with the public interest, and the importance of the question involved in this inquiry.

I offer this resolution from a conviction of duty. The action of Congress at the last session—

The SPEAKER. A resolution must go over where it gives rise to debate.

Mr. FLORENCE. I desire to have the resolution referred. I prefer that it should go to the Committee on Ways and Means, rather than prevent the consideration of a question so important as this, and I make that motion. I will not debate it. I move the previous question upon my motion.

The SPEAKER. It is too late.

Mr. FLORENCE. I did not, really, intend to debate the resolution. Do I understand, if I debate the resolution, it goes over?

Mr. LETCHER. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia rises to a point of order, and the Chair decides, under an express rule of the House, that the resolution giving rise to debate must lie over.

On motion by Mr. VANSANT, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers of Stephen G. Logan, praying for a pension on account of disability consequent upon his services in the Army of the United States, in order that the same may be filed in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions.

BOUNTY LANDS.

Mr. MILLSON. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Private Land Claims be instructed to inquire into the expediency of further extending the time for satisfying claims for bounty lands for military services in the war of 1812 with Great Britain; and that they report by bill or otherwise.

The question was then taken upon the resolution, and it was agreed to.

Mr. McMULLIN. I ask leave to withdraw from the files of the House the petition and papers of George W. Hopkins, for the purpose of referring them to a committee.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, as the gentleman will recollect, that may be done by application at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. McMULLIN. I was aware that the papers must be obtained by application there, but I thought it was necessary to obtain leave of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can accomplish his object without asking leave.

CUSTOM-HOUSE AT WHEELING.

Mr. KIDWELL presented the following resolution; which was read and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill for the construction of a custom-house in Wheeling, Virginia.

LANDS FOR NAVAL PURPOSES.

Mr. McMULLIN. I now beg leave to present, in the form of a resolution, the matter embraced in the amendment which I offered to the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNETT] a short time ago. I offer the following:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the expediency of setting apart the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, and of appropriating the same for the repairs and building of vessels for the Navy; the surplus, if any, to be applied to the support of the Navy; and that the said Committee have leave to report by bill or otherwise.

The question upon the adoption of the resolution was put, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. McMULLIN. If this resolution gives rise to debate, I understand that it must go over. Now, sir, I give notice that I intend to debate it. [Laughter.]

Several MEMBERS. It is too late for that.

The SPEAKER. The result of the vote had not been definitely announced when the gentleman from Virginia rose. The Chair, therefore, decides that the resolution must lie over.

GOVERNMENT VESSELS VS. PRIVATE VESSELS.

Mr. CLINGMAN offered the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Affairs be instructed to report to the House whether there are any existing treaty stipulations which would forbid the passage of an act of Congress to prevent vessels, maintained wholly or in part by our own or other Governments, from bringing into our ports passengers or freight, so as to interfere with private enterprise; and that if no such obstacles exist by reason of treaties or otherwise, that they be authorized to report a bill for such a purpose, with or without, as they may think best, a provision to except vessels carrying mails, provided that all contracts for such purpose be let to the lowest bidders of all nations; and that if they shall report that there are objections at this time to the passage of such a law, that then they report what steps are necessary to remove said obstacles.

AMENDMENT OF THE BOUNTY LAND LAW.

Mr. HILLYER, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

"A bill to amend the third section of an act entitled 'an act granting bounty land to certain officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States.'"

Mr. CHASTAIN. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw from the files the memorial of certain citizens—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can accomplish his object at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. CHASTAIN. I understand that the rule does not apply that far, and that I cannot withdraw the papers without asking the consent of the House.

The SPEAKER. The practice is to withdraw papers at the Clerk's desk to be re-referred. If the design is to withdraw the papers entirely from the files, it must be done in open session.

Mr. CHASTAIN. Then I can accomplish my object at the Clerk's desk.

RAILROADS IN LOUISIANA AND MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. BARKSDALE, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

"A bill granting the right of way and a donation of the public lands to the States of Louisiana and Mississippi, in aid of the construction of certain railroads therein."

EXTENSION OF THE PORT OF NEW ORLEANS.

Mr. HUNT, in pursuance of previous notice given by one of his colleagues, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

"A bill to extend the limits of the port of New Orleans."

DUTY ON RAILROAD IRON.

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana. I offer the following resolution, and upon it I demand the previous question:

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means be instructed to report a bill repealing all duty on railroad iron.

Mr. HAMILTON. I move to lay that resolution upon the table.

Mr. CLINGMAN. What question will come up first?

The SPEAKER. The question on the motion of the gentleman from Maryland to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Upon that I ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask that the resolution may be read.

The Clerk again read the resolution.

The question was then put on the motion to lay the resolution on the table, and the roll having been called, there were—yeas 78, nays 65; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Appleton, Ball, Belcher, Benson, Benton, Bridges, Carpenter, Chandler, Chastain, Clark, Cobb, Corwin, Cox, Crocker, Cutting, Dawson, Dick, Disney, Edmunds, Ellison, Farley, Faulkner, Florence, Fuller, Grew, Hamilton, Aaron Harlan, Hastings, Haven, Hendricks, Hiestler, Hillyer, Houston, Hughes, Ingersoll, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Kidwell, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, Lindsey, McCulloch, Macdonald, McNair, John G. Miller, Morrison, Murray, Andrew Oliver, Peckham, Bishop Perkins, Phelps, Pratt, Preston, Ready, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Seymour, Shannon, Simmons, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, Richard H. Stanton, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Vail, Vansant, Walsh, Tappan Wentworth, and Zollcoffer—78.

NAYS—Messrs. Abernethy, Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, Thomas H. Bayly, Barksdale, Barry, Bissell, Boeck, Boyce, Brooks, Campbell, Caskey, Churchwell, Clingman, Cook, Craig, Cullom, John G. Davis, Dickinson, Dowdell, Dunbar, Eastman, Edmundson, English, Etheridge, Greenwood, Grey, Sampson W. Harris, Henn, Hill, Hunt, Roland Jones, Kerr, Knox, McDougal, McMullin, McQueen, Mace, Maxwell, Smith Miller, Millson, Nichols, Noble, Norton, Orr, Parker, John Perkins, Phillips, Phelps, Powell, Puryear, Reese, Rogers, Ruffin, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Frederick P. Stanton, Hestor L. Stevens, Warren, Elihu B. Washburne, Wells, John Wentworth, Daniel B. Wright, and Yates—65.

So the resolution was laid on the table.

Mr. HOUSTON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was laid upon the table; and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was put, and the latter motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM DARBY.

Mr. DUNBAR, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

"A bill for the relief of William Darby."

NAVIGATION OF THE RED RIVER.

Mr. JONES, of Louisiana, offered the following resolution; which was read and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War furnish this House, as soon as practicable, with a statement of the expenses incurred by the United States, in consequence of the impediments to the navigation of the Red river.

OBSTRUCTIONS TO TRADE AND TRAVEL.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I offer the following resolution, and call for the previous question on its adoption:

Resolved, That the President be respectfully requested to inform the House what information, if any, has been received in the Post Office Department in relation to obstructions to the transportation of the mails of the United States on the route between Buffalo, New York, and Cleveland, Ohio, through the town of Erie, in the State of Pennsylvania; and what measures have been taken, if any, by the Executive, to secure the uninterrupted transportation of the mails upon said route.

The SPEAKER. The resolution must lie over, unless it be the unanimous consent of the House to pass it.

Several MEMBERS objected.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I ask the gentleman who makes the objection to rise in his place.

Mr. RITCHIE, of Pennsylvania. I object, for one.

HEIRS OF REVOLUTIONARY SOLDIERS.

Mr. CORWIN, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a joint resolution; which was read a first and second time by its title, as follows:

"A joint resolution explaining the acts of 17th of July, 1838; March 3, 1842, and June 17, 1844."

I hope there will be no objection to the resolution being now put on its passage. It is intended for the benefit of the Department here by which those claims are adjusted. On the 3d day of March, 1851, a resolution was passed by this House to give to the widows and children of deceased revolutionary soldiers the benefits they were entitled to at the time of their death. The construction given by the Department to that joint resolution was, that it applied to the children of the widows who were living at the time of its passage. One or two cases happened in my own district, in which the widows died previous to the 3d of March, 1851. A very considerable amount of money would be due to their children, if the resolution of that date were construed differently from what it is by the Department. The joint resolution I have just introduced amends the joint resolution of March 3, 1851, so as to include within its provisions the children of those widows who died before that time. My resolution only carries out the intentions of the framers of the original resolution.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. In my opinion this is a very important movement. It is substantially introducing a new principle into the pension laws. It is, in effect, giving pensions to the children of revolutionary soldiers. The law of which the gentleman wishes to correct the construction, of course could not give the pension to those who were not living at the time of its passage; and if there were any who were living at that time, but died before they made their application, of course what was due them went to their children. But the construction now sought to be given is, that though the widow was dead at the time of the passage of the law, her children shall have its benefits. Nothing was due her, because she was not in existence at the time the law was passed. I think this is a question which requires investigation, and that it ought to go to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions. I submit that motion.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

PEACE ARBITRATIONS BETWEEN NATIONS.

Mr. GIDDINGS offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That a select committee be appointed by the Speaker, to which all petitions and memorials on the subject of peace, and the establishment of arbitrations between nations, shall be referred for report thereon.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I propose to debate that resolution.

The resolution went over under the rules.

PATENT OFFICE REPORT IN GERMAN.

Mr. LINDSLEY offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed in the German language five thousand additional copies of the agricultural part of the Patent Office Report, and also five thousand copies of the Abstract Census Report, for the use of the members of this House.

Several MEMBERS objected to the resolution.

So it lies over under the rules.

ELEANOR WILLIAMS.

Mr. EWING, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bill; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions:

"A bill for the relief of Eleanor Williams."

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I ask leave to withdraw from the files of the House the petition and papers of J. C. F. Salomon.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose?

Mr. STANTON. The memorialist himself desires the withdrawal of the papers for his own use.

Mr. LETCHER. I object to it. We have several like cases.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. Is the motion made to withdraw for the purpose of reference?

Mr. STANTON. I understand the motion is objected to, and I cannot explain.

Mr. CAMPBELL. You can call for the previous question.

Mr. STANTON. Well, I call for the previous question on the following resolution:

Resolved, That the papers in the case of J. C. F. Salomon be withdrawn from the files of the House.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his call for the previous question.

Mr. LETCHER. Can that resolution be debated?

The SPEAKER. No; it cannot be debated until the demand for the previous question is disposed of.

Mr. DAVIS. If the gentleman will withdraw his call for the previous question, I will explain the reason against the withdrawal of these papers. Mr. STANTON withdrew his demand.

Mr. DAVIS. I desire to make a statement in explanation of the reasons why I am opposed to the resolution. These papers were filed before the Committee of the District of Columbia, of which I was a member.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that a resolution, giving rise to debate, goes over.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is well taken, and this resolution goes over, under the rule.

Mr. DAVIS. If the resolution goes over, I have attained my object.

THE BRITISH NORTH AMERICAN FISHERIES.

Mr. PRESTON moved the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President be requested, if in his opinion it be not incompatible with the public interest, to communicate to this House the correspondence and various orders which have been issued during the last year, to officers of the Navy, commanding vessels or squadrons on the Atlantic coast of British North America, for the purpose of protecting the rights of fishing and navigation, secured to citizens of the United States, under the treaties with Great Britain.

The resolution was adopted.

JAMES H. BRADBURY.

On motion by Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of James H. Bradbury, praying for a pension, be withdrawn from the files of the House, for the purpose of reference to a committee of the Senate.

DUTY ON RAILROAD IRON.

Mr. CHURCHWELL offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means be instructed to report a bill giving a credit of four years to railroad companies to pay the duty on iron imported by them for railroad purposes.

Mr. HAMILTON. I move that the resolution be laid upon the table.

Mr. CLINGMAN. With the view of having a full House when this question is taken, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly adjourned.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 4, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Hon. STEPHEN R. MALLORY, of Florida, who, since his arrival in this city, has been prevented from taking his seat by indisposition, appeared in his seat this morning.

TERRITORY OF NEBRASKA.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, the Committee on Territories, to which was referred the bill to organize the Territory of Nebraska, has given the subject the serious and deliberate consideration which its great importance demands; and I beg leave, on behalf of the committee, to report back the bill to the Senate, with various amendments, accompanied by a special report. I move that the report and bill be printed for the use of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

On motion by Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, it was Ordered, That five thousand copies of the bill and amendments, with the report accompanying the same, be printed for the use of the Senate.

VERMONT SENATORIAL REPRESENTATION.

The Senate, on the motion of Mr. SEWARD, proceeded to consider the following resolution, submitted by him yesterday:

"Whereas, the Hon. SAMUEL S. PHELPS was appointed by his Excellency the Governor of Vermont, in the recess of the Legislature of that State, to fill the vacancy in the Senate of the United States, which happened by the death of the Hon. William Upham, a Senator whose term of six years would have continued till the 4th of March, 1855; and whereas, it is understood that since that temporary appointment was made, the Legislature of Vermont has been convened at their annual session, and has adjourned without filling such vacancy: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary inquire whether the Hon. SAMUEL S. PHELPS is entitled to retain his seat in the Senate of the United States."

Mr. FOOT. It is due to my colleague that I should briefly make an explanation to the Senate. We all doubtless fully appreciate the delicacy and embarrassment of his position. That position is not of his seeking. Although he may be apprehensive of a seeming appearance of obtrusiveness in resuming his seat here, and claiming the right to retain it, he is but acting in obedience to the dictates of a sense of obligation to the people of that State, who have honored him so long with a seat on this floor, and which, I may be allowed to say, he has filled with distinguished ability. The opinion prevails in that State, and I may say it prevailed in the Legislature, and had more or less influence in the Legislature in controlling its action in reference to the election of a Senator, that in the event of the failure of the Legislature to make an election of Senator, the previous Executive appointment would continue. My colleague could do no otherwise, in justice to the State, than come here and resume the seat to which he was entitled upon the face of his credentials, and present, for the decision of the Senate, the question of his right to retain it, and the right of the State to have him retain it.

The question, Mr. President, is an important one; and, in some of its features, an entirely new one. It is a question of that magnitude and importance which ought never to be disposed of in a running, off-hand discussion in the Senate, without the previous investigation of an appropriate committee. I trust that the resolution offered by the Senator from New York may be adopted. I trust that it will meet with no opposition, but that the question will be referred to the Judiciary Committee. As a case involving complex questions of constitutional law—as a case involving important questions of personal and State rights and privileges, it is eminently entitled to the considerate and patient investigation of your Judiciary Committee; and when their report shall be laid before us, we shall all be better prepared to form a correct conclusion on the questions involved.

I came into the Senate Chamber this morning with the purpose of stating the facts to the Senate upon which the case rests, and of expressing my own views, in brief, upon some of its promiment points, hoping at least to be able to satisfy Senators that the case is not quite so clear of all doubt against the right as to require no reference and no investigation; but having discovered a general inclination to let the case go to the Committee on the Judiciary, I shall refrain from entering on the discussion of the question until the committee shall have made their report.

Mr. BADGER. Mr. President, I concur entirely in the propriety of adopting the resolution by which this question is proposed to be submitted to the examination of the Committee on the Judiciary; and I think that is the general sense of the Senate, in order that the precedents—if there be any, as I understand there are, although I am not myself at all familiar with them—may be collected by that committee, and by their intelligent care and observation brought to the consideration of their force and bearing upon this question now submitted to the Senate. Therefore I shall postpone entirely, as my friend who has just taken his seat has done, going into any discussion upon the subject at the present time. I am not now prepared to deliver any opinion of my own, but in the mean time I would take the liberty of saying, if the honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. PHELPS] has examined the question as to his right to continue in a seat in this body, and would feel himself prepared to present his views to us, I should be extremely glad, for one member of the Senate, if he would be kind enough to favor us this morning with his general views of the question.

I make this request for two reasons: first, because every member of this body who has served with him, knows his profound acquirements as a lawyer, and the clearness and force of his understanding as a reasoner; and in the second place, because I should like to have my own mind guided, in some measure, into a train for the examination of this question; for I say frankly, though I have not yet particularly examined it, all my previous inclinations of opinion have been strong and clear against the right of the honorable member to continue in his seat. Without, therefore, desiring in any way to introduce a debate upon the subject, I shall be extremely happy, and I think it will be very becoming and appropriate, if the honorable Senator has examined this question, and has matured his views upon it, that he should now give them to us previous to the reference of the question. It will aid us all, and I have no doubt will not be disregarded by my honorable friend at the head of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. BUTLER. I made but a suggestion yesterday, and I would not have it inferred at all that I had any aversion to the question going to the committee. I thought, however, as it was a question of privilege, that it was rather due to the gentleman himself to have it considered now than to have it postponed. My remarks were made with a view to give all the benefit to the honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. PHELPS] himself; but, sir, as a motion has been made to refer the question, my respect for that honorable Senator, my respect for the State of Vermont, my respect for the commission, as I understand the gentleman has one, induce me to withdraw any opposition to its going to the committee. That honorable gentleman has served upon the Judiciary Committee, and as far as I can bear testimony, I have scarcely known one upon the committee who could examine a question with more care and attention, and upon whose judgment I would sooner rely than upon his. I therefore desire to be understood, that my remarks yesterday were made out of no opposition to him, and with no disposition at all to compromise his rights. I hope that will be generally understood.

Mr. PHELPS. Mr. President, I did not come prepared this morning to present an argument to the Senate upon this question; nor is it my purpose to do so now. I did desire, however, an opportunity to explain to the Senate the motives which induced me to present myself here, claiming, in behalf of the State which I profess to represent, a right to a seat in this body. The explanation, however, given by my colleague, the honorable Senator from that State, [Mr. Foor], has satisfied me, and I therefore desire to say no more.

I trust that the Senate will do me the justice to believe that I come here, not with any personal pretensions, but to assert and enforce what I consider the constitutional right of a sovereign State.

Waiving that matter, however, Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to comply with the desire expressed by the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. BADGER], in presenting to the Senate, as I think I can do in a very few words, the grounds upon which my claim to a seat here rests.

I am perfectly aware, Mr. President, that the general impression is such as has been expressed by the Senator from North Carolina; but from a careful examination of the phraseology of the Constitution—from an examination of the precedents, as far as they have gone, indicating the sense of the Senate from time to time, I must say it is my deliberate opinion that the commission under which I took my seat here at the last session has not yet expired.

The expression of the Constitution under which this appointment was made, is in these words, if I recollect them rightly: In case of a vacancy, (such as occurred by the decease of Mr. Upham) the Executive of the State is authorized "to make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the Legislature" of the State, "which shall then fill such vacancy." The impression to which I allude, as expressed by the honorable Senator from North Carolina, is, that the limitation implied in the words "until the next meeting of the Legislature," is a limitation of the office or appointment, which therefore terminates the right of the appointee.

This impression, I apprehend, is altogether erroneous. The limitation, in my judgment, applies to the power of the Executive, and nothing else; and viewing it, in this light, as a limitation upon the power of the Executive, the language of the Constitution, "until the next meeting of the Legislature," is peculiarly appropriate.

If I am right, sir, in this construction of the Constitution, in considering the limitation as applicable, not to the office created by the appointment, but to the power which makes it, it will be seen at once that the prevailing impression upon this subject is altogether erroneous. If, however, the other construction be adopted, the office terminates, unquestionably, at the moment when the Legislature of the State is organized, and in a capacity to act; but this construction has been uniformly repudiated.

I will not go into a minute examination of the precedents; but I may allude to what, so far as I am acquainted with the proceedings of this body, is the first precedent on the subject. It was the case of Mr. Smith, of Maryland, who held his place here under an appointment of the Executive of the State of Maryland. The Legislature of Maryland met whilst this body was in session. The question arose whether the meeting of that Legislature did not terminate the office of Mr. Smith as a member of this body. A resolution was introduced, and carried by a most decided majority, that the member from Maryland was entitled to retain his seat in this body "during (such is the language of the resolution) the session of the Legislature."

Well, sir, this word "during" is susceptible of two interpretations; the one is to the effect that the member was entitled to his seat, although the Legislature of his State was in session; the other is, that he was entitled to his seat until the termination of that session. It must be apparent to all, that the latter interpretation could not, with any propriety be given to the resolution, because the member was liable to be displaced at any moment by the action of the Legislature of Maryland. The import of the resolution therefore was this: that he was entitled to retain his seat, notwithstanding the limitation to which I have alluded in the Constitution—the limitation "until the next meeting of the Legislature."

Now, sir, from this resolution, I infer that my own construction of the Constitution in this particular, is the correct one. I believe that in every instance in which the subject has been before the Senate, this precedent has been adhered to. I am not aware of any case in which a member has been excluded from a seat here in consequence of the meeting of the Legislature of his State.

But, sir, when making this assertion, it is proper that I should remark, that I know of no case in which the question has come before this body under circumstances precisely like the present, because I know of no case where the question has been raised after the adjournment of the Legislature. The precedents, therefore, as far as they go, tend to sustain my own construction of the Constitution; but the question of the effect of the adjournment of the Legislature is one with respect to which there is, I believe, no precedent either way. I may be permitted to say, however—although I am not disposed now to go into a formal argument on the subject—that there is nothing in the Constitution which tends to terminate the appointment at the adjournment of the Legislature. If the limitation applies at all, it applies to the meeting of it, and must apply to its commencement, its organization, and capacity to act. That it means this, is perfectly apparent from the fact that we all admit that this limitation does apply to the power of the Governor; and, as applicable to that—the appointing power of the Governor—it must mean the commencement, and not the termination of the session.

But, sir, I shall not violate my promise. I am not disposed now to go into any formal argument, by way of illustration or reference to precedents, in regard to the question. My only object is to advise the Senate of the grounds upon which the claim to the seat here stands. And I will merely add, Mr. President, that, according to the view which I have taken of the Constitution, there is no express limitation to the appointment made by the Governor in such a case. I say there is no express limitation in the Constitution at all; and according to the view which I have taken of the matter, there was no necessity for such limitation. The appointment carries with it its own limitation. It is, in the first place, to fill a vacancy. It can endure no longer than that vacancy exists. In the second place, it is a provisional appointment, subject to the action of a superior authority—the Legislative power of the State. It is, therefore, terminable at any moment when that Legislature has the capacity to act, and does, in its discretion, see fit to act.

These, sir, are the grounds upon which the claim of my State to a full representation here rests. It will be seen at once by gentlemen, that if the argument were ever so far extended, it must turn at last upon the simple question as to the import or application of the limitation in the Constitution. If that limitation applies to the office, to the term of service, it unquestionably ends at the same moment that it terminates the power of the Executive to make such appointment. If it does not apply, why then we have no express limitation in the Constitution.

The idea that the adjournment of the Legislature terminates the appointment is nothing more than a sort of corollary, or inference from the idea that an express limitation applies to the appointment. If, then, we are left without any express limitation on the appointment, the consequence is that we are to look, not to the words of the Constitution for its termination, but we are to look to the nature and purpose of the appointment, and we are to have reference to that power which may, in its discretion, terminate it. In other words, it can endure no longer than the vacancy endures, and it terminates when the superior authority, by supplying the place, or, in the words of the Constitution, filling the vacancy, puts an end, in a constitutional manner, to the temporary or provisional appointment.

These are substantially the reasons, and not only substantially, but altogether the whole of the argument on the subject. I do not know that I could illustrate it, or could add to it, if I were to spend an hour or two upon the subject. I believe I have gone far enough to make the basis of the argument understood; and if so, I have effected the only object which I had now in view—to call the attention of the Senate to the real question which is presented.

And I may be permitted to say, that, although the manner in which this question was necessarily presented to the Senate, is one which might affect the sensibility of almost any gentleman, situated as I am, yet I beg the Senate to understand that I would not for a moment claim a seat here upon any other ground than for the purpose of securing to the State of Vermont its constitutional right here. As to the mode in which the question is brought up here, I desire the privilege of setting myself right—if I may use a set phrase—"before the Senate and the country."

I came here and occupied my seat. I did this, Mr. President, with the advice of others; and you, sir, are aware from what sources that advice was derived. That was the only manner in which the question could be raised here; it was a matter of necessity. I could not petition the Senate for a seat as a member upon this floor. The Senate have no right to give any seat. If I come here, I must do so upon the strength of my credentials—the authority of my State. Those credentials are already on file. They are, on the face of them, in force. There is nothing at this moment on the records of the Senate which would terminate my duties here; there is nothing on record which would authorize the President or the Secretary to erase my name from the roll. So far as the Senate are officially advised, there is and can be no question upon the subject. But facts are understood to have transpired, of which the Senate has as yet no official notice, which may affect my right to a seat here.

Under these circumstances, it must be apparent to every one, that the only mode of bringing the question before the Senate, was to appear here as a member of the body, leaving it to my friends, or my enemies, if I have any, [Several SENATORS: Not one.] to raise the question. Under these circumstances, I believe those friends will do me the justice to say that when I came here, I came with the question on my tongue, consulting with members in what manner it would be most appropriate to bring it before the Senate. Sir, I trust I may not be regarded as having presented myself here from mere personal considerations, nor be looked upon in the light of a squatter upon this floor.

Mr. SEWARD. It is proper that I should say, by way of confirmation of the remarks of the honorable Senator, that at the earliest day, and even before his arrival in this city, his friends were advised that they were desired to consider as to the proper manner in which the question should be brought up here; and what has been done has been done in concurrence with the delicate wishes expressed by the honorable gentleman himself.

The resolution was agreed to.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. BRODHEAD presented the petition of Gideon Hotchkiss, praying the extension of a patent for improvements in reacting water-wheels and their appendages; which, with the papers on file relating to the same case, was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. JOHNSON presented the petition of John Phagan, praying compensation for exploring a country for the Seminole Indians, west of Arkansas, under an order of the Secretary of War; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin, presented the memorial of the Rock River Valley Union Railroad Company, of Wisconsin, praying a grant of land to aid in the construction of their railroad; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. FISH presented the memorial of the heirs of Andrew Buchanan, praying indemnity for French spoils prior to 1801; which was referred to the Select Committee appointed on that subject.

Also, the petition of William W. Woodworth, administrator of William Woodworth, deceased, praying the extension of a patent for a planing and grooving machine; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. SEWARD presented the petition of Joseph McRacken, praying bounty land for the services of his father during the war of the Revolution; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. EVERETT. I have been requested to present the petition of Peter Amey, who was on board the United States frigate Essex, in the year 1814, at the time of the memorable action in which that vessel was engaged. On that occasion he received a severe wound. He now asks for a pension. I move that the petition and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CASS presented the petition of Laurence Taliaferro, praying a pension on account of disease contracted in the military service of the United States during the last war with Great Britain.

Mr. MALLORY presented two petitions of officers of the Army, praying an increase of compensation; which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BRIGHT presented the petition of Major James P. Heath, praying compensation as an aid-de-camp to Governor Winder, commander-in-chief of the Maryland Militia in the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MALLORY presented the memorial of William Ballard, praying that certain improvements made by him in the construction of vessels designed for the Navy may be tried in the construction of one of the vessels about to be built; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

CHEAP OCEAN POSTAGE.

Mr. SUMNER. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a memorial from citizens of Boston, assembled in Faneuil Hall, in which they pray that the rate of ocean postage may be reduced to the uniform charge of two cents, or one English penny, for single transit service for letters under half an ounce in weight. The meeting at which the memorial was adopted was presided over by the Mayor of the city, assisted by vice presidents, men the most eminent in literature and business in that community. It was addressed also by eminent gentlemen of different parties. The memorial is brief, and singularly well drawn. I would, therefore, while moving its reference to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, ask the unanimous consent of the Senate that it be printed. I believe the chairman of the Committee on Printing agrees with me that it is expedient that it should be printed.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. MALLORY gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill granting to the State of Florida alternate sections of the public lands, for the construction of railroads in that State.

Also, a bill to provide for the building of a marine hospital at Appalachicola, Florida.

Also, a bill to provide for the building of a marine hospital at St. Marks, Florida.

Also, a bill to create a new land district in Florida.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BRODHEAD, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill extending the provisions of the several laws granting bounty lands to the officers and soldiers who have been engaged in the military service of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The honorable Senator asked for the bill an early and favorable consideration by the committee.

Mr. STUART, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill granting the right of way, and making a grant of land to the State of Michigan, to aid in the construction of the Oakland and Ottawa Railroad, from Pontiac to Lake Michigan, and branches from Corunna and Grand Rapids to the straits of Mackinaw, and a continuous branch from thence to the Montreal river, in said State; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BRIGHT, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to provide a site, and for the construction of a suitable building, for the accommodation of the district and circuit courts, and a post office of the United States, at Indianapolis, in the State of Indiana; which was read, and ordered to a second reading.

The PRESIDENT. The bill will now have its second reading, with a view to reference, if there be no objection.

Mr. BRIGHT. I do not wish to have the bill referred. Let it take its place upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT. That course will be pursued.

Mr. JAMES, according to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill for the relief of the officers and soldiers who served in the Rhode Island brigade in the revolutionary army, their heirs and assigns; which was read twice, referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to lay off the town of Council Bluffs, in Iowa; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. SUMNER, it was Ordered, That the memorial of James H. Bradford, praying for arrears of pension, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion by Mr. MALLORY, it was Ordered, That the petition of Gad Humphreys be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. MALLORY, it was Ordered, That the petition of Allen G. Johnson be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion by Mr. GWIN, it was Ordered, That the documents relating to the claim of B. Juan Domercq, a Spanish subject, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. GWIN, it was Ordered, That the petition of M. Jean Deplaigne, a French subject, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

On motion by Mr. FISH, it was Ordered, That the memorial of Harman Blennerhassett and Joseph Lewis Blennerhassett be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. MALLORY, it was Ordered, That the memorial of John M. McIntosh be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion by Mr. MALLORY, it was Ordered, That the memorial and papers in the case of Isaac Varnes be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. MALLORY, it was Ordered, That the memorial of A. H. Cole be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion by Mr. MALLORY, it was Ordered, That the petition of Dempsey Pittman be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion by Mr. MALLORY, it was Ordered, That the petition of Joseph T. Walker in behalf of Eli. Harrison, Samuel H. Stevenson, Ezekiel Parrish, and Alberti D. Rogero, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

On motion by Mr. JONES, of Iowa, it was Ordered, That Emilie Hooe have leave to withdraw the documents on the files of the Senate relating to her claim.

RESOLUTIONS AGREED TO.

Mr. JOHNSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the subject-matter of relief to the innocent purchasers and settlers on the Maison Rouge and the De Bastrop grants, which lie in the States of Louisiana and Arkansas, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Mr. CASS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Pensions be instructed to inquire into the expediency of granting to Major Jonathan Kearsley, an invalid officer of the war of 1812, the pension originally allowed him, but subsequently reduced under an opinion of the Attorney General.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. BRODHEAD, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the petition of Charles Cooper & Co., praying for interest for delay in the payment of an amount due them under a contract with the Quartermaster's Department, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for their relief; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of J. Boyd, of Louisiana, praying compensation for extra expenses incurred in taking the census in the parish of Iberville, in that State, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of Jacob Gideon, praying damages for the violation of a contract made by him for binding for the Navy Department, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and ordered to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the petition of B. E. Abbott, praying to be remunerated for expenses incurred by his father, George Frederick Abbott, while vice consul of the United States at Salonica, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the petition of James Dunning, praying that he may be allowed interest on account of delay in paying him an amount due under a charter-party, contract with the Quartermaster's Department, reported a bill for his relief; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. PRATT, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the petition of the heirs of the late Captain William G. Williams, of the Corps of Topographical Engineers, praying for a settlement of his accounts at the Treasury, upon equitable and just principles, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for his relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading. The report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of William G. Ridgely; which was read a first time, and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

CHANGE OF NAME OF VESSELS.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the petition of Mordecai & Co., of Charleston, South Carolina, asking leave to change the name of the brig John Dutton, has had the same under consideration; and has directed me to ask that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, inasmuch as there is a bill from the House of Representatives for the same object.

The motion to discharge the committee was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am directed by the same committee to report back the bill from the House of Representatives, entitled "An act to change the name of the American-built brig John Dutton, and granting a register in her name," without amendment; and recommend its passage at this time.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole; and no amendment being proposed, it was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am directed by the same committee, to which was referred the memorial of J. S. Neal, master and owner of the steamer Falcon, plying between Cincinnati and Louisville, praying that the name of that steamer may be changed to that of Queen City, to report a bill "changing the name of the American-built steamer Falcon to that of Queen City," in accordance with the wish of the memorialist. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to have the bill considered at this time.

There being no objection, the bill was read a first and second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. No amendment being proposed, it was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read a third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives by Mr. J. W. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it had passed a joint resolution instructing the Joint Committee on the Congressional Library to inquire into the propriety of providing for the distribution of certain public documents now in the State Department.

The joint resolution was read twice, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

THANKS TO GENERAL WOOL.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the joint resolution of thanks to General John E. Wool, received yesterday from the House of Representatives, has instructed me to report it back without amendment, and ask its immediate consideration and passage.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution, as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to resolve that the thanks of Congress are due, and are tendered, to Brevet Major General John E. Wool, for his distinguished services in the late war with Mexico, and especially for the skill, enterprise, and courage which distinguished his conduct at the battle of Buena Vista, and requests the President to cause a sword with suitable devices to be presented to General Wool, as a testimony of the high sense entertained by Congress of his gallant and judicious conduct on that memorable occasion.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

WAREHOUSING SYSTEM.

On motion by Mr. HUNTER, the Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the bill to extend the warehousing system, by establishing private bonded warehouses, and for other purposes.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. President, I stated that I would call the bill up for the purpose of asking the Senate to make it a special order; but it has been suggested to me that that is hardly necessary. This bill, or one providing for the same object, was considered and passed by the Senate last session, but was lost in the House for want of time. I will state that the only material difference between this bill and the one of last session is, that this allows three years instead of one year for withdrawing goods for consumption out of the warehouses. That is the only material change made in the bill of last year. As it has been suggested that it had better be put on its passage now, I hope there will be no objection to it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

MILITARY ASYLUM.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to furnish the Senate with the report of the board of commissioners appointed to locate military asylums, if one has been made.

RAILROAD TO THE PACIFIC.

On motion by Mr. CHASE, the Senate resumed the consideration of the following resolution, submitted by him on the 14th ultimo:

Resolved, That the Committee on Roads and Canals be instructed to inquire into the expediency of providing for the construction of a railroad from some point on the western line of one of the existing States to some point on the eastern line of California.

Mr. GWIN. I move to strike out the whole of the resolution from the word "Resolved," and insert the following:

That so much of the President's message and accompanying documents as refers to the subject of a national railroad from the Mississippi valley to the Pacific ocean, together with all the bills pertaining to the same that have been or may be presented to the Senate, be referred to a select committee of — members.

The propriety of this reference must be apparent to every member of the Senate. The subject embraces so many important objects of a national character, that it cannot be embraced legitimately within the sphere of duty of any one of our standing committees.

The bill offered by the Senator from New York, [Mr. SEWARD,] a few days ago, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, proposes to build a road through the territories of the United States, from the western border of some State west of the Mississippi river to the eastern boundary of the State of California, for military and postal purposes. Why was it referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads in preference to the Committee on Military Affairs—both committees having an equal right to claim the jurisdiction of the bill?

The bill further proposes to contribute from the National Treasury a portion of the means required to build the road—a subject which properly belongs to the Committee on Finance; to raise the price of public lands within a specified distance of the road—a subject requiring the action of the Committee on Public Lands; it proposes to build a road—and, therefore, should go to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

This road is to be within the territories of the United States, outside the limits of any State—a subject to be considered by the Committee on Territories. It gives Congress the power to regulate the tolls on merchandise—a subject under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Commerce; and, finally, it provides for the transportation of officers of the Navy, seamen, and marines, naval stores, and armaments—a subject which belongs to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

I need say nothing further in favor of the motion I have made—its propriety must be apparent to every one. I have not stated in the resolution how the committee shall be appointed, whether by the Chair or by ballot, or of what number of Senators it shall be composed, leaving both to the decision of the Senate. My preference is for a large committee of not less than nine members, so that the deliberations of so large a number of the members of this body, when matured, may receive a favorable consideration from the Senate.

The subject of a national railroad, connecting the Pacific and Atlantic coasts of the United States, is one that must command the deliberate consideration of the Senate—the public sentiment of our constituents requires it. No question of the present day approaches it in importance, or is more the subject of discussion throughout the country. It is surrounded by many difficulties, and requires the utmost precaution in preparing its details. I have an abiding faith in the perpetuity of the union of these States, which can only be preserved by connecting our Atlantic and Pacific possessions by means of a railroad.

The difficulties in accomplishing this important result are great, but not insurmountable. That Providence which guided our forefathers to Plymouth rock, and their descendants across this continent to the Pacific ocean, building up one of the greatest empires in the world, will still guide us in making that empire imperishable by the accomplishment of this work. Its fate depends upon the action of this Congress. The subject cannot be postponed without outraging the public sentiment of the country; and the sooner it is prepared for legislative action the better; and whatever direction it is determined to give it, whether by reference to a select committee, or one of our standing committees, I hope the Senate will act at once.

Mr. BADGER. If the Senator from California will allow me, I will suggest that a difficulty presents itself in regard to his amendment. That part of it which refers to the reference of the portion of the President's message relating to the subject of the Pacific railroad is very proper; but I suggest to the Senator, that if it is desired to refer bills on the same subject, which have been introduced and referred to standing committees, it will be necessary to discharge those committees from their consideration before they can be referred to the select committee. In regard to bills that may be introduced hereafter, they cannot be referred until they are presented. I suggest, therefore, to the Senator, that the latter portion of his amendment, in regard to bills which have been or may be presented to the Senate, be struck out.

Mr. GWIN. I will agree to the suggestion, and strike out all except that which relates to the President's message.

Mr. CHASE. I have no special concern in regard to the disposition of this subject, nor do I desire now to enter at length into the debate on the resolution. I introduced the resolution, thinking that the inquiry which it proposes properly addresses itself to the standing Committee on Roads and Canals, constituted for the purpose of taking in charge subjects of this nature. I still think that that is the proper reference. The Senator from California was kind enough to advise me of the amendment which he has now proposed; but being of the opinion that the direction originally contemplated by me is the proper one, I prefer to take the sense of the Senate. I shall cheerfully acquiesce in its decision, whatever it may be.

The Committee on Roads and Canals is constituted for the especial purpose of taking subjects of this character into consideration. If this is not a matter proper to be referred to it, I know of none which is. The resolution proposes an inquiry into the expediency of a road. That is its primary subject. Whatever else is connected with it is incidental. It is very true that the construction of the road will involve an expenditure of money; it is very true that the road, when once constructed, will be used for the transportation of the mails. In its first aspect it might be a proper subject of reference to the Committee on Finance; in its second aspect it might be a proper subject of reference to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads; but the primary element is the road; and the Committee on Roads and Canals is organized for the express purpose of taking charge of this class of subjects.

I have not inquired into the composition of that committee, nor into the probable composition of the select committee proposed to be raised. It is enough for me to know that a standing committee of the Senate is charged with the general duty of considering propositions of this nature. There ought to be some special reason for withdrawing this particular proposition from it, if it is to be withdrawn. I see no reason at present for such a course.

Already, through the State of Missouri, a road, which may become a portion of the great railroad to the Pacific, is in process of construction; another road is contemplated, if not already commenced, through the State of Arkansas; another, still, through the State of Iowa. Bills granting lands in aid of all these roads have been referred to the Committee on Public Lands. Some of these bills have become laws. It was not thought necessary to raise a select committee to take into consideration any one of them. The Senator from California himself has, at this session, proposed a grant of public lands in aid of a railroad and branches from the State of California, designed to connect with the great railroad, and that, too, was referred to the standing Committee on Public Lands. Why, then, should not this inquiry, which contemplates nothing more nor less than a territorial road, be referred to a standing committee? I can see no reason for a departure from the ordinary practice.

It will be remembered by Senators that, at the last session, a select committee was raised for the purpose of taking into consideration the Pacific railroad bill. That committee sat, considered, and reported a bill. The bill which was reported failed. The initiatory measures under which the explorations and surveys, preparatory to the action of Congress upon the subject of that road are now going on, originated with the Committee on Roads and Canals. The only measure which has thus far passed this body, and received the favorable consideration of Congress, originated there. I reported it myself. That committee, therefore, has had the subject under its charge, and I see no reason now for withdrawing it from their jurisdiction.

Mr. BRIGHT. It is proper, Mr. President, I think, that I, as chairman of the Committee on Roads and Canals, should claim for that committee what really belongs to it. As my friend from Ohio has properly said, the object for which that committee was raised, is to decide questions in reference to such objects as the one now before us; and if there is any proposition which could legitimately be referred to it, I think it is just such a one as is now before the Senate. I have not heretofore claimed for that committee that which I felt belonged to it, for the reason, that on several occasions the Committee on Public Lands was anxious to take charge of the subjects. At the last session, the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads seemed anxious to consider what I thought properly belonged to that committee. In addition to this, I have had a great deal of other business to attend to in connection with my duties here, and I felt rather disposed to avoid the labor which would result from taking charge of such subjects, if others could do it better.

If it is the pleasure of the Senate to refer this proposition to a select committee, I do not object; but, if it is to be referred to one of the standing committees of the body, then I claim it for the Committee on Roads and Canals. It does not belong either to the Committee on Public Lands or the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. Every proposition, having for its object the appropriation either of money or of land to make a railroad or a canal, belongs to the Committee on Roads and Canals. I have not insisted upon the reference of this subject to that committee, for the reason that I am perhaps a little more stringent in my views, a little more conservative, than the majority of the members of this body. I know that the honorable Senator from California takes a deep interest in this matter. I have talked with him and compared notes with him, and I doubt whether I can go for his proposition in the shape in which he desires it to pass. It is a question which involves the expenditures of money and land—if it is the pleasure of Congress to appropriate money for such objects—to a great extent. Every section of the Union may, with propriety, claim an interest in it, and it is only by enlarging the committee as the Senator proposes, to nine members, that every section of the Union could have a voice in framing the measure.

As I have said before, if it be the pleasure of the Senate to organize a select committee of nine—that is the number, I believe, which the Senator from California suggests—for the purpose of representing every interest, and harmonizing conflicting opinions, upon the subject—if that can be done more effectually in that manner, than by referring the subject to the Committee on Roads and Canals, I shall not object; but I repeat, if it is to go to a standing committee, I hope the Senate will refer it where it properly belongs—to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. SEWARD. I submitted the bill the other day to which the honorable Senator from California refers, for the construction of a railroad from the western border of the Atlantic States through the Territories of the United States. I was embarrassed at the time by the question as to which committee it should be referred to. I remembered that at the last session of Congress there was a similar bill referred to a select committee, and I remembered, with pride and satisfaction, the ability with which that committee discharged its duties. I should have been glad to have had the bill which I introduced referred to such a committee, if it had existed. As there was none, I knew none more appropriate to which to send the bill than the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. I am aware that there will be many different plans presented; I trust we shall have a great many, and that out of all of them, by a comparison, we shall be able to obtain one that will receive the favor of this body, and the favor of Congress.

I would only add, that it seems to me that the precedent set at the last session is one which is worthy to be followed during the present session; and it is my desire that the bill which I have had the honor to submit shall be taken from the committee to which it was referred, and referred to one which shall have charge of all the plans that may be presented, and that we may have a report which will represent all the different interests of different sections of the Union. I quite concur, therefore, in the proposition of the Senator from California.

Mr. WELLER. I think the course that the debate has taken demonstrates the necessity of the organization of a select committee. My friend from Indiana claims that this subject properly belongs to the Committee on Roads and Canals. There is a great difference of opinion as to what committee the subject should be referred. It is because of that difference of opinion that it seems to me to be absolutely indispensable that a select committee be appointed, to which all the plans which may be submitted to the Senate could be properly referred. I am in favor, therefore, of amending the proposition submitted by the honorable Senator from Ohio, and of changing the proposition of my colleague as it now stands before the Senate, so as not only to refer the President's message, but all bills and all memorials upon the subject, and everything connected therewith, to the same committee.

Mr. President, this is a subject upon which a deep interest is felt, not only here, but throughout the country. Each one may be wedded to some particular scheme; but in order to get any one bill in a substantial form before the Senate, proposing a practicable plan for the construction of a railroad, the organization of a select committee, is, as I have already said, indispensable. At the last session of Congress you raised a select committee, that committee labored assiduously in the discharge of the duty imposed upon them. They presented a plan for the construction of the Pacific Railroad, to which I could not give my support. Notwithstanding my exceeding anxiety for the construction of that road, and notwithstanding I regard it as essential to the perpetuity of the Union, and to the prosperity and happiness of that section of the country from whence I come, that bill, which was the result of the labor of that committee, presented such features as could not receive the sanction of my vote. But I have no doubt that a committee can be organized at this session, with all the light and experience that they are now enabled to command, which can present such a scheme as will secure, not only the votes of a majority of this body, but a majority of the other branch of Congress.

The proposition before us, as it now stands, simply proposes to refer so much of the President's message as alludes to this subject to a select committee. That is a proper subject, I believe, for a select committee to investigate; because there is a difference of opinion here, as well as in the country, as to the proper construction to be given to that portion of the President's message. Whether he is in favor of such a plan as would meet the approval of my judgment I know not. At all events, let us send this subject to a select committee, and after they have presented a scheme we shall be enabled to perfect it in such a way as to command the votes of every friend of the measure. I have no plan of my own. I have no favorite route; I care not at what point you begin. If you will only give me a plan within the limits of the Federal Constitution, that plan shall receive my support. I do not now desire to enter into the discussion of this important question; the time for that discussion has not yet arrived; but when it is presented I will undertake to demonstrate that not only the commercial and the political prosperity of this country, but the absolute perpetuity of the Union, demand the construction of the road. Sir, I am not an alarmist. I do not belong to that class of men who see danger afar off; but I know that unless there be a more intimate communion between the far West and the East, and unless you bind our interests more closely together—unless you make us, who stand upon the Pacific ocean, feel that we are a part and parcel of the American family—it will be utterly impossible to preserve this Union.

Now, sir, in regard to a question of this magnitude, which affects interests that lie at the very foundation of your Government, is it not a proper subject to refer to a select committee, a committee selected, if you choose, by this body, who shall examine all the plans submitted, and be enabled to present such a scheme as will command a successful vote in this and the other branch of Congress?

Mr. GWIN. In accordance with the suggestion of my colleague in regard to referring all bills upon the subject to the select committee, I will modify my amendment so that it shall read as follows:

Resolved, That so much of the President's message and accompanying documents as refer to the subject of a national railroad from the Mississippi valley to the Pacific ocean, be referred to a select committee of — members.

Resolved, further, That the committees to whom the several bills and papers relating to the subject have been referred, be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that they be also referred to said select committee.

Mr. PRATT. The subject of this resolution is one of immense importance and general interest. I believe that a large majority of the people of the United States are in favor of the construction of a road, but the great difficulty has been, and will be, to ascertain how that road is to be constructed. In bringing my own mind to a correct conclusion as to whether the subject should be referred to a standing committee, or a select committee, I am embarrassed by this consideration. It is proposed to refer that part of the President's message which relates to the subject. I confess I have read with that desire to understand, which every member of the Senate ought to do, the message of the Executive of the country, and I equally confess my utter inability to decide what the opinion of the President of the United States is in reference to the powers of this Government over the subject of the resolution. My honorable friend from Ohio, [Mr. CHASE,] who has spoken on the subject, is a member of one of the standing committees—that on roads and canals. If he can enlighten the Senate, if he can tell us what is the opinion of that standing committee as to the opinions of the President in regard to the powers of this Government over the subject-matter of the resolution, and they are favorable to the construction of the road, I should prefer that the resolution go to that standing committee. If my friend from Michigan, [Mr. CASS,] who may be supposed to be much better acquainted with the opinions of the President, has come to a conclusion as to the powers which he supposes to exist, I should be glad to hear from him.

It must be apparent, that if we cannot get from the standing committee what may be their opinions, the proposition of my friend from California is the correct one—that we should have as numerous a committee as possible, taken from every section of the country, that, by some possibility, we may arrive at what may be the President's views in regard to the powers of the Government over the subject on which we are asked to legislate. I shall therefore vote with the honorable Senators from California, so that we may have as large a committee as possible, with the view of ascertaining in some way what is the opinion of the chief Executive officer of our Government; who, at last, may control our legislation upon a subject of such momentous consequences that embraced by the resolution.

MR. BUTLER. I am, and always have been, opposed to all these motions to raise special committees. The regular committees of the Senate are appointed upon the assumption that they are competent to discharge the duties within the sphere of the matters referred to them. It is upon the assumption that they are not committed to this project or that project that they are appointed. They are not appointed in reference to their being in favor of this system of policy or that system of policy. They are appointed as impartial jurors; and I must be permitted to say that a number of gentlemen appointed from this body, I take it, will be quite as competent, as any select committee that could be appointed to consider the matter, unless it is determined to have one known to be in favor of the project.

I know that these special committees are well organized, and always organized with a view to perfect the very measures referred to them. I know it is incidental to the organization of such committees to appoint them with a view to favor and make an argument to the public in favor of the very matters referred to them. A standing committee is not supposed to be so far committed to the subject, and generally would do justice to it. I do not now intend to express myself upon the general topic. It is one of great magnitude. I have heretofore expressed my opinions freely—though perhaps not upon the exact form in which the subject presents itself now—of a reference to a standing or special committee. But this thing of appointing special committees upon all occasions, when questions of great magnitude come up, I know is a dangerous and mischievous invasion upon parliamentary usage.

MR. BADGER. I have finally come to the conclusion to vote with the Senators from California for a select committee; and as I had intimated to my friends, that I should go for a reference to a standing committee, and as I dislike to appear to have changed my opinion, without giving the reasons for it, I desire to state what has at last disposed me to conclude to go for a select committee. My reason is quite different from that of the Senator from Maryland. It is not with a view to get a large committee selected from different portions of the Union, to endeavor to find some one that will ascertain the views of the President, and endeavor to shape the measure so as to meet his views when a bill shall be passed. My reasons are different. The Senator from California, [Mr. GWIN,] who submits this amendment, has very satisfactorily proved, I think, that this measure does not belong either to the Committee on Roads and Canals, or the Committee on Finance, or any other of the particular committees which it was thought worth while for him to turn his attention to.

My friend from Indiana [Mr. BRIGHT] has put in his claim, if this subject is to go to any standing committee, that it shall go to the Committee on Roads and Canals. Now, the Senator from California has shown that while this matter relates to a road, and therefore, so far, belongs to that committee, it embraces other subjects, which require that it should go to the Committee on Finance, and still others which would require its destination to another standing committee; and he proposes, therefore, in order to do no injustice to any one of these committees, which have rightful claims upon the several parts and proportions of the particular measure, to put them all aside, and get a select committee. Now, sir, if it had been the pleasure of the Senate, instead of selecting with an invidious discrimination two or three committees, and inquiring into the propriety of referring this measure to them, to have taken an impartial survey of all the standing committees of the body, they might without difficulty have found one to which, considering the vast magnitude and importance of the measure, and the probability that its adoption will entail a large expenditure upon the country, upon all considerations of propriety, this subject ought to be referred, and that is the committee of which I have the honor to be an humble member, and of which the honorable Senator from Mississippi [Mr. ADAMS] is chairman—the Committee on Retrenchment. [Laughter.]

But our claims have been overlooked; they have been considered, on this occasion, as unworthy of consideration by anybody; and, therefore, I tell the honorable Senator from Indiana, that, as he has overlooked my committee, I will go against his. Justice and a fair distribution of the business of the Senate, and particularly the desire that gentlemen should have an opportunity to distinguish themselves upon the working committees—and such is the committee to which I have the honor to belong—which, I think, should always characterize the decisions of the Senate, require that the peculiar fitness of the committee to which I have referred should be regarded in the consideration of this question. If the Committee on Roads and Canals is so selfishly engrossed with claiming its own as to overlook what properly belongs to the honorable Senator from Mississippi and myself, I have no alternative—reluctant as I may be to do it—but to disregard the claims of the Committee on Roads and Canals, and go for the organization of a select committee. [Laughter.]

MR. CHASE. In respect to the suggestion of my honorable friend from North Carolina of the propriety of referring this subject to the committee of which he is so excellent a member, I will only observe, that the best foundation for it seems to be the fact that that committee has nothing to do.

MR. BADGER. I beg the honorable Senator's pardon for interrupting him, but he is entirely mistaken. He will learn in a few days from the Senator who is at the head of that committee that we have been promptly engaged in the investigation of the subjects which have been referred to us, and that we shall present the first fruits of the labors of the Committee on Retrenchment by a bill to increase the salaries of the Executive officers. [Laughter.]

MR. CHASE. The "first fruits" to which the honorable Senator refers, of the labors of that committee, are precisely such as might be expected of a committee so admirably constituted as that is for the purpose for which it is raised. I was, however, about to suggest, that a claim in favor of that committee, upon the ground that it has nothing to do—and certainly it might better do nothing than report a bill for the increase of the expenditures, when the very end of its organization is retrenchment—

MR. BADGER. And reform.

MR. CHASE. This claim on the score of lack of employment is quite as valid in favor of the committee of which my friend from Indiana [Mr. BRIGHT] is chairman. The Committee on Roads and Canals has, literally, nothing to do.

It was expected, I suppose, to do something; but I believe no reference, or not more than one, has been made to it during this session. During the last session, if I recollect right, nothing was referred to it, besides propositions connected with this road, except one or two unimportant matters. A few days ago, however, in anticipation, I must presume, of the extraordinary labors which it was supposed were about to be devolved upon the committee, the number of its members was increased from five to six, and the Senate assigned it a clerk. Now, however, it seems that the Senate designs to relieve the committee from its chief duties by constituting a select committee, to take charge of almost the only subject of importance which will come within its jurisdiction at this session. The committee and its clerk are to be left without labors. Would it not be well to go a step further, and abolish the committee altogether? That done, the committee and clerk would gracefully disappear.

Seriously, however, Mr. President, there has been no argument yet urged, so far as I have heard, in favor of a reference of this subject to a select committee, which would not apply as well to every road for which an appropriation of the public lands has been asked; and, in fact, to every subject of any importance which ever comes under the consideration of this body. We have, it is true, many local questions; but it is also true that most of the questions submitted to the consideration of this body are not local. They extend to the whole Union, and influence the destinies of the whole country. If the important character of this measure requires that a select committee should be charged with its consideration, then, upon this single reason, we ought to consign every important subject submitted to this body to the charge of such a committee. It is said, to be sure, that there are peculiar reasons for this reference. But I see none. It is urged that there are various committees to which it might as well be referred as to that on roads and canals.

For instance, it is said that the construction of this road will involve an appropriation of the public lands, and the bill should therefore go to the Committee on Public Lands; it may involve the expenditure of money, and therefore it should go to the Committee on Finance; it may involve, and will necessarily involve, the transmission of the mail, and therefore it should go to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. To all that my reply has been already urged, that the committee to which I propose to refer this subject, to a committee constituted to take charge of roads and canals; and this is a road, and all the uses to which the road may be put, and the means by which it may be constructed, are incidental, and not primary. The primary character of the measure ought to determine its reference. Every claim submitted to this body involves the expenditure of money. Do we refer them all to the Committee on Finance? Not at all. Some of them arise from claims for military service, some from claims for civil service, and some are of a mixed character. We refer each claim to the committee which the general character of the claim indicates as being the appropriate one.

All I claim for this subject is, that it be referred to the committee which has the charge of measures of this general character. I have not inquired into the constitution of the committee. I have the honor to be a member of it myself. I am favorable to the construction of a road, such as is proposed, through the Territories. During the last session of the Senate, I gave my humble support to every proposition, having in view the construction of this road, which seemed to me constitutional and judicious. I had the honor, as a member of that committee, to report the only measure connected with this subject, which received the sanction of both Houses at the last session. I refer to those provisions under which the explorations and surveys are now going on. I have not inquired into the opinions of the gentlemen associated with me upon that committee. I know they are selected from different parts of the country, and with a view, as I must suppose, to the character of the questions they were to act upon. I have no doubt they will give this measure a fair consideration, and will make a fair report; and the measure which they report will be as likely to receive the sanction of the body, I trust, as any reported from a select committee.

I have thus thought it due to myself to state the reasons which govern me in the course which I have thought proper to take; but I repeat, if it is the wish of a majority of the Senate to refer the matter to a select committee, I shall interpose no further objection.

The amendment was agreed to by a vote, on a division of—ayes 24, noes 9.

The resolution, as amended, was adopted.

On motion by Mr. GWIN, it was Ordered, That the blank in the resolution be filled with nine, so that the committee shall consist of nine members.

On motion by Mr. GWIN, it was Ordered, That the committee be appointed by the President pro tempore.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 4, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

MR. HUNT. With a view to my character and position in this House, I ask leave of the House to make a personal explanation in regard to a vote which I gave yesterday.

The SPEAKER. If no objection be made, the gentleman will be allowed to proceed. The Chair hears no objection, and the gentleman from Louisiana has the floor.

Mr. HUNT. Mr. Speaker, I feel it due to my character, and to my position in this House, to ask leave to make an explanation of a personal nature in regard to a vote I gave yesterday. Under a mistake as to the proceedings of the House, which I did not hear fully and correctly, and misapprehending the effect of a motion to lay on the table a resolution offered by a member from Louisiana, instructing the Committee on Commerce to report a bill to repeal the duties on railroad iron, I voted in error against that motion. I now desire to correct that error, as far as may be, by declaring that, while I will always be ready to afford reasonable aid to railroad enterprise, and am willing to vote, for instance, under existing circumstances, for the motion of the member from North Carolina, to give a credit of four years to railroad companies to pay duties on iron imported by them for railroad purposes, I never will consent to do away with a just measure of protection of American industry and capital, and to open the door to foreign industry and capital for a monopoly of our home market. Nor will I give my sanction and approval to any ill-judged or insidious attempt to strike at a tariff system, by an attack upon one great interest of the country alone, under an apparent zeal to promote a class of popular internal improvements. I will only further add, Mr. Speaker, that I disapprove, and will oppose, the plan of legislating, too often resorted to in this House, and unfortunately adopted by the mover of the resolution yesterday, of accompanying a proposition with a motion for the gag-law. We are sent here to discuss public questions, and to arrive at just conclusions by an interchange of sentiments and a comparison of views. I thank the House for the opportunity it has afforded me of doing myself justice in the matter to which I have called their attention.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER announced that reports from committees were first in order, and commenced the call with the Committee on Ways and Means.

APPROPRIATION FOR FORTIFICATIONS, ETC.

Mr. HOUSTON, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported a bill making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for repairs of barracks and quarters for the year ending June 30, 1855; which was read a first and second time by its title, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

CUSTOM-HOUSES AND MARINE HOSPITALS.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have in my hand, and will send to the Clerk, a correspondence which has been had between the Committee on Ways and Means and the Secretary of the Treasury, in relation to custom-houses and marine hospitals; which I am instructed by that committee to ask the House to have printed.

No objection was made, and the correspondence was ordered to be printed.

JOB M. SAYTON AND ANTHONY GALE.

Mr. BOYCE, from the Committee on Claims, made adverse reports upon the claims of Job M. Sayton and Anthony Gale; which were laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

BOGART AND KNEELAND.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Affairs to report back to this House the petition and memorial of Bogart & Kneeland, Benjamin L. Swan, the executor of Thaddeus Stevens and Jacob Idler, and to report that the subject of the papers properly belongs to the Executive Department.

The papers were ordered to be laid on the table and printed.

FRENCH SPOILIATIONS.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported the following bill; which was read the first and second time by its title, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union: "A bill to provide for the ascertainment and satisfaction of the claims of American citizens for spoiliations committed by the French prior to the 31st of July, 1801."

Mr. VAIL, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, submitted adverse reports in the following cases: John H. Hicks, Mary Hopperton, widow of Edward Hopperton, James S. Barbour, James Butler, and Beniah Wright; which were laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

[A message was here received from the Senate by the hands of ASBURY DICKINS, Esq., its Secretary, announcing that that body had passed bills and resolutions of the following titles, and asking the concurrence of the House therein:

A resolution for supplying new members of the Senate and House of Representatives with such books of a public character as have been heretofore supplied;

An act to suppress the circulation of small notes as a currency in the District of Columbia;

An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Dr. William Somerville, deceased;

An act concerning the district courts of the United States in California;

An act authorizing Victor Morass to relinquish certain lands, and to enter the same quantity elsewhere;

An act for the relief of the legal representatives of Major Caleb Swan, deceased; and

An act for the relief of Joseph Gonder and John Duff.]

COLLECTOR BRONSON.

Mr. CUTTING. I now call for the order of business, pursuant to the 61st rule of this House.

The SPEAKER. The resolution offered yesterday by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUTTING] is now regularly in order:

The resolution was read, and is as follows:

Whereas, publications have appeared in the public prints purporting to be copies of a correspondence between the Secretary of the Treasury and Greene C. Bronson, the late Collector of the Customs for the Port of New York, relating to "the subject of the unfortunate division in the Democratic party in New York;" the distribution of offices "among the different sections of the party;" and in which, after referring "to that portion of the party to which Mr. Bronson adhered," the Secretary of the Treasury expressed an expectation that the Collector would "recognize the other portion of the party in the only way that would carry conviction with it;" which publications consist of alleged letters from the Secretary of the Treasury to the Collector aforesaid, bearing date respectively the 3d, 4th, and 23d days of October last, and of letters from the latter to the former, bearing date the 17th and 31st days of October last; and whereas, in the newspaper called "The Daily Union," of Wednesday, the 28th December last, it is stated, apparently "by authority," that the removal of Mr. Bronson was the act of the President, who "freely shoulders the entire responsibility," and justifies his act not merely upon the ground of alleged official insubordination, but upon the further distinct ground that the late Collector had "prostituted his office for political ends, and otherwise abused his official trust for party purposes;" therefore,

Resolved, That the Secretary be, and he is hereby, requested to communicate to this House a copy of the correspondence above referred to, (if any such there be,) and of any other letters that may have passed between himself and Greene C. Bronson, the late collector of the customs for the port of New York, relating to the subject-matter aforesaid.

Mr. CUTTING. I remarked yesterday to the House, when I offered this resolution, that it was not my purpose to enter into any discussion or debate of the topics involved in it, because, until we had authentic information before the House, it would not, in my opinion, answer any good purpose to discuss that which must necessarily, when it comes up, excite our attention. That design remains unchanged.

The time, I trust, will come when we shall have an opportunity to enter fully into the merits of a matter which has occupied the public mind, perhaps more than any other question of that description which has ever occurred—certainly, more than any I have ever known in the course of my experience. My purpose now is, to move the adoption of this resolution; and upon that motion, as the time for debate has not yet arrived, I shall ask the previous question.

Mr. ORR. I desire to ask the gentleman—

The SPEAKER. No debate is in order, unless the demand for the previous question be withdrawn.

Mr. CUTTING. I desire simply to conclude my sentence, for I do not wish to take my seat with it unfinished. I say, I desire, inasmuch as the period for debate has not arrived, to ask simply for the adoption of the resolution, and for that reason I shall call the previous question. At the same time I will remark, that should there be opposition to sustaining the call, I shall ask for the yeas and nays, in order that we may ascertain whether or not there is any disposition to shrink from this investigation. There has been uttered what I believe to be a calumny against the character of an eminent citizen of my State; and the Representatives of that State, I trust, are here to stand by its sons when they are assailed, no matter from what quarter it may come. I ask for the previous question.

Mr. CLINGMAN. Before the previous question is seconded, I desire to ask the gentleman from New York a single question.

Mr. CUTTING. I will withdraw the call for that purpose.

Mr. CLINGMAN. My object is simply this: I desire to know whether the purpose of the gentleman, in getting this information, is, if the facts should require it, to take any further steps in the matter? I will explain to him the object of my question in a few words. It has always been my practice to vote against mere political resolutions upon this floor. At the same time, if the object of the gentleman is to get at facts, with a view to enable us to legislate, if necessary, or to direct proceedings against any officer which it is competent to us under the Constitution to do, I think he is entitled to the information. While, therefore, I would vote against the adoption of any mere political resolution intended to make political capital, at the same time, if I understand that the object of the gentleman from New York is to obtain information which, in his judgment, may be important either to regulate the legislation of this House, or if he has any further object in view as an American representative, I will, of course, vote for his proposition. I cannot tell what his object is, for the resolution is not very definite in some respects. I desire to vote understandingly upon this question. I do not intend to take any part in a mere political contest. On the contrary, I always vote to lay on the table mere political resolutions, when they are introduced here by any gentleman. I ask the gentleman the question with this view.

Mr. CUTTING. In answer to the question propounded by the gentleman from North Carolina, I beg leave to say that, as this question stood no longer than a week ago, it would not have been necessary, in my judgment, to have troubled this body with the questions involved in that resolution. I would have been content, sir, as the correspondence between the Secretary of the Treasury and the late Collector of New York had been published in almost every print of large or mean circulation in the United States; as it had been extensively read by almost all persons who engage themselves in political matters, or look after the affairs of the Government; as most of the people of this country had made up a deliberate judgment upon the matter of that correspondence—I would have been content, for one, to leave the whole question to the sober thoughts of the people of this country. But since then this question has assumed a new aspect. The removal of Judge Bronson was alleged to have been occasioned by his supposed insubordination to his Chief—the Secretary of the Treasury. The argument upon that subject, however, has been placed before the public, and every man of any intelligence has, before this, made up his mind as to whether or not the accusation on the part of the Secretary of the Treasury was well or ill founded. But in an article of a most inflammatory character, published no later than 28th December last—months after this subject had been promulgated to the American people; months after a deliberate judgment of some kind had been formed—a newspaper, to which is attributed the speaking of the same sentiments as the highest officer of the Government, renews this subject, reopens the question, and charges one of the most eminent citizens of the State of New York with having violated the official trusts that had been delivered to him for execution—charges him, sir, with a base misdemeanor in having prostituted his high office for political purpose. If that accusation be true, we ought to know it; if it be unfounded, I think we ought to interpose a shield between a private citizen and the head of the Government.

One word more, and then I will allow the gentleman from North Carolina to propound any further questions to me. This accusation that is now made seeks to place the removal of Mr. Bronson from office not upon the ground of insubordination merely, but upon the further dis-ting ground that he had been guilty of the misdemeanor charged against him in this article; and it obtains the high sanction of purporting to be made as coming from the President of the United States, and as being his justification for this act of removal.

Now, when a charge of this description is made by a mere newspaper, no matter how respectable, I agree that the citizen is not to be put on his trial on that account; but when the charge is backed by the allegation that the President of the United States shoulders the responsibility, and justifies the act because the officer was guilty of these high crimes and misdemeanors—if the fact appear by the papers that I call for, and such other information as I shall demand when those papers come in, that he was removed by the President of the United States, under the conviction and the belief that Mr. Bronson had been guilty of these high offenses—then I shall call upon the House to give the matter to a committee, chosen by itself, so that there shall be no responsibility on the Speaker—where it ought not to be—that we may investigate the fact, whether it be true that Mr. Bronson is the corrupt man that he is now charged with being; or whether or not the President of the United States has been deluded and deceived by persons hanging around him?

Now, I will say, in answer to the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] that I propose to take further action if, when I get the papers in answer to my call, further action be necessary. What that action may be of course must depend altogether on the information that the resolution before the House, and another one, may elicit.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I am not sure whether I entirely understand the gentleman from New York. If his object be simply to vindicate the character of a distinguished citizen of his State—as I think that the House of Representatives has more important duties to discharge than that—I should certainly decline to give my support to his motion. I leave individuals to defend themselves as they may find necessary, either in the public prints or otherwise. If that be his only object, I should not vote to entertain his proposition; but if I understand that he has reason to believe that there is an officer of this Government against whom it may be necessary for us to introduce an impeachment, or if he believes that abuses have grown up in the management of the Executive Departments which require legislation—if he has sufficient reason, as a member of this House, on his own responsibility, to make a movement having such objects in view, I will not oppose him; on the contrary, I shall feel bound to give him my support. But I am not willing that the House shall step in to vindicate anybody, and become the mere tryer of attacks on any gentleman. If a charge be made against a member, affecting his official conduct, it might be necessary to institute proceedings. If, however, a mere slander was made in the newspapers against any member, I should not feel disposed to pass a resolution, or to institute proceedings of the character indicated. Nearly all the members who have been a few years here have had charges made against them, from time to time, and charges very injurious to their characters; and yet none of them have felt it proper to institute proceedings to defend themselves. If the gentleman's only object is to defend a distinguished citizen of New York—

Mr. CUTTING. I asked the gentleman to put any further interrogatory to me that might occur to him. I yielded for that purpose, and that alone.

Mr. CLINGMAN. My object was to let the gentleman know the difficulty I encountered in this matter.

Mr. CUTTING. I prefer that the gentleman shall put any interrogatory to me which may have the tendency, in some degree, to remove the difficulties oppressing his mind. While I shall regret the want of his support, I must now call for the previous question.

Mr. OLDS. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. BISSELL. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York a question; if I understand him aright—

Mr. CUTTING. I would do it with a great deal of pleasure; for nothing can afford me more than to oblige the gentleman from Illinois, provided his inquiry be not an argument. If it should be an argument, I shall object to it for this reason—as I desire to give a reason for what I do: I have already stated that I did not rise to debate the resolution which I offer—

Mr. BISSELL. I only wish to ask a question. If the House shall see an argument in that it shall not be my fault.

The SPEAKER. The member from Illinois [Mr. BISSELL] desires to ask a question.

Mr. CUTTING. I yield for the purpose of enabling him to propound an interrogatory.

Mr. BISSELL. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CUTTING] informed us, on making the motion, that as things stood with respect to the subject of his resolution a week ago, all was right; the country had pronounced its verdict, with which he seems to have been satisfied. Now the question I wish to propose to him is: Is it possible that the publication of an article in a political journal—the country knowing the value to be attached to a political newspaper—has made it necessary for Congress to take up this subject so well settled before the publication of the newspaper article?

Mr. WARREN. I move that the resolution be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has the floor.

Mr. CUTTING. In answer to the inquiry put by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BISSELL,] I shall say that, as a general rule,—

Mr. WARREN. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CUTTING] has called for the previous question several times, and I simply want to know how often he can do so.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York withdrew the demand for the previous question.

Mr. CUTTING. With the gentleman from Arkansas, I am most anxious to have the previous question put, and the fact that I have proposed it so often only shows how anxious I am to have it put. I have withdrawn the demand for the previous question simply because members of the House, for whom I entertain a very great respect, have desired to put questions to me; among others the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BISSELL.] I will say to that gallant member that, as a general rule, I think that that which appears in newspapers, whether of high or low degree, ought not to be referred to in a parliamentary body like this; but, like all general rules, it seems it has exceptions.

We know, Mr. Speaker, that the proprietor of that paper is the public printer of this House. We know that, so far as it speaks in the name of the President, and for the President, and in the name of the Administration, and for the Administration, that it speaks—not officially, but by authority—the views and sentiments of those high officers. It therefore stands in that ambiguous and equivocal position of not being an official organ, like the French Moniteur, nor yet, again, the paper to which we can ascribe any sort of connection with the Government. It is in that middle state of being neither the conceded organ, nor yet one which is repudiated. It, beyond all doubt, purports to speak, and is allowed to speak, under the very eyes of the Administration, that which it declares are the sentiments of the Administration. Now, I submit to this House, and to the gentleman, [Mr. BISSELL,] in all candor—I submit to every man to whom it seems to me, a ready response must come, if he be a right-minded man, that an accusation of a grave character—of the violation of official trusts—promulgated in that paper as coming from the President, and being the views of the President, is stated as a justification for the removal—I say, I put it to the gentleman candidly to say, whether such a print, standing in that position, has not that degree of sanction imparted to it as to make an accusation against any citizen one that ought to be noticed? It requires to be noticed when the charge is made, as this is made. I have it in my hand, as the accusation of the President himself—the highest of all officers. I therefore answer the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BISSELL,] that this, in my humble opinion, for the reasons I have stated, constitutes an exception to that rule which he lays down, and in which, as a general rule, I most cheerfully concur.

I therefore, Mr. Speaker, as there will be quite time enough for all gentlemen to indulge in debate upon this matter, after we get the necessary information—

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, (interrupting.) I wish to ask the gentleman a single question, before he calls the previous question. It is, whether the letters referred to in his preamble, as having been addressed by the Secretary of the Treasury to the late Collector at New York, and those addressed by that Collector to the Secretary, and called for in his resolution, have not been published throughout this country by all the newspapers, and whether he doubts the authenticity of a single one of those letters?

Mr. CUTTING. I will state to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] that the question propounded by the gallant member from Illinois [Mr. BISSELL] answers his question. But when the gentleman from Tennessee asks if you are going to notice newspaper publications, and make them alone the ground of proceedings in this House, and whether I contend that such a course would be parliamentary, I answer, certainly not. Would it be tolerated, that I should bring into this House the subject of a mere publication by a paper known or unknown, not authenticated in any way, without the authority of the communication under consideration, and that I should proceed to base any charge upon it, and attempt to raise a committee in this House upon papers of that description? No, I answer the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] But where there is a deliberate charge of corruption against Mr. Bronson it ought to be investigated, and in the investigation I want to proceed upon something else than the mere unauthenticated copy of a newspaper publication. I want it presented before this House in official form, so that we may take that as the basis of our action upon the subject.

One word more and I will finish my remarks. I further observe to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] that if this newspaper publication of the correspondence be genuine, then the only ground of removal charged there is insubordination to the Secretary of the Treasury.

This charge is, that the President removed him only upon the distinct ground of corruption in office. Now, if that were the distinct ground, it does not appear by this correspondence—I mean the genuine correspondence—and there is a striking contrast between the ground of removal assumed in October last, and the ground upon which the Administration seeks to justify the removal in December last.

I wish to know what makes that striking contrast; because the ground, of course, existed before the removal was made. It was either upon the ground assigned by the Secretary—that is the ground assigned in the correspondence—or else it was upon another ground, which ought to appear in the correspondence, and that I want. I want to get the facts, and before I get the facts, I did not intend to undertake to debate this matter.

I therefore move the previous question.

Mr. ORR. I move to lay the resolution upon the table, and upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOUSTON. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken, and there were—yeas 104, nays 66; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Benton, Bissell, Bocock, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Caskie, Chastain, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Cobb, Craig, Cumming, John G. Davis, Disney, Dowdell, Drum, Dunbar, Eddy, Elliott, Ellison, English, Faulkner, Fenton, Florence, Fuller, Greenwood, Grow, Hamilton, Andrew J. Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Hastings, Hendricks, Henn, Hibbard, Hillyer, Houston, Hughes, Ingersoll, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kidwell, Kurtz, Lamb, Latham, Letcher, Lilly, Lindsey, Macdonald, McDougal, McMullin, McNair, McQueen, Mace, Maxwell, May, Smyth Miller, Millson, Morrison, Murray, Nichols, Noble, Olds, Orr, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Pratt, Richardson, Thomas Ritchey, Robbins, Ruffin, Seymour, Shannon, Shaw, Shower, Singleton, Skelton, William R. Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Hester L. Stevens, Andrew Stuart, John J. Taylor, Thurston, Vail, Vansant, Warren, Wells, John Wentworth, and Daniel B. Wright—104.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Appleton, Thomas H. Bayly, Ball, Benson, Campbell, Carpenter, Caruthers, Chandler, Chase, Clingman, Cook, Corwin, Crocker, Culom, Cutting, Dick, Eastman, Edmunds, Etheridge, Everhart, Ewing, Farley, Giddings, Grey, Aaron Harlan, Haven, Hiester, Hill, Hunt, Kerr, Knox, Lindley, McCulloch, Middleswarth, John G. Miller, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Parker, Peckham, Preston, Puryear, Ready, Reese, David Ritchie, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Simmons, Gerrit Smith, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H.

Stanton, John L. Taylor, Tracy, Upham, Walbridge, Walsh, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Yates, and Zollicoffer—66.

So the resolution was laid upon the table.

Pending the call of the roll, Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois, said: I ask the unanimous consent of the House to have another call of the roll, so that those who were not present then may now have the privilege of voting.

Several MEMBERS objected.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has expired.

Mr. WASHBURN. I move, then, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HARRIS. I rise to what I consider is a privileged question. I move to reconsider the vote just taken, and to lay that motion upon the table.

The question was then taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to introduce a resolution terminating debate in Committee of the Whole upon the President's message. I suppose that we shall have general debate upon all the appropriation bills, and I therefore propose a resolution terminating debate upon the President's message at three o'clock this evening. The appropriation bills are ready to be called up immediately. I think it is time that we were voting upon something, and therefore I move such a resolution.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a resolution, to which I am sure there will be no objection.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The gentleman cannot make such motion while the resolution offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] is pending.

Mr. STANTON. I ask that the resolution which I desire to present may be read, and I am sure that there will be no objection to its adoption.

Mr. JONES. I will suggest to the gentleman from Alabama that he so modify his resolution as to close debate in Committee of the Whole upon the President's message next Thursday at three o'clock. That will allow sufficiently short time for debate upon the message.

Mr. HOUSTON. If this was a termination of general debate, I would have no objection to such modification.

Mr. JONES. I move to amend the resolution offered by the gentleman from Alabama, by striking out the words "three o'clock this evening," and inserting "Thursday of next week, at three o'clock;" and upon that motion I call the previous question.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. Is an amendment to the motion now in order?

The SPEAKER. It would not be in order, the previous question having been demanded.

Mr. TAYLOR. I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

The question was taken, and Mr. TAYLOR's motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were not ordered.

CALIFORNIA LAND COMMISSION.

Mr. LATHAM. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table a Senate bill providing for extending the act authorizing the creation of a California land commission.

The SPEAKER. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana, (in his seat.) I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must request gentlemen, when they make objections, to rise in their places and address the Chair.

Mr. DAVIS, (rising.) Mr. Speaker, I object.

WIDOW OF THE LATE HON. B. CAMPBELL.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to submit a resolution to which—if the House will hear it read—there will not, I am sure, be a single objection. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Speaker cause to be paid to the widow of the late Brookins Campbell, of this House, the amount of his mileage and per diem, from the commencement of the session up to the day of his death.

No objection was made, and the resolution was received, considered, and agreed to.

HALF PAY TO WIDOWS.

Mr. READY. I ask leave to introduce a bill to amend the several acts of Congress allowing and continuing to widows of deceased officers and soldiers of the United States half pay in certain cases for a specified time.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask the Chair if there is not already a motion before the House?

The SPEAKER. There is a motion pending to lay the resolution of the gentleman from Alabama upon the table.

Mr. READY. Well, sir, I ask unanimous consent to introduce the bill merely for reference.

Mr. WALSH. I object.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I desire to know what will become of the resolution in regard to duties on railroad iron, which was before the House yesterday when we adjourned?

The SPEAKER. That resolution will be taken up when the States are again called for resolutions, which will be on Monday next.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. Have the thirty days in which the States may, under the rules, be called for resolutions expired?

The SPEAKER. They have expired, and the States will hereafter be called every alternate Monday, commencing with Monday next.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I beg leave to call the attention of the Chair to an expression in the 27th rule of the House, which, as it seems to me, would bring up any resolution in the condition of this one.

The SPEAKER. If it be the unanimous consent of the House to settle the question to which the gentleman refers, at this time, the gentleman may proceed.

Mr. HAMILTON. I object.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I make the point of order that, unless the morning hour has expired, the resolution is now first in order.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired, and the question before the House is the motion to lay upon the table the resolution of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] to close debate in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was taken, and the resolution was laid upon the table.

The question then recurred upon the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion by Mr. GIDDINGS, leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House the papers of Isaac Cooke and of P. Sheppard, for the purpose of presentation in the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

[Here a message was received from the Senate, by the hands of Mr. MACHEN, its Assistant Secretary, announcing that the Senate had passed a bill from the House "to change the name of the American-built brig John Dutton, and to grant a register in her name."

Also, a joint resolution from the House of thanks to General John E. Wool.

Also, that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which he was requested to ask the concurrence of the House:

"An act to extend the warehousing system by establishing private bonded warehouses, and for other purposes;" and

"An act to change the name of the American-built steamer Falcon."

The question then recurred on the motion that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and, being put, it was decided in the affirmative.

The rules were accordingly suspended, and the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ORR in the chair.)

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The CHAIRMAN stated, that when the committee last rose it had under consideration the annual message of the President of the United States, and the resolutions of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Houston], proposing to refer the same, and that the gentleman from New York [Mr. WHEELER] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I understand from the gentleman from New York that he does not desire to occupy the floor at this time.

Mr. WHEELER. I will waive my right to it in behalf of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine, desired to make a few remarks on a subject which was of general interest. With the doctrine of "manifest destiny," he had but little sympathy, notwithstanding the popularity of that doctrine with many statesmen. He did not believe in our acquiring more territory; but the best way to promote our substantial and lasting welfare was to attend to the home interests of the country—such as removing obstructions in our rivers, the improvement of our harbors, and the construction of a railroad to the Pacific, so that we might combine the interests of the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. These were the legitimate objects of our Government. Following them, we might rely upon permanent success.

Referring to the President's message, he remarked that the exultant satisfaction with which the President seemed to contemplate our foreign relations might, perhaps, induce us to hesitate to unite with him in that exultation, when keeping out of view the great and national objects and pursuits within ourselves requiring legislative care.

By the general terms of the message, when interpreted by the resolutions of 1798, it might be understood as confining the powers of the General Government within the narrowest limits of strict construction. There was a middle ground to be observed. Not opposed to all increase of territory, he did not think that that was the first point of our duty. Its tendency was immoral. Men were more than mountains—more valuable than any extent of barren territory. Governments which looked to territory alone necessarily became weak; while those who attended to the wants of their inhabitants became strong. True, new acquisitions would have to be made by us; but they should be made with due regard to many circumstances involving considerations of interest affecting both the Government receiving those acquisitions, and those coming under the protection of our Government.

On these grounds he was opposed to an annexation of the Sandwich Islands. [Mr. W. here gave a description of the geographical position, products, facilities for trade, &c., of these islands, with their history, as detailed by various authorities; their persons, habits, manners, and other interesting details.] Opposed as he was to annexation at this time, the period might arrive when it would have his approval; but that time must be marked by a sense of justice and the convenience of both parties.

If there were to be any further annexation at all, perhaps the Sandwich Islands had the nearest and best claim. We wanted a home for our whaling ships in the Pacific; the claims of California, too, in this respect, were great; the nearness of a portion of the Russian dominions to our western coast, were all questions which would suggest the value of these islands to the United States.

He noticed some objections which had been urged against their union with the United States; such as the smallness of population; the alleged want of facilities for trade; the colonial system of Europe having failed, &c.; which he combated.

Having endeavored to show that there were many reasons why we should consent to the annexation of those islands, if they desired it, and combated some objections, he addressed a few words to the conservative feeling of the country. He did not entertain the fears expressed by some, that in an extension of our territory we would necessarily become weaker. All our annexations hitherto had added to our strength; and when the Sandwich Islands should be annexed, and the Pacific railroad built, they would be as near to Washington as we were when admitted into the Union; and between unbridled progress and stolid conservatism, there could be no question as to the choice to be preferred in the matter before him.

[Mr. WASHBURN's speech will be found in the Appendix.]

The question now being upon concurring in the resolutions offered by Mr. Houston, distributing the President's message to the appropriate committees, the following resolution was read:

"Resolved, That so much of the annual message of the President of the United States to the two Houses of Congress as relates to our foreign affairs, together with the accompanying correspondence in relation thereto; to the claims of the subjects of Spain for losses in the case of the schooner Amistad; making the boundary line between the United States and the British Provinces on the northwest, as designated in the convention of the 15th June, 1846, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs."

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I desire to amend that resolution. This is the first time I ever knew debate in this House to be stopped for want of any one to take the floor, and I am taken a little by surprise. I, however, desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, [Mr. Houston,] to the subject, and I will state my amendment verbally. I move to amend by referring so much of the President's message as relates to the guano question to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have no objection to that amendment. I think it is covered substantially by the resolution as before the committee. I will, however, accept the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. BAYLY. I think the resolutions specify some other subjects. My impression is that the subject, connected as it is with our foreign relations, goes to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, without being particularly specified. I, however, wish that it may be specified, that there may be no mistake about it.

Mr. EWING. My attention was diverted for a moment. Do I understand this resolution as proposing to stop debate in Committee of the Whole?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to the resolutions for the distribution, among the standing committees of the House, of the President's message.

Mr. EWING. It is my desire to make a short speech, and I could do it as conveniently now as at any other time if I had a few authorities here to which I wish to refer. But not knowing that the House would go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to-day, I have left those authorities at home, and without them I can not speak.

Mr. CAMPBELL. If the gentleman will give way for that purpose, I will move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. EWING. I will yield the floor for that purpose.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. HAVEN. I would suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that we might lay aside this order of business, and take up one of the small appropriation bills that we could push along.

Mr. HOUSTON. I was just going to ask that that course should be pursued.

Mr. CAMPBELL. There is business in the House proper that we can transact. We need not adjourn at once.

Mr. CLINGMAN. We can take up the business on the Speaker's table.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order, as the gentleman from Ohio declines to accede to the suggestion of the gentleman from New York, and withdrew the motion for the committee to rise.

The question was taken on Mr. CAMPBELL's motion, and it was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. Jones, of Tennessee,) having taken the chair, the chairman (Mr. Orr) reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration, according to order, the state of the Union generally, and particularly the annual message of the President of the United States, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move that the House do now proceed to the business on the Speaker's table.

The motion was agreed to.

LIEUTENANT GENERAL BY BREVET.

The SPEAKER pro tempore stated that the first business in order on the Speaker's table was a joint resolution from the Senate, "authorizing the President of the United States to confer the title of lieutenant general, by brevet, for eminent services."

The joint resolution was taken from the Speaker's table, and read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. BISSELL. I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HILLYER. I move that it be laid upon the table.

Mr. BISSELL. I hope the gentleman from Georgia will give that joint resolution at least some little chance. I think a very proper disposition of it would be to refer it to a committee.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion that the joint resolution do lie upon the table.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I ask for the reading of the resolution.

The Clerk read the resolution.

Mr. HILLYER. It is due to myself that I should say—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Debate is not in order. The gentleman has made a motion to lay the joint resolution upon the table.

Mr. HILLYER. I withdraw that motion for the present.

Mr. HILLYER. It is due to myself, Mr. Speaker, and it is due to General Scott, that I should say to the House, that, in submitting the motion to lay this joint resolution upon the table, I am actuated by no disrespect to that distinguished individual; nor do I desire it to be considered as any evidence that I do not appreciate most highly his invaluable military services to his country. My opposition to this resolution is predicated upon the ground that it is not a suitable testimonial to the worth of an American citizen. I look upon the title which is proposed to be conferred as a mere title of nobility, as an honor which our Constitution condemns, and which, also, the taste, feeling, and judgment of our people condemn. These are the reasons which have actuated me in making the motion to lay the resolution upon the table. The subject is not a new one to members; it has been before us before; and I apprehend that the judgment of members is made up. Therefore I renew the motion to lay upon the table.

Mr. WHEELER. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I wish the gentleman from Georgia would withdraw his motion to lay upon the table, so that the joint resolution may be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. Yesterday I acceded promptly to the passage of a resolution introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Bissell] complimenting General Wool.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is aware that discussion is not now in order.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am aware of that fact. I endeavored to get the ear of the Speaker before the motion to lay upon the table was submitted, but did not succeed in doing so.

Mr. HILLYER. At the suggestion of several members, I will withdraw my motion to lay upon the table.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is not my purpose to detain the House by any extended remarks on this question.

Mr. PRATT. I rise to a question of order. Can the gentleman debate the proposition after the call for the previous question has been made?

The SPEAKER. The call for the previous question has not been made. The motion to lay upon the table having been withdrawn, discussion is now in order.

Mr. TAYLOR. It will be recollected by gentlemen that this joint resolution passed the Senate of the United States at the last session of Congress with great unanimity.

The SPEAKER. With the permission of the gentleman, the Chair will state that the question now before the House is the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TAYLOR. So I understand. I will detain the House but a moment. If it be the disposition of members to refer this resolution to the Committee on Military Affairs, I am perfectly willing that such action shall be had. After examination, I trust that the Committee on Military Affairs will report it back, and that then we shall do this act of tardy justice to one of the most eminent military men that the world has ever seen. Yesterday a proper compliment was paid to General Wool, with a unanimity of which I was proud. Why should we withhold this tribute of respect and applause, dearer to a soldier than all the pay this Congress could vote him? Why should we oppose it when the whole country is disposed to award it, to him? I trust that the motion to refer will prevail.

Mr. WHEELER. I am desirous of having this question acted on at once; and rather than the resolution should go to the Committee on Military Affairs, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CLINGMAN. If the House now adjourn, will this resolution be the first business in order in the morning, when we get to the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER, (Mr. Jones, of Tennessee, in the chair.) The present occupant of the chair is of opinion that it will be. He cannot say, however, what the decision of the Speaker will be when the question is raised in the morning.

The question was taken, and the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. BRIDGES. I move to lay the resolution upon the table.

Mr. WHEELER demanded the yeas and nays on the motion to lay upon the table, and they were ordered.

The question was then taken on laying the resolution on the table, and there were—yeas 56, nays 82; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Ashe, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bridges, Caskey, Chastain, Churchwell, Cobb, Cutting, John G. Davis, Dowdell, Drum, Eastman, English, Fuller, Giddings, Grow, Hamilton, Sampson W. Harris, Hena, Hillyer, Houston, Johnson, Daniel T. Jones, George W. Jones, Roland Jones, Kidwell, Lamb, Letcher, Lilly, Macdonald, McNair, McQueen, Maxwell, May, Millson, Morrison, Murray, Noble, Orr, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Pratt, Robbins, Ruffin, Singleton, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, George W. Smyth, Andrew Stuart, Vail, Walsh, and Daniel B. Wright—56.

NAYS—Messrs. Abercrombie, Aiken, Appleton, Thomas, H. Bayly, Ball, Benson, Bissell, Breckinridge, Brooks, Campbell, Carpenter, Chandler, Clark, Clingman, Corwin, Cox, Craige, Crocker, Cullom, Cumming, Dawson, Disney, Dunbar, Eddy, Edmonds, Edmundson, Etheridge, Everhart, Ewing, Farley, Fenton, Florence, Greenwood, Hastings, Haven, Heister, Hill, Hughes, Hunt, Ingersoll, Kerr, Knox, Latham, Lindley, McCulloch, Middleswarth, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Norton, Andrew Oliver, Parker, Peckham, Phillips, Preston, Puryear, Ready, Reese, David Ritchie, Thomas Ritchey, Rogers, Russell, Sabin, Sapp, Shannon, Shaw, Showet, William R. Smith, Snodgrass, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Straub, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Tracy, Walbridge, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Tappan Wentworth, Wheeler, Yates, and Zollicoffer—82.

So the motion to lay the resolution on the table was rejected.

Mr. BISSELL. The question now is on the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The question on such reference was put, and decided in the affirmative.

Mr. DRUM. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put, and the motion was not agreed to.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. WHEELER called for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn; but they were not ordered.

A MEMBER. I call for tellers.

Tellers were not ordered.

Mr. HAVEN. I hope the House will sit for a few minutes longer, till the bills on the table be appropriately referred. We can put them under way, and then adjourn.

LAND CLAIMS IN CALIFORNIA.

The first business upon the Speaker's table was Senate bill to continue in force "An act entitled 'an act to ascertain and settle private land claims in California, and for other purposes,'" which was taken up, and read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. LATHAM. I do not want to consume the time of the House, but I wish to have this bill put upon its passage.

Several MEMBERS. "No, no!"

Mr. LATHAM. Then I move that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The question was put, and the motion was agreed to.

RIVERS AND HARBORS.

The next business in order on the Speaker's table, was Senate bill to amend an act making an appropriation for the improvement of certain harbors and rivers, approved August 30, 1852; which was taken up, read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HIESTER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put, and the motion was disagreed to.

BOOKS TO MEMBERS.

The next business in order was joint resolution from the Senate, entitled "Resolution for supplying new members of the Senate and House of Representatives with such books of a public character as have been heretofore supplied;" which was read a first and second time by its title.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move the reference of that resolution to the Joint Committee on the Library. I call for its reading.

No objection being made, the resolution was read, as follows:

"That each of the new members of the two Houses of Congress be supplied with the same number and description of such books of a public character, as were supplied to each member of the Senate or House of Representatives during the last Congress, provided they be furnished by the publisher at prices not exceeding those at which they have been heretofore furnished, for the use of either House."

Mr. FLORENCE. As this is a question in which almost every new member of Congress is interested, and as the House seems to be very thin, and a large number of the new members absent, I move that the House do now adjourn, so that tomorrow there may be a sufficient number of members present to insure a fair discussion of the question.

[Cries of "No!" "No!" "Vote it down!"] The question was taken, and the motion was not agreed to.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. CULLOM. I regard this resolution as proper. It has been considered by the Senate, and it is in pursuance of immemorial usage in this branch of the National Legislature. I hope the resolution will receive no serious opposition from any part of this House.

Mr. CLINGMAN. This is a proposition which I have regularly opposed for a good many sessions, and I shall do so again. But before saying anything upon the subject, or making any motion, I will ask the Chair whether there is contained in the joint resolution any appropriation which requires it to be referred?

Many MEMBERS. "No!" "No!"

Mr. CULLOM. I wish to ask the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] a question, and that is, whether, though he has opposed the adoption of similar resolutions heretofore, has he not, after they have been passed, received the benefit of them?

Mr. CLINGMAN. I thank the gentleman for the opportunity he has afforded me, and I now say to him that I have never received a single book under these and similar resolutions. I stated during the last Congress, that though I was entitled to books under the resolutions passed from time to time, yet if the House would stop the practice of donating them, I would decline the books to which I have been entitled for the last ten years. I thought it was well to stop this practice, and voted against it upon a call of the yeas and nays, and hope I shall have an opportunity to do so again.

If we are to take all the books which are voted by those who precede us, where is the system ever to stop? If we pass this resolution, we get all the books which have been ordered by previous Congresses, to be distributed among their members. Why not limit it to the books ordered to be published by each Congress? If you go on as heretofore, the result will be that, in the end, the Treasury will feel very sensibly this large appropriation. I say if the practice continues, I shall take my books and give them to some public library or literary institution.

I wish gentlemen to understand that the cost of these books is some seven or eight hundred dollars for each member. If a contribution of this amount is to be made, I should prefer to have it in some other shape.

Mr. CAMPBELL, (interrupting.) The resolution does not propose, I believe, to reprint any of the books. I see no reason why the books already on hand may not be distributed.

Mr. CLINGMAN. They are not in our hands, unfortunately. That remark is one of the things which are thrown in to deceive new members; and the idea may be created that we have these books already paid for, and that they can be had as well as not. It is a mistake altogether. These books will be bought as other books are.

I wish gentlemen to understand the matter, though I am well aware that it is difficult for us, who are entitled under former acts, to be heard upon the subject. Yet why not stop the practice here?

I will now say to that gentleman, and my friends, that I will relinquish my right to any books to which I may be entitled. I have not taken them yet, and I will give an order of relinquishment, if this Congress will stop this practice. Unless we do begin to stop it ourselves, we shall go on ad infinitum with such distribution, and incur, in consequence, a large expenditure. It was not my purpose to make any remarks upon the subject. My desire is, simply to ask for the yeas and nays, that I may have an opportunity of placing myself right upon the record, and before the country. The Twenty-Seventh Congress made an order for books, and I believe the then members got them; but they did not get half as many as we should on the passage of this resolution. Why not go back, and say, in addition to our present per diem and mileage, that we will take the per diem and mileage of previous Congresses. I see no difference between these cases. I hope that the yeas and nays will be ordered. A gentleman near me suggests, that some members sell these books, instead of retaining them, or giving them to some literary institution in their districts. I know not how the fact is, but I have heard that remark again and again. I now say, what I will say upon any other occasion, that if any gentleman has made such a disposition of his books, I would vote to expel him from the House. I should consider it as a fraud upon the order, if any member should sell these books, instead of distributing them to his district as primarily contemplated.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield me the floor an instant?

Mr. CLINGMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL. This imputation has been thrown out to-day; and I have heard it before whenever this question has been presented. I think it is time to put an end to this general slander upon the character of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina cannot yield the floor to the gentleman to make a speech.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I simply wish to make an explanation. If the gentleman who makes this charge against members, and sends it forth to the world, is not prepared to give us some information by which the persons who have been guilty of so high a misdemeanor can be exposed, I think he ought to withdraw it. As one member, I do not feel like indorsing any portion of such a charge thus indefinitely made. If the gentleman who makes the charge knows it to be true, I call upon him in his place to name the member, in order that those who are not guilty may relieve themselves from the imputation thus cast upon their character. For my own part I voted, when I was interested, against this thing, but I have always voted for it since. I am in favor of the distribution of these books, and will go for it now, believing that we do better service to the country by sending them abroad into the libraries of our congressional districts than we do by a great many other appropriations that we make. It would be much better to take from the gun-manufacturing branch of the public service the amount that is necessary to distribute this useful information. I should like to have the gentleman who makes the charge specify the names of such members as have sold their books.

Mr. PRATT. I do not understand that the gentleman from North Carolina charged any one with having sold books delivered to him by order of the House. He stated that he had heard that such things happened.

Mr. CLINGMAN. A gentleman upon my left asked me the question whether such was the fact. I stated that I had heard such a report, but did not know that it was so. I concur with the gentleman from Ohio as to the impropriety of such a thing, and I do not know that any member was ever guilty of such an act. I have felt this thing sensibly, for this reason: I have endeavored, for three years together, in common with others, to reduce certain expenditures of the Government; and we are met in the newspapers by the allegation that we are in the habit of voting books to ourselves, and wasting a great deal of money for other purposes. You cannot propose any measure for preventing any abuse in the Army or Navy without this very thing being thrown in your teeth.

I believe this distribution of books among the members is not an expenditure which the wants of the country demand. I agree with the gentleman, however, that it is important to distribute works of this character among the public libraries of the country; and if any gentleman will introduce a bill proposing such a distribution, or a distribution to one such library in each congressional district, I will vote for it.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. A single word with reference to selling these books. I want to ask the gentleman from North Carolina a question—and I premise it by saying that I never sold a book furnished me in this manner in my life—whether it is not a fact, that any gentleman who may have received these books for his own use is at liberty to dispose of them as he may think proper?

Mr. CLINGMAN. I have no doubt that he is, as a matter of law; but, as I have already said, the object of the House in voting these books is, undoubtedly, that they shall be used for public purposes, and not for the benefit of the individual members. And I repeat what I have already said, that whenever a member, instead of disposing of books voted him for that purpose, by giving them to some public library, or by disposing of them in some manner for the public benefit,—undertakes to make money out of them, I would not only regard it as a very discreditable act, but I would vote to expel any such member, because it would be an abuse of sufficient magnitude to warrant some decided action upon the part of the House.

You, Mr. Speaker, will remember—I allude to the present occupant of the chair [Mr. JONES, of Tennessee]—that during a former Congress you and I discussed the matter of adopting some regulation by which this system could be stopped; and we came to the conclusion that nothing better could be done than to put a clause into a general appropriation bill that should prevent either House from distributing books of this description by its own vote—requiring a joint resolution, passed by both Houses of Congress, and signed by the President, to effect the object. Such a provision was introduced, by way of amendment, into an appropriation bill the last Congress, and adopted. The result is, that here we have a joint resolution coming from the Senate to accomplish the same purpose.

Now, I desire that this resolution shall go to the Library Committee—if that is the appropriate one—that they may look at the matter, and see whether they cannot devise some other arrangement for the distribution of these books, which shall accomplish the purpose designed by the distribution, and, at the same time, relieve members from the odium to which they are exposed under the present system.

If you are to carry out this system by continuing to multiply indefinitely every book which has ever been ordered to be printed by Congress for the use of members, it is a perversion of the functions of Congress. We might as well vote the money to ourselves as an addition to our salaries.

I have made these remarks by way of justifying my own course, and not with any expectation of changing the result. I presume gentlemen have already made up their minds as to the course they are to pursue with reference to it, and will vote accordingly. What I want to explain is, that in asking for the yeas and nays upon the passage of the resolution, and in recording my vote against its passage, I am not actuated by any narrow, mean feeling in excluding others from an advantage which has been accorded to me under the law.

Mr. HAVEN. I will only detain the House with a single remark in reference to the resolution under consideration. I think it is one that the House will pass whenever it comes up.

As I understand the resolution, I mean to vote for it when it is properly reported from a committee; but I should not like it to go out to the country that we apply a mode of legislation to ourselves which we refuse to our constituents and to the public service. Let the bill be referred, in the ordinary way, to a committee, and I pledge myself to give it my support when it comes back into the House, unless, indeed, I see something decidedly objectionable in it.

Mr. SKELTON obtained the floor.

Mr. HILLYER. I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman cannot submit that motion.

Mr. HILLYER. Why not, sir?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Because the gentleman was not recognized by the Chair. The floor was assigned to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. SKELTON. I will not detain the House long. I desire only to say a word or two. It may have been supposed by the House, from the remarks of several gentlemen who rose when I asked the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] a question; that I made a charge against the House. That was not the case. I merely propounded a question to the gentleman who was upon the floor.

But this much I have to say, sir, without bringing any charge against any member of this House, that if gentlemen on this floor are so sensitive upon these points, and about these rumors which I have heard outside of the Hall, they can ask for the appointment of a committee, and the affair can be fully examined into.

I make no charge against any one. I am not prepared, nor do I intend to make any—

Mr. CAMPBELL, (interrupting.) Will the gentleman yield me the floor for one moment?

Mr. SKELTON. I have said all I desire to say upon the subject. I yield the floor.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I suppose the gentleman from New Jersey alludes to me, as one of those who exhibit some degree of sensitiveness about this matter, as I spoke of the fact that I had heard of these things before. I have to say to him, that I, for my own part, have no sort of feeling on this subject, other than a desire to protect the characters of the members of this House from a little, low, petty system of wholesale slander. That is all.

Now, if the gentleman from New Jersey has heard these rumors, and is satisfied, from his information, that this outrage has been committed, he, sir, is derelict in duty as a member of this House, if he does not bring the fact before it, and ask for a committee.

Mr. SKELTON. I state again that I have brought no charge against the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The gentleman talks of "rumor." Now, sir, of all the liars that I have ever heard or read of, "Common Rumor" is the greatest; and, for one, I hope that I may never come into this House and make an insinuation that affects the integrity of its members, and then give as my author, "Rumor."

If the gentleman from New Jersey has such information on this subject as will justify him in bringing a charge of this kind against any member of the House, I assert that he is derelict in his duty in not making that charge, and demanding a committee of inquiry. "Sensitive gentlemen" are not coming here to ask this House to appoint a committee to investigate any subject which can be traced to no source further back than to Madam Rumor, known to be the greatest liar ever heard or read of. I shall not ask for any such committee; and I hope that, hereafter, we shall hear no more of these charges, unless gentlemen are prepared to give the House such information as will induce it to appoint a committee, and have an investigation. I now move the previous question.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I ask my colleague to withdraw the demand for the previous question for a few moments, to allow me to say a word or two. [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will do it, if my colleague will renew the demand when he has said what he desires to say.

Mr. GIDDINGS. I will do so.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then I withdraw the demand for the previous question.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Mr. Speaker, this same discussion has taken place, I believe, in every Congress for the last twenty years. The books that are the present subject of debate contain the political history of our Government, which can be found in no other books. That matter has never been and never will be published by private enterprise; and unless it be distributed in the manner proposed, the people of the United States will never get it. It is on this principle that Congress has adopted the system of distributing these documents through its members. They are sent to each district, and the inhabitants have uniformly free access to them as common records. For one, I have ever held that I had not a particle of interest in these books. I have bestowed them upon the county of which I am a resident, and its commissioner has regarded them as the nucleus of a political library. Every man there has free access to them.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the great leading policy which ought to characterize statesmen is the diffusion of information throughout the land; to inform, enlighten, and elevate the people, to give them a perfect knowledge of all that has transpired in the carrying on of our Government, and particularly the transactions of both Houses of Congress. I do not know but that the power to distribute these documents has been abused; if it has, the people of the district affected by such abuse can correct it. I am willing to trust the people of each district to see that their Representative does not dispose of his books in any improper manner. As to how they are distributed is no matter to us here. Let us send this information out, and let the people have it. Of the fifty millions of dollars that are expended annually, look at the small and pitiful sum expended for the increase of the intelligence of the community. I have ever advocated the system proposed in the resolution, and I advocate it now most heartily. I shall vote as willingly for it now as I have done for the last fifteen or sixteen years.

Mr. MIDDLESWARTH. I am a new member here, and should be very much obliged if any of the gentlemen who have been here before would enumerate what kind of books will be covered by the resolution. I desire to vote understandingly.

Mr. GIDDINGS. Among the books which will be covered by the resolution, will be the American Archives; The American State Papers, consisting of twenty-two large volumes; The Congressional Globe and Appendix, from its commencement, will be the next in importance; then will follow the Madison Papers, and the Debates in the Convention which framed the Constitution of the United States, as well as the Debates in the Conventions of the several States on the Adoption of the Constitution; Gales & Seaton's Register of Debates, Elliot's Debates, and the Annals of Congress, which consist of some eight or ten volumes. I cannot enumerate them all; but those I have named are some of them.

Mr. PRESTON. I presume that the House has sufficient information in reference to the question, which is merely one of reference, and I therefore call for the previous question.

The call for the previous question was seconded, and the main question was ordered to be put.

Mr. WHEELER. I demand tellers on the question.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. CAMPBELL and BRIDGES were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 46, noes 63; no quorum voting.

Mr. ORR. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly, at half-past three o'clock, adjourned.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, January 5, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. BADGER. I desire, before petitions are called for, to move that when the Senate adjourns to-day, it be to meet on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

EMPLOYEES IN THE SECRETARY'S OFFICE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a report from the Secretary of the Senate, containing a list of the persons employed in his office; which was ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. BADGER presented the petition of R. Piermont, M. Woodall, and others, praying compensation for saving the United States ships Karitan and Vandalia from destruction by fire, on the 11th October, 1847; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WADE presented the petition of Isaac Cook, Benjamin A. Napier, and Pelatiah Shepherd, praying compensation for the schooner Tempest, which was pressed into the service of the Government in 1814, by order of the General Government; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DAWSON presented the petition of Colonel Talcott, of the United States Army, and Dr. John M. Galt, asking increase of compensation; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a petition from the inspectors of customs at the port of Baltimore, asking an increase of compensation; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BUTLER presented the petition of the American Medical Association, praying that a regular physician may be employed upon all vessels having a certain number of seamen; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. JAMES presented the petition of L. P. Holliday & Co., praying Congress for the lease of public grounds for the erection of a first-class public house in Washington city; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. GWIN presented the memorial of James McCormick, praying the payment of an amount due him under a contract with Commodore Jones, while commanding the United States squadron in the Pacific; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HUNTER presented the petition of the heirs-at-law of Captain Thomas Buckner, and others, praying payment of depreciation on commutation certificates received under the resolution of October 21, 1783; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. MASON presented the memorial of Mrs. Mary Ray, asking for a grant of bounty land for the services of her husband in the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, the petition of Mrs. Margaret C. Hanson, asking that a pension be allowed to her for the services of her husband in the Florida war, and that the pension may be dated from the day of his death; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. BELL, it was Ordered, That the petition of Jehial Brooks be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

On motion by Mr. JONES, of Iowa, it was Ordered, That the petition of Mrs. Pamela Brown, heretofore presented, be taken from the table and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

On motion by Mr. BELL, it was Ordered, That the papers relative to the claim of the legal representatives of Richard M. Johnson be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, it was Ordered, That the petition of Thomas Butler be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

On motion by Mr. CASS, it was Ordered, That the petition and accompanying papers in the case of Pamela Hook be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. JOHNSON, it was

On motion by Mr. DAWSON, it was Ordered, That the memorial of members of the bar of the District of Columbia, praying for an increase of the compensation of the judge of the orphans' court in the District, be withdrawn from the files, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

On motion by Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, it was Ordered, That the petition of A. D. Stuart be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

COMMITTEE ON PENSIONS.

On motion by Mr. JONES, of Iowa, under instructions from the Committee on Pensions, it was Ordered, That the President pro tempore appoint an additional member of the Committee on Pensions.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. JOHNSON gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill granting to the new States an additional section of land in each township for school purposes.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to establish an additional land office in the State of Iowa.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. FOOT. I desire to give notice of my intention to ask leave to introduce a bill providing for the construction of a railroad between the Mississippi river and the Pacific coast. Being, sir, somewhat of a practical railroad man, I propose to offer to the consideration of the Senate a plan differing in some of its features from any of the plans which have, as yet, been submitted. I shall, therefore, ask the indulgence of the Senate to explain its provisions, upon its introduction.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. MALLORY, agreeably to previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to establish a new land district in the State of Florida, to be called the district of Tampa; which was read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

REMOVAL OF FLORIDA INDIANS.

Mr. MALLORY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to communicate to the Senate the amount of public money received and expended by Luther Blake, late agent of the United States for the removal of Indians from Florida, as such agent, with the objects for which said money was expended, and the number of Indians removed by him.

HARBORS ON LAKE SUPERIOR.

Mr. CASS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be instructed to inquire into the expediency of making an appropriation for the survey of the harbors on Lake Superior, within the limits of the United States.

PURCHASE OF PLANETARIUMS.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be instructed to inquire into the expediency of purchasing three of Thomas H. Barlow's planetariums for the use of West Point Military Academy, Annapolis Naval School, and the National Observatory.

TERRITORY OF NEBRASKA.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I offer the following order:

Ordered, That the bill for organizing the Territory of Nebraska be annexed, in document form, to the extra copies of the report accompanying that bill, which have been heretofore ordered to be printed.

It will be remembered that the Senate yesterday made an order to print five thousand additional copies of the report on this subject. It was suggested by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. PRATT] that the printing of extra numbers of the bill, beyond the usual number laid on the tables of Senators, would be an unnecessary expense. The order which I now propose, and which I hope will be adopted, provides that extra copies of the bill shall be printed in document form, and be annexed to the report, and be made a part of the same document with it. The report will be very incomplete and unsatisfactory without the bill; we might as well, in fact, not order the printing of the report. I learn from the Superintendent of Printing that this printing will cost a very trifling amount—but $34 20. I hope the order will be adopted.

The order was agreed to.

CENSUS PRINTING.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report adversely on the resolution of Wednesday, December 21, directing the committee to inquire into the expediency of printing twenty thousand copies of the Abstract of the Seventh Census, printed by order of the House of Representatives at the last session of Congress. The resolution on which the committee have acted was offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania, [Mr. BRODHEAD.] I will state the reasons for the report. The committee have directed the preparation of an abstract, in accordance with the recommendation of the Superintendent of the Census, which will embrace a volume of some two or three hundred pages that will be really worth something, and vastly more desirable for general circulation than the abstract to which the resolution of the Senator from Pennsylvania refers. Under these circumstances I am directed to report adversely, and I hope the report will now be acted upon.

Mr. BRODHEAD. I have no objection to the consideration of the resolution at this time; but from the fact that we are constantly written to for this Abstract of the Census, we may presume that our constituents generally think that it is published. I should, therefore, like to inquire of the Senator from Maine how soon we may expect the abstract to which he refers?

Mr. HAMLIN. It is impossible for me to say how soon it will be published. A vast amount of matter has been collected, and unless this abstract be taken out of its order, it will necessarily take some time before it will be printed. I cannot answer as to the length of time which will elapse before its publication; but it will be done as early as possible.

The report of the committee was considered and concurred in.

LAND OFFICE REPORT.

Mr. HAMLIN. I am directed by the Committee on Printing to report back the order offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHIELDS] in relation to printing five hundred copies of the General Land Office Report, with an amendment.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment; which was to insert after the word "printed" the words "for the use of the Land Office;" so that it shall read:

"That five hundred additional copies of the Report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, which accompanied the President's message, be printed for the use of the Land Office."

The amendment was agreed to; and the resolution, as amended, was adopted.

DEPARTMENTAL BUILDINGS.

Mr. HUNTER. I offer a resolution of inquiry, which I ask may now be considered:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings inquire into the expediency of providing by law for the erection of a suitable building for the Department of State.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I would suggest the propriety of inserting the other Departments which need additional accommodation—the Departments of War and the Interior, and others.

Mr. HUNTER. This is merely a resolution of inquiry; but if the question were before us for action I think I could show the gentleman that we had better first go on and complete the buildings which have already been commenced. As originally designed, the building to be occupied by the Department of State is to form a portion of the quadrangle of which the Treasury building constituted one side.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That is no doubt correct; but my suggestion was as to the propriety of extending the inquiry to proper buildings for the other Departments which need them. I suppose the honorable Senator can have no objection to that.

Mr. HUNTER. I did not understand the gentleman before: I have no objection to the amendment which he suggests.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I move to amend the resolution by adding "Interior, War, and the Navy," so as to include "the Departments of State, Interior, War, and the Navy."

Mr. HUNTER. I accept the amendment. The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

CLAYTON-BULWER TREATY.

Mr. CASS. I move to refer the President's message communicating certain correspondence in reference to the treaty of July 4, 1850, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on Foreign Relations, in the hope that the Senate will make the motion the order of the day for Tuesday, so that the subject may then be taken up and considered. I believe the Senator from Delaware [Mr. CLAYTON] is perfectly agreed with this course. I move also that the consideration of the motion to refer be postponed to, and made the order of the day for Tuesday next.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOSEPH MITCHELL.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill for the relief of Joseph Mitchell, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands without amendment.

It proposes to direct the proper accounting officers of the Government to examine the claim of Joseph Mitchell, of the State of Maine, a soldier in the late war with Great Britain, for bounty land and arrearages of pay and bounty; and to direct them to issue to him a warrant for such land, and pay him such arrearages, as would be his due if he had received an honorable discharge on the expiration of his term of enlistment at the close of the war.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read a third time, and passed.

RESOLUTIONS CONSIDERED.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolutions lying on the table.

The PRESIDENT announced that the first in order was the resolution of the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. DODGE,] to amend the rules, so as to provide that in all elections of officers the vote shall be viva voce.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. I hope that resolution will be passed over this morning; but I shall ask the Senate to consider it on Monday morning.

The PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over. The next resolution is one submitted by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. CHASE,] to provide that all proceedings shall be with open doors, unless otherwise ordered.

Mr. CHASE. I propose to call up that resolution on Monday morning. Let it be passed over for the present.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, January 5, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. APPLETON presented the credentials of Hon. SAMUEL H. WALLEY, a Representative from Massachusetts.

He was presented to the Speaker, and took the usual oath to support the Constitution.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication received from the Treasury Department, announcing the loss of the revenue cutter Hamilton, wrecked on Folly breakers, off Charleston harbor, on the 9th of December last, and recommending an appropriation of $60,000 for the building of four new revenue cutters, and also to increase the compensation now allowed to naval officers, petty officers, gunners, and marines on the Pacific coast.

On motion by Mr. HOUSTON, it was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, inclosing, for the consideration of the House, a copy of a letter addressed to that Department by R. J. Hammond, collector at San Francisco, and Samuel J. Bridges, general appraiser for California, representing the insufficiency in point of size of the rented building now occupied as an appraiser's store, and recommending the construction of a building one hundred and twenty feet by forty-five feet ten inches for that purpose.

On motion by Mr. HOUSTON, it was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, laid before the House a communication from the War Department, transmitting a report of the Colonel of Engineers, with maps and estimates, showing the practicability and expediency of deepening and otherwise improving the basin of the Mississippi.

On motion by Mr. FULLER, the matter was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

On motion by Mr. LETCHER, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Claims be discharged from the consideration of the petition of Jonathan Lewis, and that it be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

THANKS OF CONGRESS TO D. N. INGRAHAM.

Mr. DEAN, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the resolutions relating to the presentation of the thanks of Congress to Duncan N. Ingraham, reported back the same with a substitute; which was read as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled, That the thanks of Congress be, and they are hereby, presented to Duncan N. Ingraham, commanding the United States sloop-of-war, St. Louis, for his judicious and gallant conduct on the second day of July last, in extending the protection of the American Government to Martin Koszta, by rescuing him from forcible and illegal seizure and imprisonment on board the Austrian brig Hussar.

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to cause to be made a medal, with suitable devices, and presented to Captain Duncan N. Ingraham, as a testimonial of the high sense entertained by Congress of his valor, promptness, and judicious conduct on the above-mentioned occasion.

Resolved, That the President of the United States cause the foregoing resolutions to be communicated to Captain Duncan N. Ingraham in such terms as he may deem best calculated to give effect to the objects thereof.

Mr. DEAN. As there is no proper place to which to refer these resolutions, and as they are reported here by a committee, and are a mere declaration of thanks to Captain Ingraham, without asserting anything as to the citizenship of Koszta, I hope the House will consent to their immediate passage; and if there is no one who desires to speak upon the subject, I move the previous question.

Mr. CLINGMAN called for tellers upon the demand for the previous question; which were ordered; and Messrs. HARRIS and CAMPBELL were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 55, noes not counted.

The SPEAKER. There not being a majority of a quorum, the proposition falls.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. ORR. I was absent for a single moment, and was somewhat surprised that the previous question was not seconded in this matter. I suppose no debate is necessary in regard to the resolution. If the House understand it, I presume there will be no objection to passing it, as it has been reported unanimously by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I have so understood it.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. The committee were unanimous in reporting it.

Mr. ORR. The resolutions which were originally offered by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DEAN,] are changed. They provided for giving a sword to Captain Ingraham; but the committee have changed the direction, and provide for presenting him with a medal.

Mr. BAYLY. Do I understand the gentleman from South Carolina to say that that is the only change?

Mr. ORR. I think that is the only one.

Mr. BAYLY. Then my friend is mistaken. The resolutions have been changed in more respects than that. We not only changed the direction from a sword to a medal, because we regarded the conduct of Captain Ingraham as rather civil than military, but we changed it very essentially in other particulars. We avoided all questions about citizenship. If the House will look at the resolutions, they will find that we thank Captain Ingraham for nothing but judicious conduct in extending protection to a man illegally imprisoned. The ground of the extension of that protection is not settled at all. It was by design, and properly, too, that we did not go into that question. We merely thank him for his prompt and judicious conduct in extending the protection of our nationality over Koszta, to which he was undoubtedly entitled. All controverted questions that had been brought up have been carefully left out; and, in this case, I do not hesitate to say, properly and judiciously left out.

Mr. MILLSON. Will my colleague yield the floor, to allow me to ask a question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] is entitled to the floor, and yielded to the gentleman from Virginia for explanation. The gentleman, therefore, has no right to yield the floor.

Mr. ORR. I desire that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MILLSON] shall propound his question to his colleague, and will yield the floor for that purpose.

Mr. MILLSON. I was about to ask my colleague, [Mr. BAYLY,] who I supposed was entitled to the floor, if there was any necessity for the immediate consideration of these joint resolutions?

I am informed—and I gather as much from the remarks just made by my colleague—that the resolutions referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs have been materially changed by that committee.

The resolutions are long, and, affecting as they do our foreign relations, they ought to be carefully considered.

Now, sir, I have no hesitation in saying that I have never entertained a doubt that the justification of the conduct of Captain Ingraham was complete; but not for many of the reasons which have been assigned. I concur in much of the reasoning contained in the letter of the Secretary of State upon this subject; but I am anxious to see that no resolution passed, by the House shall commit Congress to any questionable principle; and for this reason I greatly desire that this matter should be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that it shall there be taken up at some convenient day—at some early day—and disposed of as may seem proper.

I make these remarks, not with a view of interposing any obstacle to the passage of the resolutions, but for the purpose of giving me an opportunity of becoming assured for myself that they are in such terms, and contain such sentiments, as I shall be willing to subscribe to. I can see no necessity for any immediate action in relation to them, and I hope, therefore, that they will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BAYLY. I dislike to trespass upon the time of my friend from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR,] and will not proceed further if he objects.

Mr. ORR. Go on.

Mr. BAYLY. Then, as the gentleman has no objection, I will say a word in reply to my colleague, [Mr. MILLSON.] Now, in respect to the proposition to refer to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, let us look at it. When the resolutions were first introduced by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DEAN,] I took the ground that they should go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I did it for a reason that I did not choose to assign at the time. I did it because I thought in framing them he had followed too closely precedents set in other cases, and especially in one case which I had in view. I thought if we could get them into the Committee on Foreign Affairs, composed of such gentlemen as the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CHANDLER,] and others who are known to this House—I mention that gentleman particularly, because he is known to be, what he prides himself upon being, not only a Whig, but a Federalist—[laughter]—he has been an editor, and is an able critic; he understands the use of the English language—I say I thought that a committee of that sort, if they met together to talk over their phraseology, could, after a while, get them nearly right. Well, we did meet and talk them over. We made suggestions, and we made amendments, and at last we got the resolutions in such a shape that the committee agreed to them unanimously; and they have been reported back to the House by the gentleman from New York.

My colleague wants to send them now to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. Cui bono? To talk over the language of them again? To get them right again? Why, sir, this matter of paying a compliment amounts to nothing if it is grudgingly and tardily done.

My colleague asks what is the occasion of immediate action? That is partly the occasion for immediate action. But beyond that, I undertake to say here, we have taken in this matter a new department in respect to our foreign affairs. If I may be excused for using technical expressions, this nation has been constantly the plaintiff. We have always been after other nations for what they have done to us. Now, I am tired of seeing this nation eternally the plaintiff. I want a new era. I want to see this nation sometimes the defendant. I say it emphatically, and I wish it to go out to the country. Not only is that my opinion, but I believe that it is the opinion of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. We are tired of eternally being the plaintiff; we want to be the defendant sometimes.

I approve of Captain Ingraham's conduct, thoroughly and entirely. The resolutions avoid assigning the reason for that approval, and, in my opinion, properly so. There is the judgment; every member of this court may assign his own reason for it, and I do not care one cent whether the reason is a good one or not if the judgment is right. I think the judgment is right. It does not matter a particle whether Koszta was an American citizen or not. I presume no one claims that he was a citizen, but he was entitled to American protection; he was illegally seized in violation of the laws of nations; he was imprisoned in violation of law; and I do not care whether he was an American citizen or not. Further than that, I do not care whether he was entitled to American protection or not.

I shall not go on with that idea. But I do maintain that there are cases in which we may interfere in defense of humanity, and for the prevention of wrongful injuries, even when we are not bound to interfere. I draw a distinction between where you are bound to do and where you may do it. But, sir, it seems to me that this debate has sprung up too suddenly. This is a matter too important for any man to undertake to speak upon without that decision which preparation alone can afford.

Mr. ORR obtained the floor.

INTERPRETER TO MR. GALLEGOS.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I rise to what I consider a privileged question. I offer the following resolution for the adoption of the House:

Resolved, That Señor José MANUEL GALLEGOS, the sitting Delegate from the Territory of New Mexico, be allowed to introduce an interpreter on the floor of the House, to enable him to understand its proceedings; and that said interpreter be paid ——— dollars per diem out of the contingent fund.

Mr. ORR. I must object to having my speech interrupted by the resolution of the honorable gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. HUNT. I should like to know of the gentleman from Tennessee whether the resolution just read has been introduced with the consent of the Delegate from New Mexico?

Mr. STANTON. It has.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not regard the resolution offered by the gentleman from Tennessee as of a privileged character.

Mr. STANTON. That decision prevents me from saying anything in regard to the resolution. I should like to do so.

CAPTAIN INGRAHAM AGAIN.

Mr. ORR. Mr. Speaker, I had not the least idea, when I came into this Hall this morning, that these resolutions would be reported, or, if reported, that I would say a single word in reference to them. I supposed that they would pass the House without objection being started by a single gentleman on this floor. The resolutions have undergone the scrutiny of one of the ablest committees of this House. They have undergone the scrutiny of Democratic and Whig members.

They have been reported in such manner that objection cannot be taken to them. The Government is not committed to any principle to which all parties within the limits of the United States are not entirely willing to subscribe.

Mr. MILLSON. I only wish to say, Mr. Speaker, that I have as much confidence in the Committee on Foreign Relations, as, perhaps, any other gentleman upon this floor. It is out of no want of confidence in its members that I desire the reference of the resolutions to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I wish to see the resolutions in print. I have very little doubt that I shall concur in the adoption of them, when I have examined them. From what my colleague [Mr. BAYLY] said, I am inclined to the opinion that I shall agree with him in his conclusions; but up to this moment I have not heard one word of the resolutions. When they were reported from the Clerk's desk, such was the confusion then prevailing that their contents could not be heard where I sit.

Mr. ORR. I will read the resolutions, and I beg that the gentleman will give them his attention. He then read the resolutions, as above reported.

Mr. ORR, after reading the resolutions through, said: These, Mr. Speaker, are the joint resolutions which have been reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations. The gentleman from Virginia proposes that they shall be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I would inquire of gentlemen who have heretofore had seats in this Hall, if that motion be agreed to,

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

33D CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 10, 1854.

NEW SERIES....No. 9.

whether it is not equivalent to sending the resolutions to their death?

Mr. MILLSON. The adoption of the motion to refer will insure the printing of the resolutions. After it has been adopted, a motion can be made to reconsider, and to-morrow, after we have had time for examination, the reference may be reconsidered, and the resolutions may be adopted.

Mr. ORR. Then, Mr. Speaker, the object of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MILLSON] I suppose is not to have these resolutions discussed in committee. I am glad to hear that at least. But, I think that the House is prepared at the present time to vote on the resolutions. They do nothing more than simply return the thanks of Congress to Captain Ingraham for a gallant act. It was, sir, an act of gallantry, and it is not necessary that it should be vindicated on this floor upon any other principle—according to the resolutions—than upon the great principle of humanity. He performed it on the great principle of humanity. And what has Captain Ingraham done? He has infused new life and spirit into your Navy; he has caused your flag to be respected on every sea, and in every land on the habitable globe. He has done more than your armies perhaps accomplished during the Mexican war—to have this country respected in every land and nation on the face of the earth. In the adoption of these resolutions the House does not commit itself, and the country does not commit itself to any of the debatable propositions which may be contained in the able letter of the Secretary of State—in some of which I fully concur.

These resolutions, sir, do not commit the Government or the country, if they should be passed. Captain Ingraham did not deliberate as long as we have been deliberating here before he determined that Martin Koszta should not be seized by Austrian authority, and incarcerated in Austrian dungeons. I trust, sir, that the example set us by Captain Ingraham, in doing his duty promptly, will be followed by this House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. In the discussion of this subject, Mr. Speaker, I have heard no objection interposed to the language or to the sentiment of the resolutions. They are very simple. They present, in my judgment, a single point. The only point presented in them is this—will Congress return to Captain Ingraham its thanks for his gallant conduct? I presume, Mr. Speaker, that there is not in this House, or in the country, one single man, having an American heart, who does not admire the manner in which Captain Ingraham conducted that matter in a foreign country, with a single vessel, in the face of a foe twice as great as the force he commanded himself. There is about this whole matter something which has made me, for one, rejoice that the whole affair has taken place.

Sir, there is more than the conduct of Captain Ingraham. I am glad to see that an American Secretary, in the discussion of this question, and with American authority, came forward to support the acts of our officers. If we are that great and proud nation which we claim to be, it is time that we should have something to say in the law of nations. The American Secretary of State has, for the first time, justified the conduct of an American officer by American law and American precedent. I think that heretofore, in the discussion of these questions, our own country has been at fault if she has not attained the position which she is entitled to among the nations of the earth. I am rejoiced, not only that Captain Ingraham displayed, in the face of European authority, a gallantry and courage unmatched, in my opinion, in the annals of history, but I am also rejoiced that an American Secretary has placed his justification for the act upon American authority.

Now, I wish to inquire of my friend from Virginia, [Mr. MILLSON], who has interposed, not an objection to the resolutions, but an intimation of his desire that they should go to a committee, if there is in the history of legislation a single instance where resolutions of this description have been sent to the Committee of the Whole? The thanks are worth nothing, if doled out and forced reluctantly through the American Congress—

Mr. MILLSON, (interrupting.) I do not wish to be placed in a false position upon this subject. Mr. RICHARDSON. Certainly not.

Mr. MILLSON. I do not wish to be considered here as one who is suggesting objections to the resolution. No man has defended the course and conduct of Captain Ingraham more warmly and more earnestly than I have done in repeated conversations. But I suggest here whether this tribute will not be more acceptable to Captain Ingraham himself, as the result of the mature deliberation of this House, than as only a spontaneous outpouring of inconsideration?

Mr. BAYLY. If my colleague will allow me, I desire to ask a single question: Does he consider a resolution introduced into this House, and referred to a committee to which it appropriately belongs, and which has undergone its anxious scrutiny, as one that has been precipitately and incautiously brought before this House?

Mr. MILLSON. I reply, that while I have all proper confidence in the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and while I consider that my confidence is justified by my knowledge of the materials of which that committee is composed, yet I regard the committees of this House as but aids to the House, and not substitutes for it; and that this House ought not, in any case, to commit themselves, with a blind adherence, to conclusions to which their committees may have arrived. The committee have not assisted us by any written report of the views they entertain, and the reasons upon which they are founded. It is for these reasons that I desire, as well on Captain Ingraham's as on other accounts, that the question should be referred, rather for the purpose of having the resolutions printed, than for the purpose of giving rise to any protracted discussion hereafter.

If my friend from Illinois [Mr. RICHARDSON] will allow me a word more, I will say, that at the time when I made the suggestion to the House I had not read the resolutions, and I wanted to know something about them. I wanted to know whether the resolutions committed the American Congress and the American Government to any questionable doctrines. I concur in the opinion expressed, that the course of Captain Ingraham is to be justified, and, perhaps, alone justified upon the consideration of humanity. Captain Ingraham might with as much propriety have used the force under his command in the harbor of Smyrna for the protection of an oppressed fellow-being there, as he might, in the desert of Africa, have drawn the sword which he wore, as an officer of his Government, to protect some fellow-being from force and violence.

But how far is this act the act of the American Government? That is the question. It is for that reason that I desire the opportunity of considering this question, believing, if my suggestion had been adopted, that the tribute to Captain Ingraham would have been much more acceptable, and the time of the House would not have been so much occupied. There would have really been no objection to it, and there would have been a unanimous consent by the House, when it properly came up for consideration.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The resolutions have been before the House, and have been read and discussed several times during the morning. I think there is no gentleman upon the floor who objects to the conclusions or phraseology of the resolutions. If there were gentlemen here who object to their phraseology or conclusions, for one, I should not urge their passage. The gentleman says the difficulty which presents itself to his mind is, about making the conduct of Captain Ingraham the act of the Government. For one, if it is not the act of the Government, I desire to make it so. I desire that such gallantry, such bravery, and such a display of noble and high qualities should become an act of the Government, and be acknowledged by it. If his conduct has not been made the act of the Government by the action of any Department, or the President of the United States, I desire that Congress should make it so. I concur with the gentleman from South Carolina, that this transaction of Captain Ingraham has contributed more than any other act or any other display of gallantry ever made by our troops or marine corps to elevate our character, protect our commerce wherever our flag is unfurled, and to give our citizens protection and safety beneath its folds. I desire to see the resolutions passed at once, unless there is some substantial objection to either their phraseology or conclusions.

Mr. HILLYER. I concur in the resolutions which have been just reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I concur in their phraseology. The resolutions themselves will not only go before the country and before the world, but the reasons given in their favor will also go before the country in the Congressional Globe. I am not prepared to assent to the reasoning of the gentlemen from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] and of South Carolina, [Mr. ORR.] They advocate the passage of these resolutions upon the ground that they commit this Government to no particular policy—to no particular course of argument or reasoning. I desire to commit the Government to both. They seem to advocate the resolutions upon the ground that Captain Ingraham has acted upon the great moral principle of benevolence—of humanity—in rescuing a distressed individual from the oppression of a foreign Power. That reasoning does not command my approbation, and I must dissent from it. When the debate in this House goes before the world, I desire that it shall exhibit other reasons for the passage of these resolutions than those assigned by the gentlemen, of mere charity—of humanity.

When a man acts from moral principle he deserves the approbation of every good man, but he does not deserve the thanks of a great nation. We are called upon as the representatives of an independent nation to thank an officer of our Government for an act performed in the discharge of his official duty. I insist upon it that that act should be of a public character, and concern the public welfare; and such I consider the conduct of Captain Ingraham to be; and it is for this reason that I am willing to thank him. I am willing to support these resolutions, not because he has exercised a charitable feeling, and performed a moral duty for the relief of a distressed individual, but because by his gallantry he has asserted a great American principle—the principle that whenever a foreigner has filed his declaration, under our naturalization laws, of an intention to become an American citizen, he thereby becomes entitled to our protection, and the right to have all the energies of our mighty Republic exerted to rescue him from the oppressor.

The position taken by Captain Ingraham concerns the Republic, and it is for taking that position that he deserves our thanks. However pre-eminent his conduct may have been as a moralist, it deserves not the thanks of his country.

I say, Mr. Speaker, I have made these remarks not in opposition to the resolutions themselves; not in opposition to their phraseology—but to let the country know that there are other, and, in my judgment, better reasons for supporting the resolutions than those given by the gentlemen from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] and from Virginia, [Mr. BAYLY.]

Mr. CHANDLER. Having been a member of the committee to which these resolutions were referred, I rise to express my approval of the words which have fallen from the lips of the honorable chairman of that committee, [Mr. BAYLY,] with a single exception perhaps—I mean to that which related to myself. But since he has imputed to me the sin of ancient politics, [laughter.] I think I stand upon the right footing when, as an ancient member of that defunct party, I rise to defend the action of the favorite child of that party—the American Navy.

This matter, as presented in the resolutions which now lie upon your table, has been divested of all that doubtful species of question which is involved in the argument referred to by gentlemen who have preceded me, viz: the argument presented by the honorable Secretary of State. We are not called upon now to inquire whether it is the duty of an American commander to defend the rights of inchoate citizenship; but we are called upon to say that we approve of the conduct of a man who, in the name of his country and under the flag of his country, asserts and defends the cause of humanity.

The honorable gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HILLYER] says such an act as that entitles him to no consideration at the hands of this House, which is the representative of the nation. A nation of republicans—a nation of freemen—a nation which, by their Constitution, and by the policy of their Government, are identified with individuals, in their collective character, are called upon to approve of conduct which illustrates our common nature, and pours splendor upon the character of the American nation.

Sir, the Queen of England never allows an act of humanity towards one who claims to be the subject of Great Britain, no matter what may be his situation, to escape without some distinguished token of regard; and hundreds of American seamen are, at this moment, wearing upon their persons, or preserving at their homes, the tokens of that Queen's appreciation of the exercise of humanity towards her suffering subjects. Is the claim of American citizenship less than the claim of citizenship elsewhere? I speak only of inchoate, not perfect citizenship. Is the cause of humanity—that is what I would now speak of—less to be regarded here, and less to be approved, than it is abroad? If it is, I do not understand that. I fall back upon that old defunct party to which the gentleman from Virginia assigns me, and declare that that was the principle of that party; and if it comes down to me—to baptize me with old foggyism—I receive it as I do some other unfashionable portions of my creed.

But, we are asked to refer these resolutions to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and we are told by the eloquent gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. MILLSON,] that they will be more acceptable to Captain Ingraham after that reference, than if we pass upon them at once. We stand here, sir, to reward Captain Ingraham for what he has done in our behalf, and not to consult his feelings. The measure that we are now engaged in is one of self-respect. If we were to consult Captain Ingraham, the honorable gentleman knows that there is no proverb more applicable to the case than the old Latin proverb, "Bis dat qui cito dat"—"he gives twice who gives quickly." Why, sir, while we are deliberating—while we are discussing, the spirit of our good action is evaporating, and the whole is becoming a mere piece of formal legislation.

I regret that the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEAN]—the author of these resolutions—did not, before offering them to the House, submit them to a few friends who would have suggested some slight modifications and amendments—which I know he would have promptly accepted—and then this House would have done itself honor by a prompt acceptance of them from his hands, and by passing them without all this deliberation. The time will come when the President's message will be further discussed—unless, indeed, the signs of yesterday signify that we have already done with it—and I shall hope then to take part in the debate. That will be the proper time to consider how far Koszta was entitled to our protection as an American citizen—how far his inchoate citizenship gave him a claim on us to our protection. In my opinion, if it did not give him a perfect claim, it gave him a claim on our humanity which was perfect, if not as a citizen. It may have given the claim of a citizen, however. It is clear that the Secretary of State is not himself fully satisfied on that point, as in a more recent case he seems to have departed from that decision. Let it be distinctly understood, however, that this man was not upon Austrian soil; he had nothing to do with the Austrian Government. On that ground, and on that alone, if I am to make reference to Koszta's political position, should I take the stand that I have taken in behalf of this resolution.

I will not occupy the attention of the House in attempting to discuss it. It is one that appeals to our feelings as Americans; it is one that appeals to us as the representatives of Americans. It is no question whether this man or that man bore with him a perfect claim to defense, but it is a question whether the flag of the United States streams in vain in any quarter of the world—whether the oppressed and suffering of the world may not claim exception from that species of tyranny to which this man was exposed. And, consequently, whether we ought not, out of self-respect, dignify the legislation of this body by showing that we can prove that we have the virtue to appreciate and approve and applaud, and, as far as possible, to reward an action which reflects credit at home, and at every place where it is discussed in reference to the Navy of our country.

I had an opportunity, sir, a few months since, to listen abroad to discussions on this very question, and though men doubted whether we might not involve ourselves in difficulty in undertaking to defend a citizen whose claim had not been fully established—one who had only lodged with us his intention to become a citizen—still they believed that humanity, and the progress of human rights, justify the action of Captain Ingraham, and call for applause. When the law of nations comes again to be discussed, we shall, perhaps, hear of some new Puffendorf, some new Vattel, or some new Grotius in our country, who will, on our action, and the peculiar situation of affairs in our country, demand that there shall be a new provision in that law—a proviso which we never will cease to enforce by all the means which humanity and power place in our hands. I trust that this House will adopt the resolutions at once, and vote down the motion to refer them to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOUSTON. I call for the previous question on the motion to refer.

Mr. SMITH, of Alabama. I would be obliged to the gentleman if he would withdraw his call for the previous question for a few moments.

Mr. HOUSTON. There are at least a dozen gentlemen desirous of speaking on these resolutions, and I must decline yielding to the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH. If the gentleman will withdraw his call, when I shall have concluded what I have to say I will renew it.

Mr. HOUSTON. If I withdraw for the gentleman, I must do so for others who may make the same request.

Mr. SMITH. I give my colleague my particular thanks for calling the previous question just as I was about obtaining the possession of the floor.

Mr. HOUSTON. I did not see that my colleague was seeking the floor.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I trust that the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee may not prevail.

Mr. MURRAY. I rise to a privileged question. I desire to submit a report from the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union is also privileged, and being submitted first takes precedence.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to know the effect of my motion. If it be adopted will it send the resolutions to the committee? If so, I withdraw it.

Mr. WHEELER. I renew the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, if the gentleman has withdrawn it.

The question was taken, and the House refused to suspend the rules and resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question then recurred on seconding the call for the previous question.

Mr. WHEELER. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CLINGMAN and CHURCHWELL were appointed.

The question was then taken, and the tellers reported—ayes 63, noes 80.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote for the resolution reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, not because I approve the terms of it, but because it is the best now offered to us.

I must, however, be permitted to say that, in my judgment, the committee have emasculated the original resolution. They have taken from it all its vigor and manhood, and given us a weak and poor substitute. Out of the open and bold resolution applauding Captain Ingraham for "vindicting the right of American citizenship," we are now treated to one which places the thanks of this nation upon the ground of personal gallantry and humanity.

We are not left in doubt as to how far the resolution was intended to cover the principle involved in the case; for we have the out-spoken declarations of the chairman, [Mr. BAYLY,] and the eloquent gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CHANDLER,] that the resolution was purposely so framed that while it applauded Captain Ingraham for his gallantry, it avoided the debatable question, as to how far Koszta was legally entitled to the protection he received by virtue of his inchoate citizenship. For one, sir, I should much have preferred a bold and open avowal of principle, even at the hazard of a division in this House, to a poor compromise with unanimity.

Let me ask, Mr. Speaker, whence comes this resolution? No one who has observed events can for one moment suppose it originated in this House. It is but a reflex of the popular judgment long since declared. It but gives "form and pressure" to the great movement which agitated the public mind when the act of Ingraham was first heralded on our shores. And what, sir, was the foundation of this agitation? What was it that so moved the American heart to its lowest depths? Can any one believe that this was all the result of a mere act of humanity in releasing an individual from imprisonment? No, sir; far deeper lies the cause of the national approval. It rests upon the broader basis, that an American officer, in a foreign country, without instructions from the home Government, and under circumstances of great trial, had the wisdom to recognize the legal right of Koszta to American protection, and the energy to declare that he should have it at all hazards. It was not the introduction of a new policy, but the manly assertion of a well-established right, enforced conspicuously upon the attention of the European Governments, that has given to the act the public importance which has attached to it.

And now, Mr. Speaker, let me ask, why should we separate the act of Ingraham from the ground of its vindication? His name is now historical; it is properly associated in the minds of our people with a great political principle, which is destined to embalm it, and those who would disassociate them are unjust to him, to the event, and to the expectation of our people.

While the resolution was intended to withhold all commitment upon the principle of protection, it invokes a legislative approval of the act upon the ground of its humanity. This is not a sufficient cause for the action of the National Legislature. Mere acts of humanity or personal gallantry are not so rare in our Navy as to excite our "special wonder," or to call for this extraordinary testimonial of the Government.

In the exercise of the feelings of humanity, Ingraham may have chosen to hazard his own personal safety; but when he proceeds to jeopard the lives of the men who were intrusted to his care, when he places upon chance the involvement of his country in all the horrors of war, he must act upon the principles of duty; he must look to the right and laws of his country, and not to the impulses dictated by the feelings of humanity.

I have been greatly surprised at the strong evidence of a great diversity of opinion here as to the legal right of Koszta to American protection. I was not prepared for this, as the indication of public opinion in this country had given assurance of great unanimity. Citizenship has been spoken of as a thing complete in itself, admitting of no degree or modification. Now, it has never been contended by any one that Koszta was a citizen, in the full sense of that term, for our laws plainly demonstrate the contrary; but the residence of the party, and the preliminary oath of intention, give to him an incipient citizenship, which would in due time ripen into full citizenship; and this condition bound him to obedience to the Government, and entitled him to the correlative obligations of protection from the Government. Without disputing about words, but looking to the right involved, I apprehend, whatever differences of opinion may here spring up, the judgment of this country is irrevocably determined. Let not the oppressed foreigner, therefore, fleeing from governmental persecution, fear that when once he has landed upon our shores, and entered upon the duties of a citizen, that the laws of our country or the will of our people will prove inadequate to his protection, here or elsewhere.

Mr. SMITH, of Alabama, rose, and was recognized by the Speaker.

Mr. BARRY. Will the gentleman yield for a moment to allow me to move an amendment?

Mr. SMITH. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. BARRY. I move to insert after the words "Martin Koszta," the following:

A refugee from Hungary, who had fled to the United States; who had filed a declaration in the proper court of his intention to become an American citizen, and who was at the time of his seizure upon Turkish territory.

I want that amendment to be inserted in the original resolutions, after the word "Koszta," for the purpose of stating, as far as it can be stated, the ground upon which the defense of Captain Ingraham's conduct must rest. I agree with the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. PHILLIPS,] that this resolution, as it now stands before us, is not worth much, because it does not purport to assert any principle. Now, I propose to place Captain Ingraham's conduct upon the only ground on which it can be placed—namely, that Koszta was an inchoate citizen, and was entitled to the rights of inchoate citizenship, and not upon the ground of humanity, for I deny that we have any right to pass any such resolutions, or to interfere in any such case, upon that ground.

Mr. HILLYER. Will the gentleman from Alabama allow me to offer an amendment to the original resolutions?

Mr. SMITH. I do not propose to go very deeply into any investigation of the subject of these resolutions. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HILLYER. If it be in order, I will then send up my resolution to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. Two amendments are already pending, and the gentleman's amendment is not, therefore, at this time, in order.

Mr. SMITH. I expect to vote against these resolutions in all shapes and forms, and I desire to say only a very few words in justification of my position. From the enthusiasm of certain gentlemen who advocate the passage of these or similar resolutions, and from what my colleague from Alabama [Mr. PHILLIPS,] takes to be the great movement in the American heart, I take it for granted that I shall be in a very small minority. I remember, sir, that on a former occasion in this House, I was in a minority of one upon a question wilder, more frantic, and more enthusiastic than this—(the Koszuth welcome)—therefore I do not dread minorities, as you may know. It seems that the friends of these resolutions cannot be satisfied with any form of resolution. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SMITH] is not satisfied with the Administration, or with the letter of the Secretary of State. They have not gone far enough for him.

My colleague from Alabama, [Mr. PHILLIPS,] complains that the original resolution has been emasculated, and that these resolutions are worthless. Well, sir, I hope that these, or any other resolutions of a similar character, worthless or not, as they may be, may not pass this House now, or on any other occasion.

Sir, what do you propose to do? You propose to thank a man, in this extraordinary manner, for doing simply his duty.

It is not at all surprising that we should manifest some consternation and surprise, when we see any man doing his duty. Any set of two hundred and thirty-seven men who would deliberately waste fifteen days of the public time, in the first month of their session, ought to be surprised that any man should do his duty under any circumstances. [Laughter.] Here you propose to thank a commander in your Navy for simply doing his duty, and nothing further. And I do say, that however gallant, personally, however honorable to his chivalry and spirit, however noble the act may have been in him as a man, yet as a national act, I do question its propriety; and I design, on some future occasion, to show that there are reasons for questioning this act. I take the liberty of saying, further, that the letter of the Secretary of State, however elaborated, and however ingeniously devised and worded it may be, is fuller of fallacies generally, and false positions, than any document of its character that has been published under the sanction of the Government in this country for the last twenty-five years. I desire that these resolutions shall be passed over now, in order that we may discuss them more thoroughly; and on some other occasion I shall take the liberty of denying the doctrines asserted in that paper; and perhaps I may be able to induce the House at last to pause to consider its consequences.

Sir, I would advise my honorable and distinguished friend from Alabama [Mr. PHILLIPS,] not to be governed by the heart. He says that we are but responding to a great movement in the American heart. Well, sir, a statesman had better be governed by his head than his heart. The head is better than the heart here. Statesmen who have been governed by the heart may be found in such men as Pericles at the feet of Aspasia, and Samson in the lap of Delilah. Let us follow judgment and not feeling, on great national questions, as this unquestionably is. Let us give our heads to the State, and our hearts to the women. I remember, sir, that two years ago this whole country was wild with enthusiasm about Koszuth; and now it seems to be going wild about Koszta: parallel cases.

But let us go back to this proposition. You propose to reward a naval commander for the simple performance of his duty. Some of the very gentlemen who are to-day so earnestly advocating this measure, refused yesterday, and perhaps many times before, to give to a gallant general a mere compliment—the title of lieutenant general to General Scott.

Mr. Speaker, let us be consistent. There are many cases in the history of our Navy of this character. When Captain Long, of the frigate Mississippi, off Marseilles, by his judicious and gallant conduct prevented a rupture between France and the United States, by keeping down that insubordinate and rebellious agitator, Koszuth, thereby indicating his great courage, great firmness, and great intuitive sagacity, he was denounced from one end of this Union to the other by the papers which were pandering to the public heart, to use the favorite phrase of my colleague, [Mr. PHILLIPS,] and to the agitation got up by a distracting foreigner. Captain Long was a man of great distinction, great capacity, and great character; and yet this House absolutely refused to print his letter of vindication, by voting down a motion which I submitted to that effect. Yet public opinion has long since vindicated Captain Long. There is another instance of a like kind in our naval history. When Lieutenant Hunter took Alvarado by himself, on his own hook, he was denounced, tried by a court martial, and dismissed in disgrace from the service of his country! Yes, sir, that gallant young lieutenant, for doing more than his duty, and taking a town without the aid of foggy diagrams, was absolutely dismissed from the service for the simple act—all the fleet not doing as much during the whole war. Is that the way you would, in your wisdom, reward merit? Is this the way for a great Government and a great people to be consistent?

Sir, this House is too frequently led away by what may be considered to be popular applause and popular sentiment. I think that it is time for these things to cease. I am of opinion that Captain Ingraham, as a man, deserves credit and applause for the gallant and chivalrous impulse by which he was governed and prompted in acting as he did; and as such I applaud, and should be proud to do him honor. But I do not wish to commit the Government to an act upon which I look as one of questionable propriety in a national view. These resolutions do not only commit the Government to the act of Captain Ingraham, but also to the message of the President of the United States, and to the letter of the Secretary of State. They commit it to all by indorsing the act of the commander in the most solemn manner, and in rewarding, not by a sword, but by a medal—which is a higher honor than that intimated by a sword—the act itself.

When I rose, Mr. Speaker, I had no idea of speaking half as long as I have. I desired briefly to give one or two reasons why I intended to oppose these resolutions to the very end. Trusting and believing, from the indications which I see around me, that it is the sense of the House to let these resolutions lie over for further discussion, I will now say that it is my intention hereafter to examine, with a great deal of care and elaboration, the letter of the Secretary of State, as well as the message of the President of the United States—disputing both as unsound. In order that the House may have the better opportunity to discuss this thing fully and thoroughly, as connected with the President's message and the letter of the Secretary of State, I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed. I hope we shall stay here until the resolutions are better understood, and until they be defeated in some way or other.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, like the gentleman from Alabama, I shall state, in the outset of my remarks, that I intend to be exceedingly brief. I consider the object intended to be attained by these resolutions as a very just and very important one. It is a part of the duty of this House to be performed towards a most meritorious officer—a duty as important as any that can be, or is likely to be, performed by this House, or this Congress, during this session.

The gentleman who was last up [Mr. SMITH, of Alabama] argued that this naval officer had performed a simple duty, and therefore was not entitled to the high honor proposed to be bestowed on him by this resolution. It is true, sir, that he has performed a simple duty, but he has performed it under circumstances which make his act an example of the highest possible courage—higher courage than is exhibited by a military officer on the field of battle. It is an instance of moral courage—of the very highest moral courage—which could possibly have been exhibited. It is not that Commander Ingraham carried his vessel alongside of the Austrian ship, threw his cable over her chains in such a way as to expose his vessel to the fire of a superior force, surrounded by Austrian vessels in the bay of Smyrna; it is not that, sir, which gives him a title to the high honor which we propose to do him; because I have no doubt you may find a thousand officers, or, at least, may find many officers in the American Navy who would be capable of a similar act of gallantry. But the commander of that vessel was under the necessity of determining a great question of international law, and of taking on himself a high responsibility, relying on the justice and propriety of his own decision, and relying on the support of the people of the United States to sustain him in performing a duty which few of our officers, perhaps, under similar circumstances, would have been ready to perform.

Take an instance somewhat similar in circumstances, but very different in results, and very different in the action of the individual who then held the honor, and perhaps the lives, of American citizens in his hands, or at least in some degree in his power. Take the instance of the officer who commanded the American ship at the port of Havana, on a recent occasion, when a bloody tragedy was enacted there, and ask yourself what might have been the difference in the result there if he had had the spirit and character of Ingraham? Sir, it was the moral courage displayed in this instance which entitles Commander Ingraham to the act we are now about to perform. I regret that the usages of the service and the laws of the country do not permit this meritorious officer to be rewarded in even a better form, and in a higher degree, than he can be by the passage of these resolutions, and by the presentation of a medal. I regret that he cannot be promoted for that act of gallantry and high moral courage. My friend from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] informs me that the Austrian commander has actually been promoted for the performance of his duty on that occasion. This is the spirit with which these transactions are viewed by foreign Governments.

This is not the proper occasion to enter into an elaborate argument in regard to the principles contained in the Marcy letter—the great questions involved in the passage of these resolutions—but in reference to the phraseology of these resolutions, I cannot see the propriety of the objection made by the honorable gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. PHILLIPS,] I submit to him, and to every gentleman upon this floor, whether the resolutions are not sufficiently distinct and explicit upon that point, and whether it is necessary to insert in them the reasons for approving of what the resolutions call a judicious and gallant act on the part of Captain Ingraham, on the second day of July last, "in extending the protection of the American Government to Martin Kosztz, by rescuing him from forcible and illegal seizure and imprisonment on board the Austrian brig Hussar."

Why, sir, it is certainly not to be inferred from these resolutions that the action of this naval officer was a mere act of humanity. If it was a mere act of humanity—an interference in favor of a person who had no right to the protection of the American Government—it certainly would not have been judicious conduct on the part of Captain Ingraham.

Mr. PHILLIPS, (interrupting.) The chairman of the committee which introduced these resolutions, expressly stated that the resolutions were so framed as to exclude the question which involved the right of citizenship of Martin Kosztz.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. It is due to the Committee on Foreign Affairs that I should repeat what I have already said, as I am still misunderstood. We meant, by our decision, to exclude all debatable questions, and not that the decision should be less emphatic from the cause that we did not assign the reasons for it. We left the resolutions to speak for themselves. That is what I have said over and over again.

Mr. STANTON, (resuming.) I think the resolutions do speak for themselves, just as explicitly as they would if you should insert in them every fact connected with the affair. How much would it add to the strength of the resolutions if you should say by them "that Martin Kosztz, a native of a Hungary, who had declared his intention of becoming an American citizen," &c.? It does not exclude the fact, because the whole world is aware of its existence. If the gentleman intends to declare an abstract principle of international law, I apprehend this is not the place to assert such a principle, and this not the mode in which it ought to be done. It seems to me that everything which is important is in these resolutions. It has the sanction of the American Congress—the sanction of a great act of gallantry in an American naval officer, as well as of high moral courage, in executing his simple duty, as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SMITH] says; and that duty the preservation of the rights of those entitled to the protection of the American Government.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. It certainly is not my purpose to enter elaborately into the discussion of this question, but to make a few remarks upon it for the consideration of the House, which I hope will not be entirely without effect.

When the honorable chairman of the committee, or a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported these resolutions to the House this morning, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] seemed to regard it as a matter of course that they should pass. He represented to the House that they had been reported from one of the ablest committees of this body, and therefore there should be an end of all inquiry; in truth, that we ought to adopt them without debate, because they were reported by a committee of this high intellectual character.

The suggestion was made by my colleague that some time should be taken for the consideration of these important resolutions. Instantly a great degree of feeling and animation was manifested, not only by the gentlemen from South Carolina and Virginia, but also by the gentleman from Illinois, and others. The simple proposition that we should greatly consider this matter, and deliberately perform the high duty required at our hands, and take time for the purpose of enabling us to do so, was regarded as an act of treason to the country. I cannot understand the reason of this. If there be any one thing in public conduct, or in public legislation, more valuable in its results to the common wants of mankind than another, it is that sentiment, opinion, and action which is expressed after careful consideration and deliberation. I do not hesitate to say to this House, that if Captain Ingraham shall receive the compliment of resolutions passed by this body, he would infinitely prefer that they should pass after a deliberate examination of the whole question, than as a matter of furor and feeling. In this particular case, what are the facts? The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, or at least that committee report a series of resolutions, in which, as has been truly said, not one principle is professed to be decided. The committee, instead of meeting this question in the spirit in which Captain Ingraham met the difficulty in which he was placed—instead of coming forward and fearlessly taking the responsibility of the movement before the world—avoid the question, and report simple resolutions evading all commitment to any principle whatever. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and this House, that I will never act upon any such considerations.

Mr. HARRIS, of Alabama. I wish to ask the gentleman a single question, and that is, if the duty of protection by the American Government is not expressly implied from the very phraseology of the resolutions?

Mr. SMITH. We are told by the gentleman who reported the resolutions, and by those gentlemen who have spoken in their favor, that they intend to commit themselves to nothing.

Mr. BAYLY. I do not want to interrupt my colleague, but I want to make a single explanation. I hope I shall have an opportunity soon of being heard upon this question. I have said, and I say now to my friend—for he is my friend—that I have made no such assertion as he has represented me as having made. What I said was, that we had not declared the reasoning which brought us to the conclusion that we had declared the principle of protection—the right of protection for the American Government. One colleague of mine objects to a part of the resolutions as being deficient. Another colleague of mine objects to that part in which we have said that he was entitled to the protection of the American Government. Between these two fires I do not know where I am to land.

Mr. SMITH. I will only say one word in reference to my colleague. The House will remember that but a moment ago he was endeavoring to obtain the floor. I took the liberty, as a friend, to suggest to him that I thought he ought to give others a turn; but he declared solemnly to me, that he had not made a speech upon the subject at all, and that he had not said a word. [Laughter.]

Mr. BAYLY. Mr. Speaker, that is a style of debate my colleague is certainly not accustomed to—I mean to misrepresent a friend. He never did it knowingly, that I recollect. He says I told him that I had not had the floor to-day. Now I did not say that at all. I said that I had not the floor upon my own account; that other gentlemen had had the floor, and that they had allowed me to make explanations, just as my colleague [Mr. SMITH] is now doing. That is what I said.

Now, the gentleman ought to be parliamentary enough—for he has won nearly all his renown in parliamentary bodies—to understand the distinction between having the floor regularly assigned to him, and being allowed to occupy it for the purpose of explanation through the courtesy of other gentlemen. Sir, the Chair has never assigned the floor to me upon this question, though I hope he will do it before this debate is over.

Mr. SMITH. I do not profess to be much of a parliamentarian, but I will state, that whether my colleague [Mr. BAYLY] is a parliamentarian or not, he is certainly an able tactician; for if he does not succeed in getting the floor upon his own hook, he does succeed in getting it upon everybody else's hook. But let this pass.

The President of the United States, in his inaugural address, lays down admirable views in reference to this subject—views which, I venture to say, will find a response in the breast of every American citizen. He declares that every citizen of the United States shall have the broad ægis of his country spread over him wherever he may be. That is the principle which I desire to see adopted in the future action of this Government, wherever an American citizen, whether by birth or adoption, may be—in whatever portion of the globe he may be found—the fact that he is an American citizen should be enough. Yes, Mr. Speaker, it should be enough, in the hour of difficulty and trial, for him to stand up and say, "I am an American citizen."

Sir, that sentiment in the inaugural address was responded to literally by the deepest pulsations of every American heart; and no American will be found who will not stand up and vindicate that sentiment wherever it may be assailed.

Well, sir, the Secretary of State, following up the sentiment so beautifully expressed in the President's inaugural, of which the gentleman from Alabama, over the way, [Mr. SMITH], seemed to think so lightly, gave to the world that State paper to which allusion has been made—a paper which never has, and never can be, answered—a paper which will stand the scrutiny of time. He avowed a principle of international law which will, ere long, become acknowledged by the world.

Gentlemen have undertaken to put the action of Captain Ingraham upon the ground that Kosztz was, in whole or in part, an American citizen. Now, I wish to be distinctly understood. Sir, I repeat, here in the presence of those with whom I am associated in the great purposes of legislation, that that paper of the Secretary of State does not, directly or indirectly, in any respect whatsoever, place the justification of Captain Ingraham's conduct upon the ground that Kosztz was, in whole or in part, an American citizen, and the country does not so understand it. The Secretary of State expressly puts it upon the ground that Kosztz had acquired the rights and privileges of habitancy, and refers to the fact that he had taken the proper initiative steps to become an American citizen, as evidence to show that he had obtained the right of habitancy in good faith; and then he goes on further to say, in answering the objection which might be made, and has been made, that a foreign revolutionist might come here and take the initiative steps in one of our courts to become an American citizen, with the view of entangling us in controversies with foreign Powers, that while any person has the power to obtain the right of habitancy, the Government is not bound to maintain and protect him in those rights, unless acquired in good faith. The right of the Government to protect itself against the effect of such an attempt is clear and unmistakable. That is the doctrine of Mr. Marcy, and it is a doctrine upon which the country may stand with safety.

Mr. Speaker, in this state of the question, when the President has spoken out, when the Secretary of State has spoken out, why has not the honorable Committee on Foreign Affairs, with the same frankness and courage, spoken out also?

Mr. SMITH, of Alabama. Do I understand the gentleman from Virginia to say that the letter of the Secretary of State does not sanction and applaud Captain Ingraham's conduct?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Oh, no! Certainly, on the contrary, that letter did sanction and applaud his conduct. I hope the reporter better understands the position I take. I repeat, that the Secretary of State did not justify the conduct of Captain Ingraham upon the ground that Kosztz was, in whole or in part, an American citizen. He justified it upon the ground that Kosztz had acquired the right of domicile, and he referred to the initiative steps that he had taken to become a citizen, as evidence that that right had been acquired in good faith. That is the ground he took; and he took the further position, in answer to the charge which might be made of involving us in conflicts with foreign countries, that this right was not a perfect and complete one, imposing a duty on this Government to be exercised under all circumstances, but one which left this Government at liberty to extend its protection or not.

Then, sir, the President had spoken in a tone that went to the heart of the country; the Secretary of State had spoken in a tone which had reached the extreme borders of our Republic, and had scarcely called forth a single expression of dissent; and not only that, but Europe herself has been silenced. Sir, it is one of the most remarkable facts, perhaps, in the history of the day, that in reference to that great State paper, which has produced such a sensation in this country, and commanded so much applause, Europe, so sharp to observe the doings of Young America, and so ready to censure and to criticize upon all occasions, has been almost entirely silent on this subject; the public press and politicians of Europe have not, in this instance, indulged in their usual criticisms, because they could not find fault with that great paper, or with the doctrines promulgated in it. The subject is now brought to the attention of another branch of the Government—the Congress of the United States—and that, too, in a very interesting form, and we ought to rise up to the dignity of the occasion—we ought to back up the other Departments of the Government, and base our approval of their course in reference to Koszta upon a sentiment, and not upon

"The baseless fabric of a vision."

Sir, it was avowed by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, in the opening of this debate—although he never had the floor—and it has been referred to again and again, in the course of the discussion, that these resolutions would not commit anybody to any principle, as there was a diversity of opinion upon this occasion. Now, I want to be committed to a principle. I want this House to be divided upon a principle.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. What principle?

Mr. SMITH. I want the vote on the resolutions commending Captain Ingraham, to be put upon a principle.

Mr. BAYLY. Tell us what principle.

Mr. SMITH. I will do so if the gentleman will give me time. My colleague asks me upon what principle I would have this question put. Sir, I would have it put upon the great principle of right—upon the principle stated in the celebrated letter of the Secretary of State.

What was the situation of Captain Ingraham in the bay of Smyrna? He saw enough to satisfy him as to his course of conduct; he saw this man, Koszta, in the hands of Austrian power, with an American protection in his hands.

Sir, did it become an officer of this country to look behind that paper? It was enough that the competent authorities had placed a paper in the hands of Koszta, which gave him a claim upon the country; and I do not hesitate to say that Captain Ingraham would have been false to the character which belongs to the American sailor, and false to the pride that belongs to an American citizen, if, when finding a man, who had the evidence of a right to American protection in his hands, in "durance vile," among lawless Austrians, I may say, he did not do exactly as he did. Was he right or not in acting in conformity to the paper in Koszta's possession? If he were right, why not say so? Why do you not spread over the face of the earth the fact that an American soldier, or an American sailor, has no right to inquire whether a competent authority issued by the proper authorities was rightfully issued or not? That is enough for our sailors and soldiers, that the man claiming American protection has the evidence of his right to it in his possession? Can our seamen in foreign lands pause for an instant to inquire whether that evidence was issued or not by the one who had the right to do it?

But that is not all. Are the doctrines involved in the higher view of the question sound or not? Could not this committee go into the principles of international law which have been spread before the country, and give them the seal of the approbation of the assembled Representatives of the American people? The President of the United States has indicated his sentiments and opinions conclusively. The Secretary of State, who has our foreign relations in charge, has given his to the public unmistakably. The people's Representatives have now nothing to do but confirm the doctrine thus promulgated, and thus give a moral tone, as well as legal effect, to the question abroad for its perfect settlement in the future. I cannot, for my life, see why this thing cannot be done. I cannot imagine why it is not proper.

I think then, sir, that under these views of the case, without meaning to transgress further on the time of the House, that this committee ought to have reported the grounds upon which Captain Ingraham's conduct was to be justified and applauded. The truth is, his merit is in the fact, that, in a foreign port, where this question was sprung suddenly upon him, and without affording him time for reflection, he performed his high duty in a gallant and praiseworthy manner.

Here, before I close, let me say that no man is to suppose for an instant that the course of discussion or remark had to-day involves any hostility to Captain Ingraham. I think, it is true, that in adopting these resolutions we do more than the simple performance of our duties; but that is the fashion of the day. Nobody can imagine that any one of us is unwilling to give the just measure of praise to the gallant officer who so nobly illustrated our country's institutions.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I should not have presumed to rise, had I been duly influenced by what the gentleman from Alabama has just now told us, of the characteristics of a statesman. For, in that gentleman's esteem, the heart does not enter into the composition of a statesman. With him the statesman is a creature all head and no heart. With me, on the contrary, the heart is of more account than the head—and that, too, in all the possible circumstances of life, including even the province of statesmanship. A higher authority than the gentleman from Alabama makes more of the heart than of the head. His command, as well upon the statesman as upon every other person, is, "my son, give me thine heart." The heart first, and the head afterwards. The faculties of man drive on but to mischief and ruin, unless the heart be first given to the right and the true.

I find that gentlemen of Alabama agree in their definition of a statesman. Another gentleman from that State, [Mr. PHILLIPS,] when reviewing my speech, a fortnight ago, kindly informed me that I am but a sentimentalist, and not a statesman. To use almost precisely his words: "Though I had attained some notoriety in the country as a sentimentalist, I had never risen to the dignity of a statesman." I beg that gentleman to be patient with me. I may yet become the dignified, heartless, frigid, conventional sort of being that makes up the accepted and current idea of a statesman. They say that Congress is a capital place for making a statesman of one who is willing to come under the process. They say so, for the reason that Congress is a capital place for getting rid of all sentiment, and sympathy, and conscience. Now, I cannot say that I am very ambitious to have realized, in my own person, the popular idea of a statesman. Nevertheless, I beg the gentleman to be patient with me. When I shall have been in Congress a few weeks longer, I may so far have lost my heart, and killed my soul, as to be a statesman. And then the honorable gentleman will, no doubt, be willing to take me by his own right hand, and install me into that dignity which he and other statesmen so self-complacently enjoy.

But to come to the resolutions. I like them exceedingly; and I should rejoice to see them pass unanimously. I like them exceedingly, and especially because they avoid all questions of nationality and citizenship; and leave the justification of Captain Ingraham to rest on the naked ground of humanity. I was much pleased to find the distinguished gentlemen from Virginia and South Carolina, [Mr. BAYLY and Mr. ORR,] defending the resolutions in this light. Delighted was I, when I heard the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] declare, in such impassioned language, that humanity is, of itself, ample justification for Captain Ingraham's conduct.

Captain Ingraham, according to the implication of the resolutions, and according to these gentlemen's interpretation and defense of the resolutions, obeyed the simple law of humanity—that law, against which, to use Bible language, "there is no law." Not only is it paramount law—but against it there can be no law. Captain Ingraham recognized no law for kidnapping and oppressing his fellow man. He believed that law is for the protection of rights; and he would not acknowledge as law what was for the destruction of rights; and, therefore, without pausing to inquire into any enactments of Turkey or Austria, he generously and nobly surrendered himself to the commands of the law of humanity, and delivered Koszta.

Captain Ingraham saw in Koszta a man—a kidnapped and oppressed man; and, therefore, he determined to set him free. The manhood of Koszta was all the warrant that Captain Ingraham needed to demand the liberty of Koszta. Captain Ingraham's sympathies are not bounded by State or National lines. They are not controlled by questions of nationality and citizenship; but where he sees his brother kidnapped or outraged, thither does he let his sympathies go out effectively for the deliverance of such brother.

I was glad, sir, to hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CHANDLER,] in the course of his eloquent speech, quote the maxim "Bis dat qui cito dat," (he gives twice who gives quickly,) to incite us to the prompt passage of the resolution. Well does Captain Ingraham deserve the benefit of this apposite and happy quotation, for he acted bravely and beautifully under the inspiration, if not of another Latin maxim, nevertheless of the sentiment of another Latin maxim: "Nil humani a me alienum," (nothing that concerns man is foreign to me.) Yes, Captain Ingraham honored this sublime maxim, which was coined by a slave; for Terence, its high-souled author, was a Roman slave.

Pass these resolutions, Mr. Speaker—pass them promptly and unanimously. By doing so we shall honor humanity and honor ourselves; by doing so we shall rebuke our Government for having taken, three years ago, the diabolical position, that they who rescue their kidnapped, and oppressed, and outraged, and crushed brethren, merit, at the hands of this Government, fines and imprisonment. Pass these resolutions, and you will put the seal of your emphatic condemnation on that diabolical position; and you will cheer the hearts of those who have rescued such poor brethren, and of others who are determined to rescue them whenever they can get the opportunity to do so. Pass these resolutions; and these passed, the future rescuers of the most wronged of all men will rejoice in knowing, that upon the principle of these resolutions, and upon the principle by which some on this floor have advocated them, they are entitled, not to suffer fines and imprisonment, but to receive gold medals.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. Remarkable debate! The enlightened world will be astonished when it shall have read the debates of the popular branch of the American Congress of to-day, in connection with the great American State paper upon this subject; and it will be astonished at the different positions assumed by the legislators upon this floor. We find able Representatives, upon both sides of the House, arguing the question upon the ground of humanity; and I was almost forced, by the remarks of the honorable member from New York, [Mr. SMITH,] to ask the Speaker whether Martin Koszta was a colored man or not. We find American history crowded with those great events which justly make us proud of our country. In that record there is no incident, perhaps, more brilliant than the act of the gallant Ingraham in the port of Smyrna.

But, sir, I propose not to go into the argument as to the right of giving protection to Martin Koszta. The right either existed, or it did not. But acting upon the belief that he was entitled to protection, I shall go for the resolutions as they exist; and, I may remark, that I should have gone for the original resolutions.

As regards the matter of the recommendation of these resolutions by the able committee [on foreign affairs] which reported them, I will say, that I think the House owes some respect to that recommendation. It has examined them more thoroughly, perhaps, than any gentleman not a member of it who has taken part in this running debate. In that judgment I heartily concur, having formed my opinion after a careful perusal of the State paper of Mr. Marcy.

The effect of this debate just at this time, upon the other side of the water, when the leading war spirit [Lord Palmerston] has just retired from the British Ministry, will be startling; and the discussion which has taken place here to-day will be read there with a remarkable degree of interest. It may be the means of introducing a new Ministry, and bringing back to Parliament the war spirit which has just retired from it. The history of passing events is of the most thrilling interest. While the old world is convulsed with agitation, and while all eyes are directed to the Eastern question with intense anxiety, we have still happily a quiet and peaceful state of affairs at home. But who knows what a few months may bring forth? The Turko-Russian question, notwithstanding the present belligerent aspect of affairs, may be adjusted by negotiation.

When Cuba and its Africanization may enlist the tender sympathies of potentates and their stipendiaries, the apparent impending war scene may be changed to this hemisphere, and become a reality.

Much is involved in the Cuban question. All parties look to its solution with the liveliest interest. While it is charged that Great Britain is conniving at schemes adverse to our interest, we have a denial of such interference upon the part of that Power—that she has entered into no stipulations upon the subject. But the fact of her having intermeddled is too glaring to deceive even the most common observer of passing events, and revelations are becoming daily apparent to the public eye. But I will not go further into this subject.

Notwithstanding the variety of argument adduced here, notwithstanding the different views which have been presented by members who have spoken upon this question, I think, if we understand each other aright, that there is no member of this House opposed to tendering thanks and a medal to an accomplished officer, whose valorous conduct has attracted the admiration and the plaudits of the good of every land. I hope the House will pass the resolutions reported by the committee unanimously.

Mr. ORR. The remarks made by the gentleman from Virginia furthest from me, [Mr. SMITH,] require that I shall make a brief explanation in behalf of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I will make a suggestion, and I hope the chairman of that committee will elucidate it at length. Neither the President's message nor the accompanying documents have as yet been referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. How then could it be expected that this committee, in these resolutions, should have stated the grounds, as insisted upon by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. SMITH,] for tendering thanks to Captain Ingraham? They have had no official cognizance of the message or correspondence accompanying it at all. When this correspondence is referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and it is found necessary by them to give expression to the opinions of this Congress in the shape of resolutions, I have no doubt that such resolutions will be reported by that committee.

One more remark in reply to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. SMITH,] When was it ever known to be necessary that, in a resolution of thanks—for the present resolutions are substantially such—that we should go into an argument to vindicate the great principle of international law, or any other law?

Do you proceed to detail the plan and order of battle when you thank a general? Not at all. Do you explain and set forth, in detail, the grounds upon which his conduct is meritorious, or state the causes of the war leading to the battle, or do you not rather make the simple declaration that your thanks are due for the gallant and good conduct of the officer? That is all. That is precisely what it is proposed to do in this case.

The passage of the resolutions will be justified upon the ground of humanity, without assigning any other reason in debate, that were not necessary to be stated in the resolutions. Captain Ingraham found Koszta had been illegally seized, and unlawfully detained, by Austrian authorities in Turkish territory. If the illegal act was consummated by transferring him to an Austrian dungeon, then his doom was sealed; and it was a noble humanity that prompted Captain Ingraham to step forward, at eminent personal hazard, and rescue this unfortunate man from the high-handed outrage perpetrated upon him, and, through him, upon humanity. I thank the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BAYLY] for his courtesy in allowing me to make these remarks.

Mr. HARRIS, of Alabama. Will the gentleman from Virginia now allow me for a minute?

Mr. BAYLY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HARRIS. I do not rise for the purpose of consuming the time of the House; but being a member of the committee which reported these resolutions, I desire simply to say a word in explanation; for it seems to me that, in the course of the debate, a mist has quite unnecessarily been thrown around these resolutions, while a simple analysis would render them perfectly clear, and show that they are not liable to the misinterpretation which has been put upon them by some gentlemen here this morning.

It has been asserted that these resolutions are entirely destitute of everything like principle. Sir, if that had been the case, I should not have been found here supporting them. I believe in the principle put forth in the document emanating from the State Department, to which allusion has so often been made this morning. I believe with other gentlemen, that it is one of the most remarkable documents of the day, and that it is likely to constitute a new era in the history of international law. Well, sir, these resolutions, I hold to be based—to be predicated upon that document. The letter of the Secretary of State does not pretend to go into a declaration that Koszta was entitled to the claim of full citizenship, but it does assert the proposition that he was entitled to the protection of the American Government. To that extent it goes, and no further.

Now, let me ask the honorable gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] what he would have us assert? It seems to me, with all due deference to him, that he misunderstands the idea expressed in the resolutions. If I understand them, they come directly up and assert the principle expressed by the gentleman himself—as broadly as he himself asserts it. They assert the great principle that Koszta was entitled to the protection of the Government.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I dislike to interrupt the gentleman, but I desire to say that it is very likely I may have misunderstood the resolutions. Of course I, being entirely an outsider, could not have seen the resolutions until they were brought in here, and reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. They were reported to the House, but every one knows how difficult it is to hear in the bustle and confusion of this Hall. I say, therefore, that it is very possible I may have misunderstood them. But it is very evident from the discussion, that other gentlemen, too, have fallen into the same error. I understood the gentleman from New York [Mr. SMITH] to put the justification for the resolutions upon the ground of humanity; and that then he branched off into the question of succoring the oppressed all over the world.

Mr. HARRIS. The resolutions speak for themselves. I will read them, and I ask the attention of the House to them.

Mr. BARRY. I rise to a question of order. I do not like to be discourteous to gentlemen, but I ask that the question may be settled. I desire to know whether the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. BAYLY,] holding the floor, has the right to yield it to other gentlemen for the purpose of making speeches? I raise the question as to the rule. As I understand it, no gentleman has the power to yield the floor to another, except for the purpose of explanation. I raise the question in all kindness to the gentleman, and I hope I will not be misunderstood.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has only the right to yield for explanation.

Mr. HARRIS. It was precisely for the purpose of explanation that I rose. I desire that the House may understand what the joint resolutions embrace.

Mr. H. here read the first resolution, and then resumed, as follows:

Now, sir, is there not a principle involved there? What is it? Precisely the principle that was asserted in the letter of the Secretary of State, that Martin Koszta, although he had not been admitted to the full rights of distinct citizenship, was still entitled to the right of protection by the American Government. That is as far as that document went; it is as far as I understand the gentleman from Virginia is willing to go; it is as far as the joint resolutions go. It occurs to me, that in this form there can be no possible objection to them.

Mr. PHILLIPS. The objection to them is that they do not assert the right of Koszta to protection. The words that were in the original resolutions, vindicating the rights of the American citizen, are not in these resolutions. There is nothing in them which asserts the right of Koszta to protection.

Mr. HARRIS. It would hardly be supposed that the Congress of the United States would tender thanks to a man for doing a thing which he had no right to do. That is the reply which I make to my colleague. The act of tendering thanks to Captain Ingraham is a recognition of his authority to extend protection that could not be justified, much less commended, save upon the idea that Koszta had the right to claim it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HARRIS,] if I understand him, says that Koszta was entitled to the protection of the American Government. I ask the gentleman how far he was entitled to that protection? If Austria had refused to give him up, or to release him, would this country have been justified in declaring war against Austria?

Mr. HARRIS. That is carrying the matter far beyond the limits of the present resolutions. It would open the whole field of debate. I do not propose to follow the gentleman, and the point I am debating is their proper construction. The simple purpose of these resolutions is a tender of thanks for what has been done. That is all.

Mr. JONES. Then, if I understand the ground taken by gentlemen who are favorable to these resolutions, it is that we had a right to demand the release of Koszta; and if Austria refused to give him up, why we could just go about our business. Now, I believe that if we had a right—

Mr. HARRIS. I cannot yield the floor to enable the gentleman to make a speech.

Mr. JONES. If Koszta had a right to the protection of this Government, we should have had to enforce his rights, even if we had had to resort to war in so doing.

[Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. HARRIS. I cannot yield to the gentleman. I feel that I have already trespassed too long upon the kindness of my friend from Virginia, and I now resign the floor to him.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. This debate, and the character of the criticisms which have been made on the resolutions, would have surprised me, if anything nowadays could surprise me in the House of Representatives. The Committee on Foreign Affairs, on this occasion, have appeared to me very much like the man in the frontispiece of the almanacs—we are fired at from every sign in the zodiac; and, in getting up to say a word in defense of what we have done, I have some difficulty as to whether I shall reply to Taurus, who, with his stentorian voice, speaks with so much emphasis from the other side of the House, or to Sagittarius, or to Cancer, or to Pisces. I do not know precisely to whom I shall reply; Leo has not spoken. I shall attempt, however, as far as it is possible for me to do it, to take up the salient points of this debate.

And, sir, it first becomes me to state to the House precisely what we have, and what we have not done; for it seems that gentlemen have entered with great zeal into this debate, without understanding, as their own admission shows, what they are talking about. The gentleman from New York, [Mr. DEAN]—in a hurry, as he will admit, when he comes to speak on this question, which he will have a right to do—did what is generally a very safe thing. He looked to a precedent in drawing these resolutions; and, as I said before, when interrupting my friend from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR,] the Committee on Foreign Affairs thought the gentleman from New York had followed that precedent too literally. He proposed the following:

"Resolved, That the thanks of Congress be and they are hereby presented to Captain Duncan N. Ingraham, commanding the United States sloop of war St. Louis, and to the officers and men under his command for their gallant conduct on the second day of July last, in asserting and protecting the right of American citizenship, native and adopted, by the rescue of Martin Koszta, in the harbor of Smyrna, from his forcible and illegal seizure and imprisonment."

The gentleman from Alabama says that we have emasculated that resolution. Let us see to what extent we have amended it; and then let the American Congress decide whether we are liable or not to the charge of having emasculated it. We struck out the vote of thanks to the officers and men under the command of Captain Ingraham. And why did we do it? His was not an act such as that of a general or commodore fighting a battle. The officers and men had nothing to do with it in this case—in those generally most. It was a moral act in this case. We struck out "the officers and men" because they incurred no responsibility; they did nothing. Well, what else did we do? In lieu of the words "for their gallant conduct in asserting the rights of American citizenship, native and adopted," we substituted "for his judicious and gallant conduct, on the second day of July last, in extending the protection of the American Government to Martin Koszta, by rescuing him from forcible and illegal seizure and imprisonment on board the Austrian brig Hussar."

Now, sir, if there be anything in American diplomacy to which I object—and God knows that I am as proud of it as any other American ought to be—it is the disposition manifested in the Department of State to make forensic arguments in diplomatic papers. We are too forensic in all our State papers. All the other Governments of the world, whose example is to be respected, have satisfied themselves with stating conclusions.

It is the fashion in this country of late, however, not only to come to conclusions, but to make forensic arguments. I do not want to condemn anybody, but I think for a long time that it has been a great error in American diplomacy to be dealing in forensic arguments. In the early days of the Republic, when our State papers were so distinguished, it was not so. When we had the question of 54° 40' up, and now when we had the Koszta question up, you had and have long forensic arguments. And then, when they go before the American people—and this House is in that respect a type of the American people—the whole trouble and difficulty is with the arguments, and not with the judgments of the Government. I am opposed to forensic arguments; I am in favor of precise judgments.

Mr. WHEELER. I do not like to take the floor from the gentleman from Virginia; but as he is opposed to argument, and in favor of judgment, I propose that the House go to the consideration of the business on the Speaker's table, and thus cut off argument.

The question was put on Mr. WHEELER's motion and negatived.

Mr. BAYLY. Mr. Speaker, move up your dial a little, so as not to take that time out of my turn. I was answering the objection of my friend from Virginia, and of other gentlemen, that in these resolutions we propounded a conclusion, and did not assign a reason. Well, I was surprised to hear my friend from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] make a difficulty of this sort, for he and I have studied the history of politics; and it has occurred that at one time—in better days than these, Mr. Speaker—in the days of Jefferson—the republican party, with Jefferson at its head, arraigned the Supreme Court for not contenting themselves with pronouncing judgments, but giving opinions embracing questions not involved in the cause. And it was a good criticism. They did not content themselves with deciding the causes before them, but went on and gave opinions to be regarded as law in other cases. I have always been with Jefferson and the republican party in that respect. The duty of the Supreme Court was to pronounce judgment, and not to give opinions, in which opinions were expressed that were not called for in the case before them.

If it is true with the courts that they ought to confine themselves to the cases before them, it is more emphatically true in acts of the Government connected with our foreign affairs. Pronounce judgment, and let everybody find out for himself the reasons for supporting that judgment—not weaken the judgment by giving a bad reason for it. My opinion is that it would be a very judicious course to pursue. Not to pronounce equivocal judgments—not as the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PHILLIPS] says, we have done on this occasion, come here with a compromise—but to pronounce a clear and distinct judgment. That is what the committee has done on this occasion. That does not seem, however, to satisfy gentlemen. They are not content to applaud Captain Ingraham for what he has done; they are not content with the governmental sanction of what he has done; but they want us to write it out in a long treatise, with all the "ifs" and "ands," and qualifications of argument. What Captain Ingraham did is what the Committee on Foreign Affairs call on the American Congress to approve, and not what anybody has said in justification of the act. I suppose they want us to quote the whole record and the argument of the counsel in the judgment.

Well, sir, that was not the view which the Committee on Foreign Affairs took of the matter. We made no compromise—for there was none—the House will allow me this reference to the action of the committee, though not exactly parliamentary—we went there like nine respectable gentlemen; we all had the same thing in view—to do a proper thing in a proper way; we talked over it, we looked at the difficulties and came to the conclusion, that if we brought in a resolution declaring that we approved of the conduct of Captain Ingraham, and designated by day and date the conduct to which we alluded, and not alone by referring to the day and date, but by description also, that would be sufficient without going into the question whether that conduct was right on this ground or that—whether he was entitled to protection on the ground that he was an American citizen, or upon the ground taken by my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CHANDLER,] of humanity. We came to the conclusion that all which the Committee on Foreign Affairs ought to do, was to ask the opinion of Congress upon this act itself, without asking its opinion of the reason assigned in justification of the act.

Sir, we never ought to give reasons in such a case as this. One gentleman said we did not have the subject before us, as the President's message had not been referred. Well, it so happens that the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEAN] introduced his resolutions, to which I have already referred, and this House did refer them to us, and require us to make a report upon them. Like industrious men, we performed our duty and reported upon them. We reported speedily, too, for the reason I assigned when I was interrupting my friend from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR,] and for a reason which was much more eloquently assigned by my colleague upon the committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CHANDLER,] that the thanks amounted to nothing, if tardily proffered. The Austrian Government has promoted its officer who was engaged in this affair, and has conferred upon him a high and unusual honor. For what, I am not precisely able to ascertain, unless it be that he was entitled to credit for saving his ships from destruction. That is a very proper reason for promotion, I admit, if the thing had been done in a different way. We have nothing to do with that, however. They have promoted their officer for saving their ships, as I presume. We cannot promote Captain Ingraham, although he saved his ship, too, and did it without complying with terms, usages and laws as they now are; but we can do something more significant—we can say to him that the heart of the American Congress is with him; and that ought to be more to him than all the stars and garters which can be conferred.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PHILLIPS] has pursued a course of argument upon this occasion not at all unusual, in which he undertook to condemn the conclusion at which we had arrived, on account of the unsoundness of some of the reasons which had been assigned in support of it. He says that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CHANDLER] puts it upon the ground of humanity, and he argues that Captain Ingraham had no right to interfere upon any such ground as an American officer. To act from feelings of humanity was not within the line of his duty.

Have we come this, that the American Army and Navy can never act to prevent a wrong not immediately their own? Has it come to this, that we are so wrapped up in our selfishness, that an officer ought to be censured, rather than be praised, for interfering, as an officer of the Government, in an act of humanity, in which American citizens are not concerned? I do not so understand their duties. I admit that our officers have no right to go out as propagandists, as philanthropists, to meddle in the affairs of other people, when their sympathies might lead them to interfere. But I do say that there are occasions when they ought to interfere; and in cases of pressing emergency, not wait for instructions. Our resolutions are full and comprehensive, and assert everything which ought to be asserted. We assert that Captain Ingraham was right in extending American protection to this man, under the circumstances in which he acted. What more do gentlemen want? Emascuated, indeed? Resolutions, asserting such principles as these do, to be spoken of as unmeaning—I will not say unmanly! Charge, indeed, with non-committalism resolutions so pregnant with meaning as these! My friend from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] thought—

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, (interrupting.) Let me ask my friend a single question, while upon this particular point. Suppose Koszta had had no claim upon the United States at all; that he had never been here; that he was a British subject, and had been unlawfully seized and taken on board the Hussar, would not your resolutions have covered such a case just as well?

Mr. BAYLY. Why, my friend, the resolutions thank Captain Ingraham for having gallantly and judiciously extended the protection of the American Government in the precise case in which he acted. Such is the character of these resolutions. Does any gentleman suppose that we are going to protect everybody. Why, no! To redress the wrongs of every man? Why, no! I may hereafter define, if I find it proper, the cases in which alone—and there are such cases, interference of our officers in cases not immediately our own might be proper. But I have not time now.

I was going on to say, when my colleague from the Fairfax district [Mr. SMITH] interrupted me, that my colleague from the Norfolk district [Mr. MILLSON] had complained that the House had not had an opportunity for consideration. Why, sir, that thing is constantly said about everything that comes before the House. But let us see how it is on this occasion—let us see whether there has been no opportunity for the examination of these resolutions. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DEAN] introduced the resolutions. They lay over under the rule. When they came up again he yielded to a suggestion of mine that they had better go to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, of which he was a member. They went to that committee. They were there scrutinized and brought in here indorsed by the unanimous vote of the committee. They are short and simple; but yet, forsooth, the gentleman says they have not undergone sufficient consideration. I do not know what gentlemen mean by subjecting a resolution to sufficient consideration; but it seems to me that such a charge surely cannot be brought in a case like this.

I dislike to detain the House unnecessarily by any remarks of mine, but, before I conclude, I desire to refer to the remarks of the gentleman over the way from Alabama, [Mr. SMITH.] That gentleman seems to think this is another Kossuth affair. Why, that gentleman knows that, as far as that matter is concerned, I went with him in opposition to the Kossuth movement.

Mr. SMITH, of Alabama. My impression is that the gentleman is taking rather more credit to himself than he deserves. I do not recollect distinctly, but my impression is, that, for a considerable time, I stood very solitary in my opposition to that movement.

Mr. BAYLY. Well, about that I do not know. I think myself that upon that occasion the gentleman ran a little ahead of the music, as I think he is doing on this occasion. [Laughter.] I do not know whether I kept up with him in running ahead of the music. I do not think I did. That gentleman, however, must recollect that I voted against the admission of Kossuth upon this floor; and that I was denounced as not being a friend of liberty, because I did not think that man the impersonation of the spirit of liberty. I may have come tardily to the gentleman's support, but when I did come—

A voice. You made your mark.

Mr. BAYLY. I do not say that, but I will say that when I did come, although I may not have made as good speeches as the gentleman from Alabama did, yet I think they were as well timed, and that I did quite as effectual service in that contest as the gentleman. The country can judge of that, however. But, sir, what analogy is there between this case and that of Kossuth?

Mr. SMITH. I will answer that question if the gentleman will permit me—at least if he asked it with a view of being answered.

Mr. BAYLY. Well, I have no objection.

Mr. SMITH. The similarity is this: Kossuth was a refugee from Hungary, and Koszta was one of his peculiar men. I look upon them both as agitators, as revolutionists; and as, having been driven from their own country, going about on the face of the earth seeking to disturb the peace of the universe; and Martin Koszta under the bare pretext of making a showing in the beginning of naturalization, left this country, as we may best suppose, from his disposition to stir up a fuss somewhere. That is my answer, and that is the similarity.

Mr. BAYLY. We will see how that is. It is true that I took part with the gentleman from Alabama, two years ago, in opposing the unusual honors that were proposed to be offered to Kossuth; but the cases have not one whit more to do with one another than they have with the Reformers. They are quite as distinct. Kossuth came here as an agitator, to ask us to afford him "material aid,"—to enlist our Government in his schemes—to ask us to change our foreign policy, which he implied we did not understand. He did not come here as an emigrant to become a citizen, although, I undertake to say, that the design of the American Government, in offering him a free passage to this country, was to enable him to come here and enjoy that liberty which, I fear, he will never be able to achieve in Europe. He not only did not become naturalized; but he did not take the initiative steps to become naturalized, I believe; he did nothing to put himself under the ægis of American protection. But even if he had, the question then would have been presented whether we would make a fuss over the arrival of such a man. I did not think there was anything in the case to justify the fuss. When Koszta came here he declared his intention to become an American citizen. He came here with a purpose, declared in open court, to put himself under the protection of American laws, and with an intention of securing American rights. But Koszta, after coming here, went back to Europe, and an attempt was made to seize on him illegally in a neutral port. Well, gentlemen may say that that was a matter for Turkey to resent, and that we had no right to interfere, even though he was clothed with our nationality.

Sir, I recollect that in our intercourse with Mexico, a British-born subject, naturalized as an American citizen, claimed the protection of the British Minister, in the city of Mexico, from illegal violence. He went, mortifying as the fact is, not to the American Minister, but to the British Minister. The British Minister approached the Mexican Government, and said, this man has been wronged, and reparation must be made; and similar wrongs must not be perpetrated in future. The Mexican Government said we could not help it—the outrage was committed by a revolutionary mob, and we are not responsible for it.

The reply of the British Minister was, "if you cannot help it, Great Britain can." You are to protect him "on your own soil, and in your own capital, but if you cannot, we can." And in so replying he only gave utterance to what is the law of nations. I want it to be not only the law of nations with Great Britain, but I want it to be the law of nations with America. If any one clothed with our nationality be in any place where the authorities cannot or will not protect him, I want the American Government to reply as the British Minister did: "If you do not protect him we will." When a foreign state declares their inability to protect, then our right begins.

We have not said in the resolutions that Koszta was entitled to protection as an American citizen. He was not; but I do not want my argument to have any connection with the resolutions. Let the resolutions speak for themselves. Mr. Marcy does not contend, nor does anybody else, that he was entitled to protection as an American citizen; but we do contend that Austria had no right to act as she did, through her officer. He was not on Austrian, but on Turkish territory. If we have done any wrong it is to Turkey; but Turkey does not complain. He had been clothed with our nationality, and being so, the very moment that the American commander saw the local authorities would not afford the protection to which he was entitled, and which civil authorities would have given him if he had been in New York instead of Smyrna, he knew the performance of his duties commenced to act as he did.

What do you want with a navy? We know what we want with our Army. It is to take care of the Indians; and I believe that is all it is occupied in; and how usefully, the country can determine. What do you want with a navy? What are you to go to all the expense of retaining squadrons in foreign ports, if they are to do nothing in any emergency, and in a case like this to await instructions?—if they are, to use a homely expression, to lock the door when the steed is stolen? I do not like the standing instructions given to our naval officers. Our naval officers are prohibited, by the standing instructions, from talking. There is a gag law on them. I like that. I am not for their talking. Let gentlemen look into those instructions and see what they really are. The officers have followed them heretofore, too literally. Captain Ingraham has carried them out in the proper spirit, and that is a good foundation for this movement. The gentleman from Alabama says that he has no sympathy with this constantly voting of thanks; that it is making them cheap. Well, in that I sympathize with him.

Mr. SMITH, of Alabama. The gentleman misapprehended me. I said that, as a man, I would be prepared to give Captain Ingraham my thanks and sympathy for the gallantry of his conduct and the chivalry of his nature; but that I doubted the propriety of thanks as a national act.

Mr. BAYLY. It is because this is proposed to be a national act that I think it proper. The gentleman from Alabama the other day deliberately voted a resolution of thanks to General Wool, principally for his conduct at the battle of Buena Vista. He did not then propose to assign all the reasons for his vote, and go into all of the reasonings about the justice and necessity of the Mexican war. That is the way he voted. Let us compare Captain Ingraham's conduct to that of General Wool. What did General Wool do? He did his duty, nobly and manfully, with courage and gallantry. He incurred no other risk or responsibility, however, than that danger which the soldier covets. If he fell, he fell with honor, and doubly blessed. If he conquered, he had in store for him the applause of the nation. No risk was incurred of his being dismissed from the service. No risk did he incur of being brought before civilians with hours and weeks and months to investigate and to examine whether the law was with him or not. He had a plain path of duty before him. There was no difficulty or doubt about it. He could not hesitate or doubt. I do not mean to say he would have hesitated or doubted if there had been any responsibility attached to his duty. But there was none. He incurred a risk which was a soldier's pride. That was all.

But what was Captain Ingraham's case? He, a military man, was doing a civil act; he, a military man, was deciding on a legal question. If he decided wrongly, he was in danger of being censured by his Government. And if that erroneous legal decision had led to mischief, if he had not been broken from the rank he held, he would have been execrated. He had to act on a delicate occasion, in a matter in which civilians here, who have had time and opportunity to examine it, are doubtful as to whether his conduct was right. But he consulted his heart—that South Carolinian heart which beats in his bosom—without going to precedents and musty authorities. And yet, when civilians come to examine it, they say that the impulse of the heart was in accordance with principles of national law.

He not entitled to our thanks! And we thank General Wool, and with the vote of the gentleman from Alabama! [Mr. SMITH.] Not thank Captain Ingraham in a case of this sort! Gentlemen, this is not a case of mere physical courage; that is a common quality; and when you find a deficiency in it, it is the exception, and not the rule. But moral courage is rare; and when you find an eminent instance of it, it should be marked and honored.

Mr. Chairman, I never take notes of a debate, and I do not know that I have touched on all the points which have been raised. I have avoided especially and by design, any reply to the remarks of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SMITH.] Everybody here knows, without my saying it, that there is no analogy in the case of a legal capture and detention and that of an illegal capture and detention. The distinction is too broad between the cases to require illustration. He is in favor of violating law in obedience to false and morbid sympathy. We are in favor of sustaining law—national law—and complimenting the gallantry which sustains it.

This is not an ordinary case. As I said in the few remarks I made, when interrupting my friend from South Carolina, [Mr. ORR,] that our Government, in this matter of Captain Ingraham, has taken a new departure, and hence it is that I want the American Congress to applaud what he has done. I am tired of submitting to everything; and when we have done so, going to other nations begging for damages. We want errors committed, if committed at all, the other way. If there is to be any question of damages, I want to be defendant.

Mr. CLINGMAN. We have been plaintiffs long enough.

Mr. BAYLY. My friend from North Carolina [Mr. CLINGMAN] says we have been plaintiffs long enough. That is what I was saying. With nations, as with individuals, the fear of a tardy verdict for damages for wrongs committed is not always the best security against them.

Mr. PERKINS, of Louisiana, here obtained the floor, but yielded to Mr. BOCK, who moved that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and the House accordingly adjourned until to-morrow at twelve o'clock, m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 6, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXPENSES OF MILITARY ESTABLISHMENTS.

The SPEAKER presented to the House a communication from the War Department, transmitting a statement of the expenditures during the year 1853, from the appropriation for "Contingent Expenses of the Military Establishments;" which was read, and ordered to be laid upon the table, and printed.

CAPTAIN GUNNISON'S SURVEY.

Also, a communication from the same Department, in compliance with a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 22d ultimo, transmitting a report of the Colonel of Topographical Engineers, containing all the information relative to Captain Gunnison's survey in the possession of the War Department; which was read, and ordered to be laid upon the table, and printed.

HERNDON AND GIBBON'S REPORTS.

Mr. MURRAY, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution; which was read and adopted:

Resolved, That there be printed, for the use of the members of this House, ten thousand extra copies of the report of the Secretary of the Navy, communicating the reports of the explorations of the river Amazon and its tributaries, made by Lieutenants Herndon and Gibbon, with the accompanying maps and plates.

ESTIMATES FOR RIVERS AND HARBORS.

The SPEAKER. On the 31st of December last, by the unanimous consent of the House, the further consideration of a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a memorandum explanatory of the estimates for rivers and harbors, was postponed until this day. There are two motions pending in relation to it; one to refer it to the Committee on Commerce, and another to the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. FULLER. Which is the first question in order?

The SPEAKER. The motion to refer to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FULLER. It will be recollected by the House that the subject is already before the Committee on Commerce, on a resolution of inquiry, introduced by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. DUNBAR.] The Committee on Commerce are engaged in an inquiry into that subject; and it strikes me that this is a subject which should appropriately go to that committee, and falls within the class of inquiries embraced in that resolution of inquiry. But if it be the opinion of this House that the subject-matter of the Secretary's letter would be more appropriately referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals, then I think it is proper for the Committee on Commerce to ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject already referred to them. I hope, however, that it will be allowed to take the direction I have intimated, and be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

One remark further; when this subject was before the House on a former occasion, in reply to a statement made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. CAMPBELL,] with reference to the character of former bills reported from the same committee, to this House, I made some allegations, merely intending to meet the objection then made, and said that that committee had considered all sections of the country in relation to appropriations.

I was not in the House when the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EWING] made some remarks alluding to the Committee on Commerce; for, as chairman of that committee, I was engaged in investigating and obtaining information from the Departments in relation to this subject. If the gentleman from Kentucky had listened fully to the remarks made upon this subject, he would have spared that committee some of the censure which he cast upon it. I will not take up the time of the House by further allusion to his remarks; and I hope that the subject will take the course indicated.

Mr. MILLSON. I would like to hear the report of the committee read.

The SPEAKER. It is a communication from the Secretary of War, which will be read for the information of the House.

Mr. HOUSTON. I notice that my friend from Maine [Mr. FULLER] misapprehends the point. It is a proposition, not to refer the communication of the Secretary of War, but a proposition to refer some half dozen items embraced in the estimates which were laid upon the table upon the first day of the session, under the head of rivers and harbors. It is a motion to refer the estimates, and not the report.

The report of the committee was then read.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask the Clerk to read the estimates which I send up.

The estimates were then read by the Clerk, providing for the construction of steam dredges for the Gulf of Mexico; for snag boats for the Mississippi and its tributaries; for the preservation of public property; and for the improvement of western rivers and harbors.

Mr. HOUSTON. The explanatory letters in the possession of the committee, and what has been read by the Clerk, show the object and elucidate the point now before the House.

Mr. MILLSON. I wish to know whether the motion of the gentleman from Alabama was not to discharge the Committee on Ways and Means from the consideration of these estimates, and to refer them to the Committee on Roads and Canals. Is the question divisible? Must not the question be taken first upon the motion to discharge the Committee on Ways and Means?

The SPEAKER. A proposition was made to refer this subject to the Committee on Commerce, and another to the Committee on Roads and Canals. The question will first be taken upon the motion to refer to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MILLSON. I understand that these estimates have already been referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and that that committee now move to be discharged from the further consideration of that question, and that the reference of it be made to the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER. The precise form in which the motion is usually put the Chair does not recollect.

Mr. HOUSTON. That is the usual form.

Mr. MILLSON. I desire to ask the Chair whether the question is not divisible, so that it may first be taken upon the motion to discharge the Committee on Ways and Means, and afterward upon the motion to refer? I wish this question to be left with the Committee on Ways and Means. They now have it under consideration. It has been referred to them, and I should prefer to have it remain with them.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, the question is divisible, and if it be called, the question will be first taken upon the motion to discharge the Committee on Ways and Means from the further consideration of the subject in question.

Mr. MILLSON. Then I shall call for a division. I think an important principle is involved in the settlement of this question of reference; and to that principle I ask the earnest attention of the members of the House.

I cannot vote for the reference of this subject to either of the committees proposed. I do not want to vote to refer it to the Committee on Commerce, because, by so doing, I should recognize the principle that the improvement of rivers and harbors was one of the objects legitimately placed under the power of the Government for making general regulations concerning commerce.

Again, I do not wish to refer it to the Committee on Roads and Canals, because the improvement of rivers and harbors does not under the rules come under the cognizance of that committee. It seems to me that this subject, if we have any right to consider it at all, belongs to the Committee on Ways and Means. It involves a general appropriation of money from the Treasury, and that committee has charge of all such subjects. I therefore think it should remain in the possession of that committee. I know of no standing committee of this House to which the subject can be appropriately referred, if it is not cognizable by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The question of the improvement of rivers and harbors in some sort involves that of the jurisdiction of the Government over the soil of the individual States. It involves a claim of the Government of a property in that soil; and therefore, in that view of the subject, may, perhaps, appropriately go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. But, sir, the Committee on Ways and Means now have possession of the subject, and I am opposed to discharging them from its further consideration.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I was about to say that I presumed the members of the House have made up their minds in reference to the committee they propose to refer this subject to, and I would therefore call the previous question; but—

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask the gentleman to allow me to say a single word before he calls the previous question.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I was going to say that I would not call it now.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have only to say, in connection with the subject which is now presented, that I believe it is entirely in conflict with the whole former practice of legislation here, for the Committee on Ways and Means to report a river and harbor bill. I do not believe they have ever reported such a bill, nor do I believe they ever examined or reported upon the estimates for such a measure.

There is already a great deal of complaint that the Committee on Ways and Means are, in their legitimate action, absorbing too much of the business of legislation; and while I have no particular care in respect to such complaints, while the complaints are unfounded, proposing as I do to discharge my duty as best I can as one of the members of this body, yet if this subject should be referred to that committee, and placed in their charge, I am not sure but some ground may exist for such a complaint.

Sir, I am unwilling as a member of this body, and as a member of the Democratic party—entertaining the political sentiments I do upon this subject—to embody these estimates in any one of the ordinary appropriation bills. The estimates are before us, and if voted, they are to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War; but I do not wish to acknowledge, or to admit the principle that they can appropriately find a place in the Army appropriation bill; because if you do that, you may load down appropriation bills that should be, under the practice of the two Houses of Congress, confined to expenditures authorized by law, with appropriations that are not provided for by law.

I think that the practice of the House heretofore, upon this subject, has been a sound and proper one; and I therefore hope that the House will discharge the Committee on Ways and Means from the further consideration of these estimates, and transfer them to any other committee that this House, in its judgment, may think proper.

[Cries of "Question!"]

Mr. DUNBAR. As a member of the Committee on Commerce, I wish to disabuse the mind of the House from some impressions that were endeavored to be made the other day by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. EWING] with regard to the sentiments of that committee upon the subject of internal improvements. He appeared to have taken up the idea that the Committee on Commerce was opposed to internal improvements. Now, sir, as a member of that committee, I beg leave to state to the House that I am decidedly in favor of those improvements, and I think that the motion of the gentleman from Alabama—the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means—to refer these estimates to the Committee on Commerce, ought to prevail. The Committee on Commerce want the estimates that have been made by the Secretary of War upon the subject of these improvements of our rivers and harbors. The subject has been referred to us, and it is necessary for us, in order that we should act understandingly upon it, that we should have those estimates.

Now, sir, assuredly the interests of the State of Louisiana, which I in part represent, are identical with the interests of the valley of the Mississippi.

Mr. EWING, (interrupting.) I desire to make a brief explanation. I seem to have been misunderstood, in the remarks which I made the other day, by several of the members of the Committee on Commerce. I certainly entertain no unkind feelings towards any of them; and so far as the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUNBAR] is concerned, I would willingly intrust the formation of the details of the bill to him. I would trust him in advance; because of his locality; but it so happens that a majority of the members of the Committee on Commerce do not represent States whose interests are identical with the interests of the Mississippi valley. I am assured that they will report a bill; I have not a doubt of that; but I fear that it will be such a bill as was reported at the last session of Congress, and against which I was compelled in conscience to cast my vote. I do not want simply that a bill shall be reported, but I want a bill that is fair and just to that section of the country from which I come.

There is one reason—begging the gentleman's pardon for retaining the floor—a peculiar reason why this is a matter of great importance.

A new system of taxation, proposed hitherto by the distinguished Senator from Illinois, [Mr. DOUGLAS], and now recommended, if I understand him, by the President of the United States, so peculiarly onerous that we could never submit to it: I speak of the proposition to lay a tonnage duty on domestic commerce. Now, sir, it is extremely important, under these novel circumstances, that a committee, representing the interests of the Mississippi valley, should have the charge of this matter. I do not wish to be understood as making any imputation against the fairness of the Committee on Commerce. I only intimate that, like myself, its members may seek to represent peculiarly and especially the interests of the country from which they come.

Mr. DUNBAR. I did not mean to accuse the gentleman from Kentucky of unfairness in the remarks which he made the other day in regard to the Committee on Commerce. I wished merely to disabuse his mind of the impression that the Committee on Commerce, not having been selected principally from the western States, were therefore opposed to these public improvements. Now, so far as I understand the sentiments of the members composing that committee, they are in favor of the improvement of rivers and harbors. I have no authority to speak for the whole of the committee; but I speak for myself in saying that one of its members is decidedly in favor of these improvements. I believe that the majority of the committee are also in favor of them.

It does appear to me, Mr. Speaker, to be an entire perversion of terms to refer the improvements of rivers and harbors to the Committee on Roads and Canals. I understand that our standing committees are intrusted with certain powers, and have referred to each certain peculiar subjects. Names are given to those committees for the purpose of indicating what subjects should be referred to each of them. Now, I ask why should the subject of the improvements of rivers and harbors be referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals? Assuredly there is no reason for our doing so. I understand, indeed, that it has not heretofore been the custom of this House to refer subjects of this kind to that committee. If that be so, why should a new practice be now introduced; and why should there be a perversion of terms?

Mr. RITCHIE, of Pennsylvania. With the gentleman's permission, I would request the Clerk to read the rule which sets forth the appropriate duties of the Committee on Roads and Canals.

Mr. DUNBAR. I yield the floor, that the rule referred to may be read.

The Clerk then read the 98th rule, as follows:

"98. It shall be the duty of the Committee on Roads and Canals to take into consideration all such petitions and matters or things relating to roads and canals, and the improvement of the navigation of rivers, as shall be presented, or may come in question, and be referred to them by the House; and to report thereupon, together with such propositions relative thereto, as to them shall seem expedient."

Mr. DUNBAR. I am a novice in legislation, and do not pretend to be au fait in the practice of this House, and the duties peculiar to each of its committees; but I perceive that the rule which has just been read gives the Committee on Roads and Canals more power than I supposed it possessed, looking to the nomenclature of the committees of this House. Be that as it may, it only shows that either committee may appropriately consider the subject of internal improvements. I rose for the purpose of disabusing the House of the allegations made on its floor in reference to the sentiments and opinions of the members of the Committee on Commerce on the subject of internal improvements. And I do believe, Mr. Speaker, that the Committee on Commerce are as much in favor of internal improvements—the improvements of harbors and rivers—as any other committee in this House, whether it be the Committee on Roads and Canals, or any other committee.

I am referred, Mr. Speaker, to the 83d rule of this House, which I will take the liberty of reading.

"It shall be the duty of the Committee on Commerce to take into consideration such petitions and matters or things touching the commerce of the United States, as shall be presented, or shall or may come into question, and be referred to them by the House, and to report from time to time their opinion thereon."

Now, this and other rules show that it is peculiarly the duty of the Committee on Commerce to take subjects of this kind into consideration. And it has been the custom, I am informed, of the House to have these subjects of the improvement of harbors and rivers referred to the Committee on Commerce. Now, unless there be some good reason given why a different rule should be followed to that which has been heretofore pursued, I shall consider that the motion of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. Houston,] to refer the subject to the Committee on Commerce, ought to prevail.

I stated, Mr. Speaker, when I first rose, that the interests of my constituents were identical with the interests of the constituents of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Ewing.] We represent here the interests of the valley of the Mississippi. I represent that portion of it which lies at the mouth of the Mississippi, and I take great interest in the subject of internal improvements. At the commencement of the session I introduced a bill into this House for the purpose of removing obstructions at the mouth of the Mississippi; and I propose that this subject—a subject in which I take great interest—should be referred to the consideration of the Committee on Commerce.

Now, if the motion of the gentleman prevail, that this subject be referred to the Committee on Roads and Canals, let me ask what becomes of the disposition of the bill which I introduced, for the purpose of removing obstructions from the mouth of the Mississippi? It appears to me right, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce, because I consider that the proper reference. And we also want the estimates of the Secretary of War to be referred to that committee.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to say to my friend from Louisiana, [Mr. Dunbar,] that he will find that those estimates are in gross, and that if it is his purpose to introduce a bill having for its object any specific improvement, he can propose to refer it to any committee he may see fit. These estimates are in gross, for the operations which have been commenced under the bill passed at the last session of Congress.

Mr. DUNBAR. I must say that I am obliged to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] for his explanation. But the difficulty of referring these subjects to different committees, is this: The danger is that we should not be able to pass any bills on the subject. Different bills will be introduced; and I understand, from what has been done here for years, that it would be impossible, in such cases, to pass any bill, reported for any public improvements. This House always has a bill introduced by a committee; and if such should be for various public improvements, I understand it would then be impossible to introduce a bill for any particular improvements—for instance: a bill for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi—and to get the House to consider a bill and pass it upon its own merits. I would much rather have that course pursued. I consider it would be a much better system of legislation for Congress to pass each bill on its own merits, and decide whether this improvement, or that improvement, should be made on merits of its own.

But we know that this is contrary to all the experience of legislation in this House, and it is impossible to get a bill of this kind passed upon its own merits. I fear if this matter is to be reported upon by the Committee on Commerce, and by the Committee on Roads and Canals, that, between the two committees, both of the bills introduced for the same purpose may be lost, and neither of them passed. Though I am a strict constructionist of the Constitution, and go for State rights, yet at the same time I have never doubted that this Government has the right to make appropriations for great works of national importance—that this Government has the right to make appropriations for the improvement of the mouth of the Mississippi, and its branches which run through various States. I have never had a doubt that the Government has the right to improve harbors. I have always considered that the internal commerce of the United States was of vastly more importance to us than all our foreign commerce. Our internal commerce has been the cause of the growth and prosperity of this country, more than any other cause whatever, save the free institutions of our people. Therefore I have never had a doubt for a moment that this Government has the right to make appropriations for great objects of National improvements.

The danger is, that the bill may be got up in such a way as to prevent its passage through this House and the Senate, or if not to prevent such passage, yet to prevent the obtaining of the signature of the President of the United States, for the same reason that Mr. Polk vetoed the river and harbor bill.

I am in favor of a reasonable bill, not for extravagant appropriations or for local objects, but for national objects. I feel warranted, as one of the Committee on Commerce, in saying that a majority of that committee will go for such a bill.

Mr. HUNT. I was opposed to this reference, because I believed that that committee, as constituted, to be unfriendly to the subject of improvements. I am glad to see my colleague [Mr. Dunbar] come out in favor of the great cause of internal improvement. I hope this House will take it as true—as true it must be—that that committee is constituted so as to advance this great cause.

With this assurance of the gentleman in reference to that matter, I hope the House will allow this subject to go to the Committee on Commerce, as it is proposed. I understand that gentleman to say that the committee is not going to oppose the system of internal improvements which the friends of that system are to bring before this House.

Mr. MILLSON. I suppose my friend speaks only of a majority of that committee.

Mr. HUNT. As a matter of course.

Mr. DUNBAR. I do not wish to be misunderstood upon this subject. I have only given my opinion upon the matter under discussion; and have given my opinion as to what I believe to be the opinions and impressions of a majority of the Committee on Commerce.

I do not wish to be understood as supporting any general system of internal improvement, no more than I wish to be understood as supporting the great American system, so ably advocated, years ago, by the distinguished Mr. Clay. I wish to be understood as in favor of great national improvements; and I have no doubt but the Government has the right to make appropriations for such improvements of rivers and harbors; for the improvement of such rivers as the Mississippi, the Ohio, and other streams which run through different States. I do not desire to be understood as in favor of any wasteful system of expenditure, as was advocated during the administration of John Quincy Adams. I do not wish to be understood as advocating any such general system, but I am in favor of liberal and reasonable appropriations for works of a national character.

Mr. HUNT. I am not satisfied with the explanation of my colleague. I am not willing to trust the internal improvement of the country to gentlemen making declarations with such limitations. I desire to stand by my friends who are in favor of a system of internal improvements, and for a reference of the subject to a committee that can take charge of it, and advocate such a system as friends.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. Dunbar,] speaking as if by authority from the Committee on Commerce, intimates that there is no doubt but that the committee will, within a reasonable time, report a bill. The great difficulty, I fear, that we shall have to encounter, will be, as I intimated the other day, that that committee will not be disposed to report such a bill as the friends of the system desire. The remarks of the honorable gentleman from Louisiana tend to convince my mind upon that point more fully than I was convinced before. He says that he is opposed to a general system of internal improvements. Now, had the gentleman gone on to define what he means by a general system, we should have been better able to understand his position. That is a little like being in favor of a judicious tariff, which I understand to mean protection to sugar in Louisiana—free trade in everything else; protection to iron in Pennsylvania—and free trade for everything else.

I concur with the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. Hunt] who last spoke, and I was quite pleased with his remarks the other morning upon the subject of the tariff. We go for such a system of internal improvements as will promote the great interests of commerce throughout the entire length and breadth of this land; and we go for such a system of protection as shall protect all branches of American industry. If we cannot get a committee to report upon the tariff, or upon the subject of internal improvements, in such a manner as will embody these great principles, I, for one, stand here ready to oppose any partial system. It is for that reason that I will do everything in my power to strike down this idea of protecting iron in Pennsylvania, unless Pennsylvania, and other States engaged in the manufacture of iron, will come forward and say that they will protect the other branches of American industry.

I will notify the gentlemen upon the Committee on Commerce, especially the chairman of that committee, who told us the other day that the committee in the last Congress reported a bill to divide equally into three parts the amount of appropriations, that if, in making up this bill, he will take into consideration the amount of commerce, and the population in these divisions, not forgetting the other appropriations to be made for the benefit of the commerce upon our sea-board—for light-houses, for breakwaters, and for other improvements for the benefit of commerce—I say, if he will make up his calculation in full, allowing an appropriation to each section of the country, in proportion to its population and its commerce, I shall be satisfied with the bill; but if not, I shall stand here to oppose every proposition that may be made for the benefit of the light-house system, or for the benefit of the commerce of our sea-board. This is what we ask for—we demand justice.

There are loud and deep complaints from the valley of the Mississippi, in regard to the system which has heretofore prevailed with reference to these appropriations, and sooner or later a voice will come from that great West which cannot be disregarded by the representatives upon this floor.

I still think, as I said the other morning, that the Committee on Roads and Canals is the proper committee to take charge of the subject; and, as I then stated my reasons for that opinion, I do not think it necessary at this time to repeat them.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. I regret exceedingly that there should be any difference among the friends of harbor and river improvements as to the proper reference of these estimates, and am afraid that this difference will be disastrous to the common object of us all—the passage of a proper river and harbor bill. After eight years of ardent devotion to harbor and river improvements in this House, I think both the friends and enemies of such improvements will concede that, in the course I take, I have but one end in view, and that is a final triumph. These estimates should go to the most friendly committee; and I have thoroughly investigated the organization of the different committees of the House, and can come to no other conclusion than that the Committee on Commerce can be trusted by the friends of harbor and river improvements to a fuller extent than any other committee. I have no delicacy about my own committee. I would freely support a reference to any other, did I not have full confidence in the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. EWING. Will the gentleman state to the House his reasons for coming to the conclusions he has stated? Let us know whether they have gone fully into the details of the matter, and if so, what those details are.

Mr. WENTWORTH. That is exactly what I arose for. But I cannot begin at the end of what I have to say, and speak it backwards. Let the gentleman be patient; I am aware I speak slowly, but—

Mr. EWING. I am afraid you will never get to that point.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I must inform my friend from Kentucky that it is out of order to refer in the House to anything that has taken place in committee. I shall take pleasure in communicating to his private ear any information in my possession, but not in open House. I repeat, however, that as a devoted friend of river and harbor improvements, I shall go for the reference of these estimates to the Committee on Commerce in preference to any other committee in the House.

I will be frank with the gentlemen opposed to these improvements. I always endeavor to be frank. I think there is nothing gained by being otherwise. If I were an enemy of harbor and river improvements, I would by no means allow these estimates to be referred there. I would advocate their reference to the Committee on Roads and Canals. Their enemies ought to show an undivided front in favor of that committee.

Mr. HUNT. Does the gentleman mean to say that I am not a friend to internal improvements?

Mr. WENTWORTH. Certainly not. I know his location, and I have heard his remarks, and I want him to go with me in referring these estimates where we both can attain our object.

Mr. HUNT. Well, sir, I wish always to be distinctly understood in reference to any remarks by which any imputation or insinuation may be made in reference to my position, and therefore I asked the gentleman the question.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I have made no reference to the gentleman. I said if I were an enemy of harbor and river improvements, I would vote for some other committee than the Committee on Commerce.

[Mr. SMYTHE, of Texas, (interrupting,) here announced that his colleague (Hon. PETER H. BELL) was present, and desired to be sworn in. Mr. BELL accordingly presented himself, and was qualified by taking the usual oath of office.]

Mr. WENTWORTH, (resuming.) Informer times efforts were made to frighten Democrats from favoring harbor and river improvements, by charging that they were anti-Democratic, although General Jackson signed bills appropriating more money for harbor and river improvements than all the other Presidents. It was argued that the Baltimore Convention declared against a general system of internal improvements. And I so declare, and ever have declared. I am now, and ever have been, opposed to all improvements that are not of a national and general character. This was the doctrine of General Jackson, who signed harbor and river bills, and vetoed works for internal improvement. The candidates for nomination for President, at the late Baltimore Convention, of the old Democracy and of the young Democracy, at present and then in the other wing of the Capitol, [Senators CASS and DOUGLAS,] voted for the last harbor and river bill, large as it was; and yet neither would desert the Baltimore platform.

Now, the Committee on Roads and Canals is an internal improvement committee in every sense of the word. It is a very necessary committee for Territories, and for the District of Columbia, but I contend that it has no jurisdiction within a sovereign State. To refer these estimates to the Committee on Roads and Canals is to make a strong point against us. It is saying that they are works of internal improvement within sovereign States, and, therefore, are unconstitutional and anti-Democratic. I have voted for every harbor and river bill that has passed Congress during my term of service here, and have had some hand in framing all of them, and I say not one conflicts with the Baltimore platform; not one whose works were not of a national, as contrasted with a State character; not one that was not of a general, as contrasted with a local nature.

If you take this subject away from the Committee on Commerce—a great national committee—and give it to a local committee—a committee of internal improvements, a committee on roads and canals—then, I say, the enemies of the system have made a great and important point against us; and as a friend of a river and harbor bill, I should regret with all my heart that such a thing had been done.

Now, in relation to the committees, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL] thinks that the Committee on Roads and Canals is more favorable to the river and harbor improvements than the Committee on Commerce is. On what facts does he base that opinion? I have before me the record of the proceedings of the last Congress, and I find by that, that the present chairman of the Committee on Commerce voted for the river and harbor bill of the last session; whereas the present chairman of the Committee on Roads and Canals voted against it.

Mr. FULLER. I desire to say a word in explanation. The gentleman will find my vote recorded in favor of the river and harbor bill of the last session, as reported by the Committee on Commerce. I was not present when the bill finally passed, but if I had been I should have voted against it.

Mr. WENTWORTH. As amended by the Senate?

Mr. FULLER. Yes; I should have voted against it as amended by the Senate.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I only intended to say that you were in favor of reporting a bill, and voted for the bill that your committee reported, whereas the present chairman of the Committee on Roads and Canals did not vote for the bill; and yet the gentleman from Ohio wants to send these estimates to the latter committee.

Mr. GREY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WENTWORTH. Certainly. These little interruptions are far from being disagreeable to me. The sooner we understand one another the better. We want to know our friends, and knowing them, I want to advise them in this matter of common interest.

Mr. GREY. The gentleman must bear in mind that the river and harbor bill, which the chairman of the Committee on Commerce voted for last session, was the bill reported to the House before it was amended by the Senate. But did the friends of internal improvements in the West, and in the interior, vote for that bill? Did the friends of the improvements of the rivers and harbors of the West vote for it?

Sir, the river and harbor bill which the gentleman from Maine voted for was not the one that passed last Congress. The West voted against the bill reported to this House by the Committee on Commerce. It passed, however, and went to the Senate, and there appropriations of three or four hundred thousand dollars were added to it, for the benefit of the West. It came back here, and western members agreed to the amendments of the Senate, and the bill therefore passed. But the gentleman from Maine voted against it in the only form in which it was acceptable to western interests.

As the bill passed this House, and before it went to the Senate, it was not acceptable to the gentleman from Ohio, nor was it acceptable to the members from the West. It was only made acceptable by the adoption of most of the amendments made in the Senate.

Mr. FULLER. I would ask the gentleman from Kentucky how many of the members from that State voted for the bill as it passed with the amendments of the Senate?

Mr. GREY. I think, sir, that but a single member voted for the bill as it was reported from the Committee on Commerce. I am of the opinion that every Whig member from that State voted for it as it finally passed Congress. I do not know what was the case elsewhere.

Mr. FULLER. I understood the gentleman's colleague to say that he had voted for the bill; but I do not find his name on the record.

Mr. EWING. I did not vote for the bill which first passed this House; but, as my colleague stated, I voted for it as it was amended by the Senate, it then doing something like justice to the West, for which reason the chairman of the Committee on Commerce says that he could not vote for it.

Mr. FULLER. I have looked over the record, and I do not find the gentleman's name recorded.

Mr. EWING. You will find me voting against the motion to lay the bill upon the table, which was the only motion upon which the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FULLER. The bill, as it was returned from the Senate, appropriated $2,100,000, one million of which amount was appropriated for the valley of the Mississippi. That, I suppose, was the reason why the bill was constitutional in the opinion of the gentlemen from that part of the country.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I am sorry for these local disputes and jealousies. I can have no participation in them. Neither my own sentiments, nor those of my constituents, nor my location will allow me to be sectional. I am a national man in every sense of the word, a National Democrat, and am growing stronger and stronger in the faith every day I live. The commerce of my constituents is that of the whole nation. Whether there is a harbor made on the Atlantic or the Pacific, on the Gulf of Mexico or the lakes, it is equally their harbor. So of the great rivers. In my legislation here I shall not attempt to withhold from others their deserts because I cannot get my own. As to who gets most in these appropriations, it is enough for me to know at this time that the most fortunate get too little; and unless we act in concert, we shall hereafter get nothing.

Now, the gentleman from Ohio, and the gentleman from Kentucky, are of the opinion that the great Mississippi valley is not properly represented in the Committee on Commerce. I do not see how it can be better represented than it is there. The four members on it from that part of the country are as warmly in favor of these improvements as the gentleman from Ohio or the gentleman from Kentucky. In my opinion, six out of the nine of its members are decidedly in favor of harbor and river improvements. I have no hesitation in saying—though I cannot speak as to the facts, but I say it as my belief, and I would say it of my own knowledge, too, were it not unparliamentary to do so—that six out of nine of this committee are as much in favor of these improvements as the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. EWING.] I am afraid I cannot say the same of four members of the other committee.

A VOICE. How are the Democrats on the committee?

Mr. WENTWORTH. All right. Four of the seven Democrats, if not five of the seven, and both of the Whigs, are right.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the only fear with our friends seems to be, is the great West fairly represented on the committee. In addition to my former course, and what I have said to-day, I will add that my district extends from the lakes, on one side, to the Mississippi river on the other. Then there is the gentleman from New Orleans, who so ably addressed us this morning, [Mr. DUNBAR.] Then there is the gentleman from the Dunkirk district, New York, [Mr. FENTON,] and the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. HARLAN.] We four gentlemen would certainly not do the West, our own homes, injustice, any more than my own votes here show that I would do the East injustice. Indeed, come from what quarter he will, I do not believe there is one man on the Committee on Commerce hostile to the West. With this view of the facts, Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman permit me to say a few words here?

Mr. WENTWORTH yielded the floor.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I feel, Mr. Speaker, that I have a deep interest in this system; and the only purpose that I have had in view, in what I have said, and in the motion which I submitted—and which failed—some days ago, was to secure an early report, and a free and liberal appropriation for the improvement of the rivers and harbors of this country. Now, sir, the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WENTWORTH,] belonging to the majority in this House, and being, I may say, one of its leaders—

Mr. WENTWORTH. Oh, no, sir! I am but an humble follower in the ranks of the great Democratic party, to which I have ever belonged, in the footsteps of Jefferson and Jackson.

Mr. CAMPBELL. He speaks for that majority, and pledges us that there is a majority in the Committee on Commerce who are in favor of an early report, and of a liberal bill. He takes on himself that responsibility.

Mr. WENTWORTH. I do, sir.

Mr. CAMPBELL. He takes the responsibility of speaking for them, and assures the House that the Democratic members of that committee are in favor of such a report. Now, sir, if that be true—and I am bound to think that it is true, for I presume the gentleman [Mr. WENTWORTH] speaks by the book, and by authority—he takes the responsibility of a failure, should a failure of that system follow the bill. Then I say, in view of this fact, and as I belong to that almost hopeless minority who are, nevertheless, the only true and steadfast friends of the system, I do not feel like taking the responsibility of pressing, under these circumstances, my views any longer upon the House. I am willing to trust once more to the Democratic promise; once more, Mr. Speaker, am I willing to trust to it, especially as it comes from such a high quarter as the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WENTWORTH.] In view of these facts, therefore, I desire to say that I do not intend to make any further active opposition to his proposition.

Mr. HUNT. I also beg to say that I am now satisfied with the reference of this subject to the Committee on Commerce. In doing so, however, I am standing exclusively on the same ground that I took originally. I wish that these matters go to the friends of internal improvements.

Mr. WENTWORTH. Will not the others withdraw their opposition also? Let the good work go on—let us act together.

Mr. EWING. Will the gentleman permit me to make a remark?

Mr. WENTWORTH yielded the floor.

Mr. EWING. The gentleman yields to me the floor for the purpose of withdrawing my motion. I must be permitted, however, to say, that I am not at all satisfied—from the experience I have had—with the arrangement made. My experience in regard to these matters is too recent for me to be willing to trust the Committee on Commerce in reference to the details of the bill, and to the equal distribution of appropriations, so far as the West is concerned.

But, sir, as I find that western members are willing once more, as they say, to trust the Committee on Commerce, I know it would be vain for me to struggle against even my own friends. I know that the enemies of appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors will, of course, vote for the Committee on Commerce; and if the friends of the system will also vote for that committee, there is no chance for me to press my motion. I therefore, sir, withdraw it.

Mr. WENTWORTH, of Illinois. The skies are brightening. Concert of action, so absolutely necessary among friends of a common cause, is likely to be secured. A few days ago, a resolution of inquiry upon this subject was referred to the Committee on Commerce, by a large vote. Under the instruction of the House, we are inquiring into this matter. The information we want is upon your table. We want the estimates to guide us in framing our bill. Shall we have them? This is the only question before the House. I move the previous question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Do I understand that the motion to refer the matter to the Committee on Roads and Canals has been withdrawn?

The SPEAKER. The motion was withdrawn.

The previous question then received a second, and the main question was ordered to be put.

The question was then taken on the motion to discharge the Committee on Ways and Means from the further consideration of the estimates, and it was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. As the Committee on Ways and Means have been discharged, and the question is now before the House, and being opposed to the whole system, I move to lay the estimates upon the table.

The question was taken, and the motion was disagreed to.

The question then recurred upon the motion to refer the estimates to the Committee on Commerce; and, being put, it was decided in the affirmative.

Mr. WENTWORTH, moved to reconsider the vote last taken, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table; which latter motion was agreed to.

ROGUE RIVER WAR, AND MILITARY ROAD IN OREGON.

Mr. LANE, in pursuance of previous notice, introduced the following bills; which were severally read a first and second time by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill to authorize the Secretary of War to settle and adjust the expenses of the Rogue river war, in Oregon; and

A bill to provide for the continuance of the military road from Myrtle creek to Scottsburg, in Oregon.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. What is the regular order of business?

The SPEAKER. The consideration of private bills.

Mr. JONES. Then I call for that order of business.

The first bill in order was a bill of the Senate for the relief of the legal representatives of Caleb Swan; which was taken up, read a first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Senate bill "for the relief of the legal representatives of Dr. William Somerville, deceased," was read the first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Senate bill "for the relief of Joseph Gonder, jr., and John Duff," was read the first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Senate bill "for the relief of the legal representatives of Joshua Kennedy, deceased," was read the first and second time by its title.

Mr. COBB. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. LETCHER. What kind of a claim is it? Mr. COBB. It is a claim for Indian depredations.

Mr. LETCHER. Then it should go to the Committee on Indian Affairs; and I make that motion.

The question was first taken upon Mr. COBB's motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Claims; and it was decided in the negative.

The bill was then referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Senate bill "authorizing Victor Morass to relinquish certain lands, and enter the same quantity elsewhere," was read the first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

Senate bill "changing the name of the American-built steamer Falcon to that of Queen City," was read the first and second time by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WARREN. As a matter of courtesy, I ask leave to introduce a bill of which notice has been given.

Mr. JONES. I object.

The SPEAKER. There being no further private business upon the Speaker's table, the House will, unless otherwise ordered, now proceed to consider the report of the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

A message was here received from the Senate, informing the House of the passage by that body of a bill of the following title:

"A bill for the relief of Joseph Mitchell."

Mr. FAULKNER. I move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

The question was then taken, and it was decided in the affirmative.

The House accordingly resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, (Mr. DISNEY in the chair.)

INDIANA UNIVERSITY LAND.

The CHAIRMAN announced the first business in order to be the consideration of the following bill:

"An act to indemnify the State of Indiana for the failure of title to a township of land granted to said State on her admission into the Union in 1816."

The bill was read through by the Clerk.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. This is objection day. The gentleman who had charge of this bill is not now present, but I presume the House are satisfied with the discussion which has been had upon it, and that no one will object to its passage. I propose, therefore, that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House.

Mr. LETCHER. I object to that proposition. I understand that there is a suit pending in reference to this matter which has not been disposed of. I do not wish to see the matter disposed of here until the termination of that suit.

Mr. ORR. It has been disposed of.

Mr. LETCHER. I do not so understand it.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Must the bill be laid aside if objected to?

The CHAIRMAN. It must be passed over if any gentleman objects.

The next bill in order was the following:

"A bill for the relief of Lewis B. Willis, late a paymaster in the Army of the United States."

The bill was read through.

The report of the Committee on Naval Affairs which accompanied the bill, was read; from which it appears that the petitioner was a paymaster in the Army of the United States during the late war with Great Britain, and as such disbursed very large sums of money. He visited Washington city in 1816, for the purpose of having his accounts finally settled, but in consequence of the destruction of a portion of his accounts and vouchers in the conflagration of the public buildings by the enemy in 1814, no final settlement could be made. In 1822, a suit was instituted against him by the United States in the district court of Louisiana for an alleged defalcation, and after the amounts received by the petitioner and the sums disbursed by him had been carefully and vigilantly scanned by the jury and court, a verdict was rendered that the sum of $593 50 was due the petitioner. That verdict was approved by the court, and judgment was entered against the United States for the amount. The claim was subsequently presented at the Treasury Department, but was rejected on the ground that it could not be paid without an act of Congress making the necessary appropriation. The object of the bill is to make that appropriation.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Before that bill is laid aside to be reported to the House, I would ask of the gentleman who reported it, whether the committee were satisfied of the justice of the claim, independent of the judgment; or whether they reported the bill because there was a judgment rendered against the Government? I do not know by what authority the court could render a judgment against the Government.

Mr. FAULKNER. I would remark to the gentleman from Tennessee that an examination of this case was made at the Treasury Department, and nothing could be found to impugn the validity and justice of that judgment. The gentleman himself will perceive that the Solicitor of the Treasury states, on the authority of the district attorney, that the vouchers filed by Captain Willis were ample and sufficient, and that there was no just ground of appeal on the behalf of the Government. Inquiry into the matter was instituted at the Treasury Department, and there seemed to be a general acquiescence in the justice of the claim.

The bill was then laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The committee next proceeded to the consideration of House bill No. 51, entitled "A bill for the relief of the widow and heirs of Elijah Beebe, deceased." The bill was read through.

At the request of Mr. EASTMAN, the report accompanying the bill was read for the information of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. I hear no objection to the bill.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I should like some information from the Committee on Indian Affairs with reference to this bill. It seems to me, from the reading of the report, that the appropriation is for depredations committed by a tribe of Indians on the property of the claimants, or of their ancestor. If this be true, there is a law bearing upon cases of the kind; and I should like to know from the gentleman who reported that bill whether it comes within the provisions of the law I allude to. I believe it is the law of 1834. I speak now of the intercourse act; and my recollection of that law is, that it requires that, in cases of this sort, where depredations have been committed by a tribe of Indians to which the Government is paying annuities, the amount shall be taken from the annuity of the Indian tribe; and if the depredations have been committed by a tribe of Indians to whom the Government is not paying annuities, then I understand the rule to be that the Government is not bound to make compensation.

Several MEMBERS. "No!" "No!"

Mr. HOUSTON. I tell the gentleman, then, that I will make this objection when the case comes up.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is that objection made?

The CHAIRMAN. It is.

Mr. JONES. Then, sir, by the rule, the bill, when it gives rise to discussion, cannot be considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Houston] as objecting to the passage of the bill, but as merely rising to inquire for information. Of course, if he objects to the passage of the bill, it must go over. The Chair cannot give any construction to the gentleman's remarks; but it understood that he merely put them forward for the purpose of eliciting information.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not want to prevent the passage of the bill; I merely want information on the point I have mentioned.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. This bill has been before a committee. I may state that the matter of it was fully investigated by two committees, and reported on unanimously by both these committees. It was also investigated carefully by Mr. Dodge, one of the most scrupulous and faithful public servants in the country. I trust no objection will be offered to its passage.

Mr. LETCHER. If I understand it aright, this claim for Indian depredations originated in the year 1822. If my recollection serves me in regard to this intercourse act, one of the sections of that act requires that before the Government can be made liable for depredations of this sort, the party setting up the claim for damages shall have raised the question in the Indian territory, and fixed the liability upon the parties there.

This case originated in 1822, and from that time to the present, this is the first occasion upon which this claim has come up for consideration. I should like to know whether this case comes within the limits of the law; whether it is shown that the depredations were committed; and whether the facts have been settled in regard to them; and, if so, why this claim has not been brought up for discussion during the period intervening between 1822 and 1853—thirty-one years.

Mr. WASHBURN. I answer to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. LETCHER,] that this claim did originate in 1822. The proofs were made in conformity to the act called the "intercourse act" of 1802, but the matter was not acted upon by the Department. The party, Mr. Beebe, died soon after the application for indemnity was made. The heirs did not follow up the matter, and no action was taken by the proper Department of the Government until the year 1837, when the Commissioner of Indian Affairs instructed Mr. Dodge, Governor of Wisconsin, and ex officio Superintendent of Indian Affairs, to make an investigation of the claim. He did as he was instructed, and made an investigation of the matter, and gave the certificate which has been read here by the Clerk. There was no action taken upon that action of Governor Dodge for some length of time. When that action was taken, objection was made by the Indian Bureau as to the formality and sufficiency of the testimony which had been taken in the case. Hence it is that the parties come here for relief. The whole matter has been investigated, under the direction of the Government, by a long-tried, vigilant, and most faithful public servant. All the testimony and facts in the case were before Governor Dodge, and his adjudication ought to be satisfactory. Under the act of 1802, there was no limit as to the time when the claim against the tribes of Indians committing the depredations should be made; but this claim was actually made within two years, I think. This application for relief was first presented here at the last Congress.

Mr. Beebe died in 1823; but I stated that within his lifetime he made an application to the Indians, and furnished the proof required by the act which has been referred to.

Governor Dodge, upon his investigation of the claim, gave interest to the claimants, which made the amount nearly six thousand dollars. But the committee, in their investigation, concluded to cut off the claim of interest, and they give only the original amount.

I hope, therefore, under the circumstances, that the committee will allow the bill to be reported to the House without objection.

Mr. LETCHER. I went this morning to the committee room for the purpose of getting the report in this case. This is the second time I have been there to get reports, in order to inform myself in regard to the merits of all claims which come up here for consideration. I was told that the report was not printed. I find this report here is a very long one, embracing some twelve or fifteen pages, one third of which has probably not been read to the House, and consequently the House is not in possession of the facts upon the record. I therefore object, in order to give members time to investigate the case.

Objection being made, the bill went over under the rule.

ISAAC P. SIMONTON.

Senate bill "for the relief of the legal representatives of Isaac P. Simonton, deceased," was next taken up.

The bill was read through by the Clerk.

A MEMBER. Read the report.

Mr. MACE. I can, in a minute, explain to the House the nature of this case, without detaining them with the reading of these lengthy documents.

The payment of $800 is provided for in the treaty of 1837 with these Indians. It was, however, to be made from the proceeds of the sales of certain lands belonging to the United States, as soon as these lands should be sold.

In 1838, another treaty was made, appropriating $75,000 for the purpose of paying the demands specified in the first treaty. That appropriation was exhausted without paying this demand, and one other small claim which has since been paid, and is referred to in this report.

The lands set apart for the payment of this claim is now, and has been, since the ratification of the treaty of 1837, held at $2 50 an acre, while the lands adjoining have been sold at the usual price of $1 25 per acre.

The Committee on Claims do not deem it necessary, in the small matter of this account, to ask the Commissioner of the Land Office whether the sum of eight hundred dollars had been realized from the sale of the lands set apart for the payment of these claims; but inasmuch as it was a claim which must at last be paid out of the general treasury, thought it would be better to pay the heirs of Major Simonton the sum stipulated by the treaty. As I remarked, this is the last claim remaining unpaid arising out of the stipulations of that treaty. I hope, therefore, there will be no objection, but that the bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House.

There was no objection, and the bill was accordingly laid aside.

MADISON PARTON.

The next bill in order was the "bill for the relief of Madison Parton."

The bill and report were read through by the Clerk.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask if this bill provides for the payment of interest?

Mr. HILLYER. I will reply to the gentleman from Tennessee. I understand the nature of this case, for I have had the management of it since it has been pending before the Committee on Claims. It is a very small claim, originating in the year 1838. Madison Parton, enlisted in the service of the United States in July, 1837, and served until February, 1838. He was paid about the last of October, 1837, what was then due him, to wit: for about two months and twenty days' service. At the time of his discharge in 1838, his name of course was stricken from the roll, so that when the roll was returned to the War Department, his name did not appear upon it. On his application to the War Department for the amount that was due from November, 1837, until February, 1838—about three months—he was informed that the Department could not pay him, because it was controlled by the muster-roll. The muster-roll furnished conclusive evidence as to who were members of the company, and the length of time they had served.

The amount of the claim is small. Parton is a poor man, and an ignorant man, and has never been able to prosecute his claim before this House with effect. It has been pending here, however, since 1848, in some shape or other, and was pending before different Departments of the Government long prior to that time. He has been, to the best of his ability, prosecuting his claim ever since it originated.

I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] that this bill does provide for the payment of interest upon the claim, on the ground that it is justly due as any part of the claim; but I hope the gentleman will not object to the bill on that score.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to strike out that part of the bill which provides for the payment of interest. If that is not done, I shall object to the passage of the bill.

Mr. HILLYER. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon that amendment. He can move to strike out that portion of the bill when it comes into the House. I earnestly appeal to him to let the bill go before the House in its present shape.

Mr. JONES. The bill has been referred to this committee in order that it may be perfected, and no gentleman here knows better than the gentleman from Georgia that we can do nothing in the way of amending it after it gets into the House. The previous question will be called upon it, and all amendments will be cut off.

Mr. HILLYER. Well, I have no objection to a vote being taken on the amendment in the committee.

Mr. MACE. I desire to say but a word or two. The only reason why the Committee on Claims inserted a provision in this bill for the payment of interest was, that they believed the claimant was entitled to the money from the time he made application for his pay to the War Department; and such being the case, we could see no reason why the Government should not pay interest as well as an individual. Usually the committee refuse to allow interest on claims. But this is a very small matter any how.

The question was then taken on Mr. Jones's amendment; and, on a division, there were only 48 in the affirmative.

Mr. HILLYER. I do not want a further division. I am willing to let the amendment be adopted.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I must object to the bill. Let it go over till another day.

Mr. HILLYER. I will agree to the amendment which has been proposed, if the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. JONES. No, sir, I prefer that the bill shall go over.

The bill was therefore laid over.

The committee next proceeded to the consideration of House bill No. 58, "for settling the claims of the legal representatives of Richard W. Meade, deceased."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised that the report accompanying the bill is extremely long.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It is too important a bill to be considered at this time. It claims the payment by the Government of half a million of dollars, on which amount interest will also be demanded. I object.

Objection being made, the bill was passed over.

The committee next proceeded to the consideration of House bill No. 59, "A bill authorizing the issuing of patents to award an extension of the patent of Samuel Colt, a citizen of the United States, for an improvement in fire-arms."

The bill was read through.

Mr. HENN. I object to that bill.

The bill, objection being made, was passed over under the rule.

The committee next proceeded to the consideration of House bill No. 63, "for the relief of Charles Lee Jones."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, objected to it, and it went over under the rule.

The committee next took up House bill No. 98, "A bill for the relief of Henry Lewis, of Clinton county, New York."

Mr. MACE. A motion has been made in the committee from which that bill came to reconsider its favorable report, and I therefore ask that it be passed over.

Mr. LETCHER. Had it not better be recommended to the committee?

Mr. MACE. I do not think that it is necessary to do so. We can consider the motion to reconsider as well without the motion of reference as with it.

The bill for the relief of George Simpton coming up next in order, was read.

Mr. HAMILTON objected, and it went over under the rule.

The next bill in order on the Calendar was a bill for the relief of William Blake, providing for an increase of pension.

No objection being made, it was laid aside, to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

House bill (No. 103) "for the relief of Ferdinand Clark," coming up in order, was read by the Clerk.

Mr. FULLER. As the report in this case is lengthy, I can give a short synopsis of it by way of explanation to the House.

By the act of Congress of the 30th of June, 1834, certain duties were imposed upon Spanish vessels clearing from ports of the United States, and countervailing duties upon American vessels landing cargoes in Cuba and Porto Rico. The memorial-ist in this case being an American citizen, instead of shipping his rice and lard on board an American vessel, whereby he would have had to pay duty upon landing the goods, shipped them on board of a Spanish brig, and paid the duties upon them to the collector of the port of Charleston. The brig was wrecked, and never reached the port of destination.

The report sets forth that it was the object of the law to impose those duties upon goods in Spanish vessels, landed in Cuba. But inasmuch as the petitioner never had the benefit of landing the goods there, it was considered unjust to impose upon him the tonnage duties.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Let it go over.

Objection being made to the bill, it went over under the rule.

House bill (No. 104) "for the relief of Adolphus Mier & Co., of St. Louis," coming up in order; and having been read,

Mr. SKELTON objected, and it went over under the rule.

Senate bill "for the relief of Wilson & Brothers, of St. Louis, Missouri," coming up in order, was read through by the Clerk.

Mr. SKELTON objected to its consideration, and it was laid over.

Senate bill "for the relief of Robert Grignon" was then read through by the Clerk. This bill provides for the payment to Robert Grignon of the sum of $19,000, in full satisfaction of his claims arising out of the treaty with the Menomonee tribe of Indians.

Mr. HENDRICKS. The sum claimed is a very large one, and this matter ought to be investigated.

Mr. EASTMAN. There is not a more just claim before Congress; and gentlemen will be satisfied of the fact, if they will take the trouble to listen to the reading of the report of the committee.

The Clerk then proceeded to read the report.

Mr. HAVEN, (interrupting.) I think this claim ought to be looked into. I object.

Mr. EASTMAN. If the gentleman will only have patience to hear the report read, he will see that it is a perfectly clear case, and I am sure will not object.

Mr. HAVEN. I have heard enough to satisfy me that it involves a question which we ought not to settle without examination.

Mr. EASTMAN. There is no question at all involved.

Mr. HAVEN. I must object.

Mr. EASTMAN. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his objection, at least until he can hear read a communication from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Mr. HAVEN. I cannot withdraw my objection.

The bill was therefore passed over.

The next bill coming up in order was the bill "for the relief of George G. Bishop, and the legal representatives of John Arnold, deceased."

Mr. EASTMAN. I object to its consideration.

The Calendar having now been read through, Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee, moved that the committee rise, and report to the House the bills laid aside for that purpose.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. JONES, of Tennessee] having taken the chair, the Chairman [Mr. DISNEY] reported that the Committee of the Whole House had, according to order, had under consideration various private bills, and had directed him to report back the following, with a recommendation that they do pass:

House bill (No. 6) "for the relief of Lewis B. Willis, late a paymaster in the Army of the United States;"

House bill (No. 53) "for the relief of the legal representatives of Isaac B. Simonton, deceased;" and House bill (No. 100) "for the relief of William Blake."

ADJOURNMENT TILL TUESDAY.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I move that when the House adjourns, it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next.

[Cries of "No! No!"]

Mr. EWING. I would suggest to my colleague the propriety of not adjourning over to-morrow, if we are to adjourn on Monday.

Mr. STANTON. I propose that we should adjourn over till Tuesday, because Monday is set apart as the day on which the battle of New Orleans is to be celebrated. That is my only reason.

Mr. WHEELER. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I demand tellers.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CHURCHWELL. I will withdraw the demand for tellers.

Mr. ROBBINS. I renew it.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MACE and SAPP were appointed.

The question was then taken on Mr. STANTON's motion; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 96, noes 37.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Is it in order to submit the motion that the House now proceed to the consideration of the business upon the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. It is not; this being private bill day.

The bill "for the relief of Lewis P. Willis, late a paymaster in the Army of the United States," was then taken up, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. Is it not competent to move that the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole, with recommendations that they do pass, be voted on en masse?

The SPEAKER. That can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. WHEELER. I object.

Bills Nos. 53 and 100, which were reported to the House with the recommendation that they do pass, were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, were read a third time, and passed.

BUSINESS ON THE SPEAKER'S TABLE.

Mr. WHEELER. I move that the House do now proceed to the consideration of the business on the Speaker's table.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

SMALL NOTES IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House Senate bill, entitled "A bill to suppress the circulation of small notes as a currency in the District of Columbia;" which was read a first and second time by its title; and,

On motion by Mr. HAMILTON, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

DISTRICT COURTS IN CALIFORNIA.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House Senate bill No. 28, "A bill concerning the district courts of the United States in California;" which was read a first and second time by its title; and,

On motion by Mr. LATHAM, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

WAREHOUSING.

The SPEAKER laid before the House Senate bill No. 39, "A bill to extend the warehousing system by establishing private bonded warehouses and for other purposes;" which was read a first and second time by its title; and,

On motion by Mr. COBB, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

The next bill upon the Speaker's table was Senate bill No. 13, entitled "A bill prescribing the manner of appointing the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury."

The SPEAKER. This bill is upon its third reading; and upon that the previous question has been demanded.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I wish to inquire, sir, whether that is the Senate bill?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. My impression was that the question was upon a motion made by myself, that the bill should be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I therefore move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the third reading of the bill. If the previous question be seconded, then the question will be on its reference; if that fail, then the question will be on the amendment; and if that fail, then on ordering the bill to its third reading.

Mr. ORR. Will the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] withdraw his demand for the previous question? I propose to offer a substitute for the bill.

Several MEMBERS. "No!" "No!"

The SPEAKER. Then the question will be on seconding the demand for the previous question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. I suppose the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. ORR] would not make the request he has made, unless he had fully considered the effect of his substitute. As I am not in the habit of standing in the way of gentlemen under such circumstances, I withdraw my motion for the previous question.

Mr. ORR. I propose, sir, to offer a substitute for the bill from the Senate. I desire the attention of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. PHILLIPS.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair would remind the gentleman from South Carolina that a motion to refer having been made, and being now pending, a motion to amend the bill is not now in order.

Mr. ORR. I would inquire who made the motion to refer?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not recollect, but he has the impression that it was made by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE.]

Mr. ORR. Will the gentleman from Kentucky, then, oblige me by withdrawing that motion also?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is reminded, and he now recollects, that there are two motions of reference pending, one to refer to the Committee on Ways and Means, and the other, which was made by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE,] to refer to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. ORR. The motion to refer to the Committee on Ways and Means was withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. That motion was made by the gentleman from New Hampshire, [Mr. HIBBARD.]

Mr. HIBBARD. To accommodate the gentleman from South Carolina, I will withdraw that motion.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I object to the withdrawal of those motions to refer.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would say to the gentleman from Virginia that he cannot object, or at least, that his objection will not prevent the withdrawal of the motions, because any motion made by a member of the House is within his control until the House shall have taken action upon it, and thereby taken it out of his possession.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. If it is in order, to accommodate the gentleman I will withdraw my motion to refer the bill to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. BAYLY. I did not mean, nor do I now mean, at all to make a point upon the Speaker, or to take an appeal from his decision. I wish, therefore, that the Chair would not tell me that I have nothing to say. [Laughter.] I apprehended that the Chair was going to say that I meant to intimate that when a motion had been once made, and was in the possession of the House for two or three days, no one member had a right to withdraw it.

Mr. ORR. The only motion that cannot be withdrawn is a motion to reconsider after the second day succeeding the disposition of the question proposed to be reconsidered.

The SPEAKER. The 45th rule provides:

"After a motion is stated by the Speaker, or read by the Clerk, it shall be deemed to be in the possession of the House, but may be withdrawn at any time before a decision or amendment."

There has been no decision or amendment on either of the motions to refer; consequently, under that rule, the Chair thinks the motions are under the control of the movers. A motion made for reconsideration cannot be withdrawn by the mover after the time has expired in which a motion for reconsideration can be made. That rule is to prevent persons from making a motion of that kind, and then, after the time has expired in which the motion can be again made, withdrawing it, and thus take it out of the power of the House to have a reconsideration.

Mr. ORR. I propose to amend the Senate resolution by striking out all after the word "resolved," and insert in lieu thereof the words:

That hereafter, as the office of Assistant Secretary of the Treasury shall be vacated, the appointment of his successor shall be made by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

In presenting this amendment, I desire to make a brief statement, and I shall not consume much of the time of the House in debating it. I desire to conform the legislation of this Congress to that of the last Congress. At the last Congress it was thought necessary, in consequence of the increased dignity of the Assistant Postmaster General—that that officer should be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. That provision was, therefore, inserted in the Post Office bill of the last session of Congress, and the amendment which I have proposed and read was copied from it, word for word. The provision was made prospective in its operation, as all legislation should be.

Gentlemen upon this floor have protested—and I believe their protestations—that they have no hostility to any particular individual in pressing the passage of this Senate resolution.

It does look as if in other quarters, not here, that hostility was aimed at a particular person. Now, special legislation against an individual is generally dangerous, and it is always unjust. This office was created in 1849, and it was not found for a period of five years that he was of that class or description of superior officers which are required to be nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate. I do not think now that he is an officer of that description. But why, if there be no hostility to a particular person, is it now thus suddenly found that the Constitution requires this officer to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate? The very title of the officer is a sufficient description to my mind of the character of the office which he holds. It is that of Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. That defines the character of the officer; and if the legislative department of the Government choose to invest the appointment of that officer with the head of the bureau, or with the President alone, they have a perfect right, in my judgment, to do so.

I concur very fully in the constitutional argument made by my friend from Alabama, [Mr. PHILLIPS.] I concede that there is plausibility in the argument made by the gentleman from Virginia, but I do not think that the House will concur in the conclusions to which he comes, that this officer is one of that class of superior officers who should, of necessity, be nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The amendment, as I stated before, will conform the legislation of the present to that of the last Congress. It was not pretended, during the last Congress, in the section in the Post Office bill, which came from the Senate, that it would be just, right, and proper to apply the law to the existing Assistant Postmaster General; neither is it right to apply the law which is proposed to be passed now to the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. STANTON, of Tennessee. I would ask the gentleman from South Carolina whether the act to which he refers was not passed near the close of the last session of Congress, when a new Administration was coming into power, and when the reasonable supposition was that there would be an important change among those officers who were to be appointed by the President, by and with the consent and advice of the Senate?

Mr. ORR. I have no doubt there was an expectation that there might be a change in the appointment of these officers. The effect of the resolution, whether these officers were to hold ten days, ten months, or ten years, is precisely the same. The declared purpose of Congress was not to legislate out of office an inferior officer who had derived his existence and authority from his superior in office, and the principle was universally acquiesced in as correct. Now I desire that we shall follow this wholesome precedent and make the resolution of the Senate retrospective in its operation—apply the same rule to the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury that our predecessors applied to the Assistant Postmaster General. The substitute I offer accomplishes this result. This matter has undergone a very full discussion, and if the House concur with me in the view which I take of it, they will pass the amendment which I offer; and upon it I call the previous question.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I desire to speak upon the amendment.

The SPEAKER. There is a demand for the previous question.

Upon seconding the demand for the previous question, a division being had, there were—ayes 70, noes not counted.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. LETCHER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WHEELER. Upon that motion I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. FAULKNER and WHEELER were appointed.

The question was then taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 73, noes 69.

So the motion was agreed to; and

The House, at three o'clock, p. m., adjourned until Tuesday.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, January 9, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of Thursday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NORRIS in the chair) laid before the Senate a report from the Secretary of War, communicating, in pursuance of the act of April 2, 1794, a statement of the expenses of the national armories, and the number of arms and appendages made thereat during the year ending June 3, 1853; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Also, a report from the Secretary of War, communicating, in pursuance of the act of March 3, 1809, a statement of the expenditures for the contingent expenses of the military establishment during the year 1853; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Also, a report of the Secretary of War, in answer to the resolution of the Senate of the 27th ultimo, relative to the experiments made to test the relative efficacy and usefulness of the Onondaga solar salt, and the Turk's Island salt, in the cure and packing of provisions; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. WELLER presented the petition of Edward Wheeler, praying a pension in consideration of the services of his father, Samuel Wheeler, during the war of the revolution; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Also, the petition of John Boykin, praying a pension in consideration of the services of his father, Bias Boykin, during the war of the Revolution; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. BRIGHT presented the petition of Judson R. Osgood, of Indianapolis, praying the enactment of such laws relating to American patents as shall more effectually guard the rights of patentees from foreign infractions; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Mr. CHASE. I hold in my hand, and desire to ask for it the favorable consideration of the Committee on the Judiciary, a memorial signed by the judges and members of the bar of Cincinnati, representing the great importance of speedy action upon the bill to divide the State of Ohio into two judicial districts, growing out of the extension of maritime jurisdiction in the courts of the United States. I ask that it may be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and I hope the committee will give early attention to the subject.

It was so referred.

Mr. CHASE presented the petition of C. H. Crawford and others, of Dayton, Ohio, praying the enactment of a law giving further remedies to patentees; which was referred to the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office.

Also, the proceedings of a meeting of citizens of Cincinnati, Ohio, held on the 30th of December, 1853, relative to the destruction of the railroad passing through the city of Erie, by the citizens of Erie; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. CASS presented the petition of George Fitzsimmons, praying to be allowed arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, the petition of David P. Weeks, praying to be allowed his pension, which was suspended during the time he was employed in the War Department; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JOHNSON presented the petition of R.

W. Johnson, praying the establishment of a mail route from Antoine to Camden, in the State of Arkansas; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, a letter from F. Boothe, in favor of the establishment of a mail route from Powhattan to Gainesville, in Arkansas; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, a memorial of chaplains of the Army, praying the establishment of a corps of chaplains similar to the medical corps; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. BELL, it was Ordered, That the memorial and papers relative to the claim of A. J. Williamson be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

On motion by Mr. SEBASTIAN, it was Ordered, That the memorial and papers of William Senna Factor be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

On motion by Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, it was Ordered, That the petition of William L. Meredith, praying compensation for the services of his father in the army of the Revolution, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

On motion by Mr. ADAMS, it was Ordered, That the memorial and papers in the case of George Barrell and S. V. S. Wilder, in behalf of themselves and other heirs of the owners of the ship Columbia and sloop Washington, and others, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

On motion by Mr. PEARCE, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of Robert H. Hamilton be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

On motion by Mr. PEARCE, it was Ordered, That the petition and papers of the administrators of C. P. Van Ness be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

On motion by Mr. SHIELDS, it was Ordered, That Jean Baptiste Beaubien have leave to withdraw his petition and papers.

On motion by Mr. PEARCE, it was Ordered, That the memorial of the administrators of William A. Slacum, deceased, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

REPORTS FROM STANDING COMMITTEES.

Mr. FOOT. I am requested to ask that the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the memorial of Robert B. Steptoe and others, be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which committee it appropriately belongs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GWIN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the petition of the Rev. John Reynolds, praying to be allowed extra pay and traveling expenses as chaplain in the army stationed in California, asked to be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. BENJAMIN, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to which was referred the petition of Albert G. Howel, submitted a report accompanied by a bill for the relief of the heirs and legal representatives of William Weeks; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the memorial of Charles Derbigny and others, submitted a report accompanied by a bill confirming a certain land claim in Louisiana known as the Fleurian claim; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred a bill confirming certain land claims in Louisiana in the Bastrop grant, reported it back without amendment, and recommended its passage.

He also, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the memorial of Francis B. Ogden, submitted an adverse report thereon.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the Committee on Printing, submitted the following order; which was considered, by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Ordered, That ten thousand copies of the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, communicating the report of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey for the year 1853, in addition to the usual number, be printed; five thousand copies thereof for the use of the Senate, and the remainder for distribution by the Coast Survey Office; and that the same be bound with the plates, in quarto form, and that the plates be printed under the direction of the Superintendent of the Coast Survey.

Mr. HAMLIN. I believe there has been no vote of the Senate ordering the printing of that document. I move, therefore, that the usual number be printed for the use of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN, from the same committee, reported a joint resolution authorizing an increase of the force in the office of the Superintendent of Public Printing; which was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading; and, on Mr. HAMLIN's motion, a letter from the late Superintendent, accompanying the joint resolution, was ordered to be printed.

Mr. FOOT, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the petition of the administrator of the late Lieutenant Michael Everly, an officer in the war of the Revolution, praying that a pension may be granted to his children, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for the relief of the children of the late Lieutenant Michael Everly, a revolutionary officer. The bill was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of Mary C. Hamilton, widow of the late Captain Hamilton, praying for a pension, submitted a report accompanied by a bill for her relief. The bill was read a first time, and ordered to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the petition of Daniel Nichols, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SEBASTIAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which were referred the memorial and papers of Amos and John E. Kendall, asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that they be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill to amend the act "to divide the State of Arkansas into two judicial districts, and for other purposes," asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; which was agreed to.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. BRIGHT gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill granting the right of way and making a grant of land to certain railroad companies, for the benefit of the States in which they are situated.

Mr. MASON gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to authorize the payment of invalid pensions in certain cases.

Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin, gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill making grants of land in aid of the construction of a railroad from Madison, in the State of Wisconsin, to the Mississippi river, in said State.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill for the relief of paymasters' clerks who served in Mexico.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BADGER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill allowing a credit, for a limited period, on duties on railroad iron imported into the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BRIGHT, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to establish a court for the investigation of claims against the United States; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MALLORY, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to provide for the establishment of a marine hospital at St. Marks, in the State of Florida; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to provide for the payment of such creditors of the late Republic of Texas as are comprehended in the act of Congress of September 9, 1850; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MALLORY, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill giving the right of way and granting alternate sections of certain public lands to the State of Florida, to further the construction of certain railroads therein; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

PUBLIC PRINTING.

Mr. BAYARD, in pursuance of previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce "A bill to provide for the public printing, engraving, and binding;" which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. WALKER. Without a special order, that bill will not be printed until after it is reported from the committee. As it is a bill of so general interest, I feel anxious to see it, and therefore move that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

ISTHMUS OF TEHUANTEPEC.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I beg leave to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to the Senate, if not in his opinion incompatible with the public interest, any correspondence that may have taken place between the Government of the United States and that of Mexico respecting the right of way across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, not embraced in the communication made by President Fillmore on that subject to the Senate on July 27, 1852; also, under like limitation, to communicate to the Senate all information in the possession of the Executive concerning the action of the Mexican Government in relation to said right of way, and any proposed convention concerning it.

Mr. President, as this resolution is one of inquiry only, I propose to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate for its adoption at this time. But before doing so, in order to prevent any misapprehension of motive, I desire to say a few words. The Senate has now under consideration a communication from the Executive, made in response to a resolution offered by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. Cass.] The discussion which is about to take place on that communication, it is evident to all, will take a much wider range than the simple interpretation of the treaty, which was the basis of the call of that Senator.

In that discussion it is not my intention to participate; I leave it in abler and better hands. But, sir, when that treaty comes under discussion before the Senate, with the communications from both Governments in relation to that treaty, it will be found that the treaty embraces the whole subject of Isthmian communication. It embraces the communication across that very Isthmus to which my resolution is pointed—a communication which particularly interests not only my own constituency, but nearly every southern State, every State in the valley of the Mississippi, and the entire American population on the Pacific ocean. I think it will be found that that subject is one necessarily embraced in the discussion, which will form a proper corollary to it, and in relation to which I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate for a hearing; but it will only be after the general discussion shall have been closed, and with the view that the Committee on Foreign Relations may be put in possession of the entire subject-matter, so that their report may present all the matters of interest embraced in these Isthmian lines of communication. It is with that view that I propose to make this call; and I hope there is no objection to the passage of the resolution, being, as I said before, merely one of inquiry.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

RAILROAD TO THE PACIFIC.

The PRESIDENT appointed Messrs. GWIN, BRIGHT, RUSK, DOUGLAS, BELL, EVERETT, SEWARD, GEYER, and EVANS, the select committee to consider that portion of the President's message and accompanying documents relative to a railroad to the Pacific ocean, and the various bills relating thereto; which was ordered to be appointed by the resolution adopted on the 4th instant.

HARBOR AND RIVER IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa. I submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Department of War furnish the Senate, as soon as practicable, with a report of all the work done under the appropriations of 1852, in reference to western rivers and harbors.

I do not think there can be any objection to that resolution. It relates to rivers and harbors. I therefore hope the Senate will oblige me by considering it now.

Mr. STUART. As I understand it, I should prefer to let it lie over.

Mr. JONES. Very well. Let it go over.

DETENTION OF THE NORTHERN MAIL.

Mr. FOOT submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be requested to communicate to the Senate the causes of the repeated detention of the northern mail, particularly between the cities of New York and Washington; and whether, in his opinion, any action is required on the part of Congress for the effectual removal of those causes.

NEW POST ROUTES.

Mr. SEBASTIAN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing, by law, post routes from Memphis, in the State of Tennessee, by way of Witsburg and Augusta, to Searey, in White county, Arkansas; and from Jacksonport, in the State of Arkansas, to White Haus, in the county of Izard, in the same State; and from Jacksonport to Clarksville, all in said State.

On motion, the Senate adjourned.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

CLAYTON-BULWER TREATY.

Mr. CASS. A message will soon be received from the House of Representatives, which will undoubtedly render it proper for us to adjourn in the course of a few minutes. To-day was assigned for the consideration of the motion to refer the President's message and documents in relation to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. As we cannot consider that subject to-day, I move that it be postponed to, and made the special order for, to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report from Willis A. Gorman and Richard M. Young, commissioners appointed by the President of the United States to investigate the charges of fraud alleged against Alexander Ramsey, late Superintendent of Indian Affairs in Minnesota Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Mr. FISKE presented the petition of Henry K. Brown, praying for fourteen pieces of condemned brass cannon, to enable him to cast an equestrian statue of Washington, to be erected in the city of New York; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, the petition of John Thomas, praying an appropriation to enable him to build an engine as an improvement on the steam-engine; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, certain proceedings of the grand jury in the southern district of New York, representing the necessity of the Government providing buildings for the detention and custody of prisoners and persons held as witnesses; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MALLORY presented the memorial of certain officers of the Army at Fort Vancouver, in Washington Territory, praying an increase of the commutation price of their rations; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SHIELDS presented two petitions from citizens of Blair county, Pennsylvania, praying that one hundred and sixty acres of land may be granted to each of the soldiers in the war of 1812, and all subsequent wars, without regard to rank and length of service; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DAWSON presented the petition of Moren Moore, praying to be allowed the difference between the pensions paid his father and mother and that to which they were entitled; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. SEWARD presented two petitions of citizens of New York, praying that a contract may be entered into with Christian Hansen, for the establishment of certain lines of steamers; which were referred, with the papers on file relating thereto, to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, the petition of Barnum Whipple, praying the enactment of a law requiring the Secretary of the Treasury to report the amount of money collected by each of the collectors of the customs for the support of marine hospitals; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Also, the petition of the grandchildren of Peter J. Vosburgh, praying to be allowed the commutation to which their grandfather was entitled under the resolution of 1783; which was referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Also, documents in relation to the claims of B. M. Van Derveer to a pension for the services of his father, Albert Van Derveer, in the revolutionary war; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

Mr. WADE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the petition of the heirs of Daniel Loomis, deceased, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Daniel Loomis, deceased; which was read a first time, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. FOOT, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the petition of Rebecca Freeman, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill for her relief; which was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the petition of Mary Ray, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Public Lands; which was agreed to.

NOTICES OF BILLS.

Mr. MALLORY gave notice of his intention to ask leave to introduce a bill to provide a suitable building for the United States district court of the southern district of Florida.

Also, a bill to repeal certain discriminating duties on Spanish tonnage.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MASON, in accordance with previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to authorize the payment of invalid pensions in certain cases; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BRIGHT, in accordance with previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill granting the right of way, and making grants of land to certain railroad companies, for the benefit of the States in which they are situated; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DODGE, of Wisconsin, in accordance with previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill granting to the State of Wisconsin land to aid in the construction of a railroad from Madison to the Mississippi river; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa, in accordance with previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill to divide the northern and Missouri river land districts in the State of Iowa; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. JONES, of Iowa, in accordance with previous notice, asked and obtained leave to introduce a bill for the relief of paymasters' clerks who served in Mexico; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN AND REFERRED.

On motion by Mr. FISH, it was

REFERENCE OF PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

On motion by Mr. DAWSON, it was Ordered, That so much of the message of the President of the United States as relates to the District of Columbia, be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

CAPITOL EXTENSION.

The following resolution, submitted by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, on the 3d instant, was considered and agreed to:

"Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings be instructed to inquire whether any change in the plan of the Capitol extension has been made since the adjournment of the last Congress, and if so, by what authority such alteration has been made, and whether such change, if any, involves an additional expenditure of the public money."

RIVER AND HARBOR IMPROVEMENTS.

The following resolution, submitted yesterday by Mr. JONES, of Iowa, was considered and agreed to:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Department of War furnish the Senate, as soon as practicable, with a report of all the work done under the appropriations of 1852, in reference to western rivers and harbors."

GEORGE R. C. FLOYD.

Mr. GWIN. The Committee on Finance, to which was referred a joint resolution for the relief of George R. C. Floyd, late Secretary of Wisconsin Territory, and sureties, has instructed me to report it back with an amendment. The amendment puts the joint resolution exactly in the shape in which it was passed at the last session of Congress; and I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take it up for consideration at this time.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, as in Committee of the Whole. The amendment of the committee was to strike out all after the resolving clause, and insert the following:

"That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury Department be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to settle the accounts of George R. C. Floyd, late Secretary of Wisconsin Territory, on the principles of equity and justice."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAWSON. I desire to know why the difficulties existing between the Government and this officer cannot be settled now, as the Government requires no claims to be settled except according to the principles of equity and justice. If there be no law regulating the manner of settlement I should like to know it.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Mr. President, I am somewhat familiar with this case, and will state very briefly the facts relating to it. All who know anything of the Territorial organizations, know that the Secretary is the fiscal or disbursing officer of the Territory. Mr. Floyd was such officer for Wisconsin Territory, and, under resolves of the Territorial Legislature, he incurred expenses for the transportation of specie, and other services which were outside of, and not provided for in the general law regulating these things. Congress passed a very stringent law providing that no allowances should be made by the Territorial Legislatures for certain things. The items to which Mr. Whittlesey has objected, under the law, are such as he approves of, and says are right, and should be equitably credited to Mr. Floyd; but the law of 1842, the stringent law to which I have already alluded, prevents him making the allowance. The object of this resolution is to give Mr. Whittlesey that discretion which will enable him to settle the accounts on principles of equity and justice; there being some four or five items for which Mr. Floyd is justly entitled to credit, having performed the service and paid the money, but which he cannot receive, owing to the provisions of the law to which I have alluded.

Mr. BRIGHT. I concur, sir, in all that the Senator from Iowa has stated. The Committee on Finance has examined the provisions of the joint resolution, and believing it to be just, has made a favorable report, recommending its passage. Territorial officers, as has been well said by the Senator from Iowa, are frequently clothed with enlarged discretionary powers, and it necessarily must be so, in order to carry out the interests of the Government in the Territories. In this way this officer has incurred some expenses which ought to be reimbursed to him; but there is no law, the letter of which warrants the allowance of them. By passing an act of this kind, the accounting officer will allow some items in his account that he could not otherwise do.

Mr. DAWSON. I understand the character of the claim, and I have no objection to it; but I wish to see a general principle adopted and carried out. The act of 1842 is called a stringent law. Its object was to protect the Government against imprudences and indiscretions on the part of its disbursing officers. The law was made with a view to restrict and control them in the expenditure of the public money, and under that law this officer cannot be allowed these items. There are hundreds of cases of the same class now pending before the various Departments of the Government. If we intend to repeal the law of 1842, and allow each disbursing officer to be regulated by his own judgment of what he supposes to be expenditures according to the principles of equity and justice, we shall have no limitation to guard the rights of the Government. I think the better plan will be to refer this subject to a committee, and let them consider whether they will recommend the alterations in the law of 1842 so as to leave no limitation on the powers of the disbursing officers.

I have not a word to say against the allowance here proposed to be made; but is not this an improper mode of doing things? Why allow these items of expenditure, when there are hundreds of others of the same class? If any gentleman will go to the various offices, and inquire as to the expenditures in the Territory of New Mexico, the most distant of our territorial governments, he will find that large amounts have been rejected, although the officers who disbursed the money, in some cases, are dead. Why not have a general law regulating all these cases by a fixed principle? We thought we accomplished this in the year 1842; but we have found that we were mistaken, and now it is proposed that the expenditure of the public money shall be regulated by the principles of equity and justice. Who are to be the judges of what the limitations are when we use the words "equity and justice?" No one.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. Elisha Whittlesey.

Mr. DAWSON. Very well; Elisha Whittlesey's watchfulness is to be counted for nothing, and that great reputation which he has for taking care of the public money is to be put aside, and he is to be regulated in the discharge of his duty by "the principles of equity and justice." The general law is intended to declare what the principles of equity and justice are. I have no doubt that I should agree with my friend from Iowa that many of these items fall within our views of equity and justice. All that I want, however, is a general law. If this joint resolution be passed, we shall have case after case teeming in here, calling upon us for the application of the same principles of "equity and justice."

I repeat, again, I am not opposed to doing justice to all disbursing officers, but all that I want is a general law to meet all cases in a like condition; and, therefore, I would ask my friend from Iowa to move the reference of this subject to a committee, so that they may report a general law extending, if necessary, the provisions of the act of 1842, which I myself believe to be too restrictive.

Mr. GWIN. I have no objection to make to the views expressed by the Senator from Georgia with regard to a general law; but this is a special case which stands upon its own merits. It was investigated during the last Congress by the Committee on Finance, and I was instructed by that committee to report a bill, which passed the Senate without a dissenting voice, and which was precisely the same, word for word, as the one now reported. This subject came up, and was referred to the committee in an isolated shape, and I hope the Senator from Georgia will not object to the passage of this resolution. The accounting officer of the Treasury has recommended the passage of the resolution; he thinks the allowance should be made, and I hope the Senator will not bring the principle in favor of a general law, to which we do not object, to bear against this, and thereby create a postponement. I hope he will withdraw his objection, and let the resolution pass. So far as I am concerned, I am in favor of a general law, and should approve of one if the subject should be brought up in the Committee on Finance.

Mr. DAWSON. I have made no objection to this case. I merely wished to make the suggestion for the consideration of the friends of the measure and the Committee on Finance, that the committee should propose some general law upon the subject, and not leave the matter so entirely to the discretion of the Government officers. I have no objection to the resolution; but I want a general law to provide for such cases.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. The law of 1842, to which the honorable Senator from Georgia refers, shows on its face that it is not a general law. It was one relating to Wisconsin Territory. It was not a general law, applying to all cases. A very unwise and ridiculous law was passed, which denied to the Territorial Legislature the power of crediting and allowing a disbursing officer, who went in obedience to its resolve, and, at his own expense, brought this public money five or six hundred miles to be disbursed for the purpose of paying the expenses of the Legislature. Such expenses are excluded by this special law having reference to Wisconsin Territory; and, under its stringent provisions, it is impossible for the accounting officer to do justice to Mr. Floyd. No such case, from Iowa or New Mexico, has ever occurred. There are none such pending. This case comes from Wisconsin, and it is a meritorious and just one.

Mr. DAWSON. My friend from Iowa is mistaken. The same difficulty is pending before Mr. Whittlesey, with regard to the accounts of officers in the Territory of New Mexico, a Territory much more distant. The accounts of those officers are, many of them, very just and proper, but they cannot be paid under the existing law. That is the reason why I wish to have a general law. I do not wish to oppose the passage of the joint resolution now before us; but I should be glad to see a general bill passed to meet such cases.

Mr. DODGE, of Iowa. This may be a special case; but this is a matter with regard to which there should not be a general law passed. The Governor of New Mexico should not have any such accounts to be settled. He does not stand in the relation of an officer who has any accounts to settle after receiving his salary. If he has incurred any extraordinary expenses by meeting or treating with the Indian tribes, so as to make the case anomalous in its nature, and has asked for remuneration, the subject will address itself to the justice of Congress, and we should pass a bill for his relief. But no Governor of a Territory ever could or should have any such accounts as those embraced by the resolution to be settled.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended; the amendment was concurred in; the resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read a third time, and passed.

THOMAS MARSTON TAYLOR.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs, for the relief of Thomas Marston Taylor.

It proposes to direct the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to allow Mr. Taylor, a purser in the Navy, in the settlement of his accounts, for such deficiency as he shall show to exist, by reason of his making deposits of treasury notes in the Phoenix Bank at Charlestown, Massachusetts, subsequent to April, 1842; and, also, to allow him such reasonable and proper expenses as he has actually incurred and paid in prosecuting any suit brought to enforce the supposed priority of the claims of the United States over other creditors upon the assets of said bank in the hands of the trustees.

The Secretary, at the request of Mr. WALKER, commenced the reading of the report of the committee; but, before concluding, on the motion of Mr. BRODHEAD, the further consideration of the bill was postponed until to-morrow.

DEATH OF HON. H. A. MUHLENBERG.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing the death of the Hon. HENRY A. MUHLENBERG, a member of the House from the State of Pennsylvania, and its proceedings thereon; which were read.

Mr. BRODHEAD. The melancholy event, of which the message from the House of Representatives gives us official notice, is of painful interest in this Capitol, and especially in Pennsylvania. To me, personally, it is a great affliction, for the deceased was my friend, in the true sense of the term, tried by time and the hour of need. I was much with him during his protracted and fatal illness. He breathed his last at my residence last evening, at half past ten o'clock; and I can now hardly command my feelings and arrange my thoughts in a manner proper for this occasion.

The name of MUHLENBERG is intimately associated with the history of Pennsylvania; and I may add with that of this country and Government. Upon the records of the old Continental Congress, and upon nearly every page of the history of our revolutionary struggle, it can be found. For more than one hundred years the family has been conspicuous in everything calculated to advance the cause of religion, of letters, and of good government.

The great-grandfather of the deceased, an eminent scholar and divine, settled, at an early day, in Pennsylvania, then an almost unbroken wilderness, and well earned the name of the Father of the Lutheran Church in America. His three sons, one the grandfather of the deceased, were educated for the same profession; but the difficulties with our mother country came on; their country's agony called them from the temple and the altar to the council-board and the camp; they wielded their pens and their swords in their country's cause, and became the associates of Washington, Franklin, Jefferson, Wayne, and Greene, and rendered good service over almost every part of the wide field of the revolutionary contest. The battlefields of Brandywine, Germantown, Stony Point, and the siege of Yorktown, attest their heroism.

The father of the deceased, although he lived in more peaceful times, was scarcely less distinguished. During the whole of General Jackson's presidential term he was a Representative in Congress. He was a statesman without the arts of the demagogue; wise in council, and resolute in action. Such a man could not fail to attract the attention of President Jackson, and, entertaining the same political views, they were, consequently, personal and political friends. He was, subsequently, our Minister at the Court of Austria; and, on his return, was nominated as the Democratic candidate for Governor of Pennsylvania, his native State. His friends responded to his nomination in a way that demonstrated their confidence in their chosen chief, but he was stricken down with the banner in his hands, and died but a short time before the election.

His son, HENRY A. MUHLENBERG, my deceased friend, not depending upon the fame and fortune left him by his ancestors, as is too often the case in this country, thought it his duty to make himself useful in his day and generation, and lay in a large stock of reputation on his own account. He possessed the qualities of head and heart to enable him to do it. He was honest and industrious, sagacious and patient. Although a man of self-reliance and iron will, (essential ingredients in the composition of a leading mind,) his pretensions never exceeded his real merits. He was the most fearless person I ever knew in the discharge of duty. He never sought security from censure by prudent silence or time-serving neutrality. And great as were the qualities of his mind, they were fully equaled, if not eclipsed, by those of his heart. Thousands throughout the country, and some of the members of this body, who have shared his hospitality, will attest the truth of this remark. On my way to this place I was a guest for days, with my family, in his hospitable mansion.

Although but about thirty years of age, he had made himself a man of mark. He was an accurate and well-read lawyer; an energetic and thorough man of business, connecting himself with every enterprise calculated to advance the prosperity, or give employment to the labor of his native place. He had distinguished himself as a member of our State Senate, in which he served for three years, and was then elected a member of the present Congress, by the same "old Berks" district, so long represented by his father; and came here, at the opening of the present session, to enter upon the discharge of his duties in this great arena of national concern. But, alas! how little do we know that which we are! how less what we may be!

He appeared in the House of Representatives but one day, the day on which it was organized. Before he had fairly entered upon the discharge of the high and responsible duties assigned him by a confiding constituency, with the path of glory bright before him; in the noonday of life; we are summoned to mourn his loss. But a few weeks ago his neighbors and friends at Reading, his place of residence, gazed with admiration upon the erect and manly form of their favorite, to-morrow they will see that form stretched upon its lowly bier, brought back to them for interment with his fathers by a committee of the House of Representatives. He has, however, left behind him his character, the influence of his example, and, in his unexpected death, the admonition that public honors, and exalted station, can add no strength to the tenure by which life is held.

During his illness (typhoid fever) he had the consoling presence of the partner of his bosom, and a devoted sister, whose attentions to him, day after day, and week after week, were as assiduous as it was possible for the most devoted affection of the living to bestow upon the most beloved of the dying. The warmest and tenderest ties have been severed by his death. He has left a widow and an orphan boy to mourn his untimely death. May that "Being who tempers the wind to the shorn lamb" protect them against the "wintry blasts" of a cold and heartless world.

Mr. President, I have in my hand resolutions which I intend to submit for the adoption of the Senate, that we may unite with the House in paying some tribute of respect to the memory of the deceased. The last one provides for an adjournment. It is usual to "strike our colors" at each repeated triumph of the "fell destroyer."

I offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard the announcement of the death of Hon. HENRY A. MUHLENBERG, a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Pennsylvania, with feelings of deep sensibility.

Resolved, That, in testimony of respect for his memory, the members and officers of the Senate will wear crape on the left arm for the space of thirty days.

Resolved, That, as a further testimonial of respect for the memory of the deceased, the Senate will now adjourn.

The resolutions were unanimously adopted, and
The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, January 10, 1854.

The House met at the usual hour. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of Friday was read and approved.

DEATH OF HON. H. A. MUHLENBERG.

Mr. DRUM rose, and said:

With a heart profoundly afflicted with the sad event which has just befallen, I rise to occupy for a few moments the attention of this House. The melancholy duty has been imposed upon me to announce to you the death of Hon. HENRY A. MUHLBERG, a Representative in Congress from the State of Pennsylvania. He died about half past ten o'clock last night, after an illness of four or five weeks.

Death, sir, is the common lot of all mankind. We are taught to expect it from the time our feet begin to tread the pathway of life until our mental vision expands upon the great mysteries of eternity. All that we enjoy—all that we love—all that makes this world bright and beautiful to us, alike pass away under the inexorable touch of decay. And not alone is this stern lesson taught in the material world around us. Upon every linement of our moral being is to be seen the never-ceasing element of change. The fresh feelings of the heart with which youth begins to climb the hill of the future, are chilled before the summit is half gained; the hopes we so eagerly form in early life, before middle age become delusions—affections twine themselves around us, and are rent away—the heart becomes seared with disappointment and affliction, until its early sensibilities are crushed out, and most men go to their graves in advanced age, feeling that they realize the solemn truth that change and decay are written everywhere. And yet, sir, notwithstanding this, although we know and feel it to be the universal law, death is a most solemn event. Though it surrounds us everywhere, and is ever present—though it comes to us upon the wings of the gentlest breeze, and lies hidden in the fragrance of the loveliest flower—though we may familiarize ourselves with all its shapes, and prepare ourselves to meet its stern demands, yet, sir, it never comes without speaking to the souls of the living its tones of terrible instruction. Oh, sir, there is no eloquence like that of death.

Mr. Speaker, the voice that sounds to us the death of my lamented friend and colleague, speaks no common warning. A few short days ago, and he was glowing with joy, and youth, and the vigor of health; he now lies wrapped in the last cold garment of mortality, and we stand here around his grave. Then, there were few on earth whose existence was radiant with brighter prospects of fame and happiness. The center of a charmed circle that beamed with intelligence and love, he surrendered himself to all the allurements of affection, and all the fascinations of refined intellectual enjoyment. He was firmly seated in the attachment of a noble constituency, and he came to Washington buoyant with the honest hope of faithfully serving them, and of writing his own name upon the historical records of his country. He rose fearlessly with his eye fixed upon the sun, but alas! it was only to be extinguished in its blaze. Now, the urn that holds his sacred dust is all of mortality that remains. The illusion is past, and the hope that animated and sustained him is quenched forever.

Among other peculiarities of Mr. MUHLBERG's situation in life, was the circumstance that he sprang from an ancestry whose names are familiar words in the history of this country. When the vast field of benevolent enterprise opened in the New World, and learning and piety came from the cloistered cells of Europe to reclaim and fertilize the barren waste of humanity in the western hemisphere, there were they to be found, zealously and faithfully laboring to instill into the hearts of the humble settlers the great truths of eternal life, and to teach them in what manner to assert the dignity of immortal manhood to which God had predestined them. When the pathway of the desert—full of peril, and ambuscade, and death—was to be explored, that the children of the forest might be brought to know and acknowledge the dominion of our race, there was still another of that same great ancestry, faithful to the high trust ever reposed in his fidelity, and fearless of dangers that might appal the stoutest heart, toiling steadily forward in the path of duty. When, again, the hand of oppression pressed heavily upon the infant colonies, and men appealed, with stern resolution, to the sword to redress their wrongs, not the last to array himself in the ranks of patriotism was still one more of this illustrious name, who abandoned the sacred desk to gird his sword upon his thigh—who gathered from his congregation the material for a regiment, and who served throughout the war of the Revolution with a character most eminent for fidelity and gallantry. One of Mr. MUHLBERG's ancestors was among the first members of Congress from Pennsylvania, and occupied for many years the position of Speaker of that body. His father also occupied a very high position as a public man in the State of Pennsylvania. He represented in Congress for a series of terms the same county but recently represented by my deceased friend. During the administration of General Jackson, he held the situation abroad of Minister to the Court of Austria; and at the period of his death, he was the nominated candidate of the Democracy of Pennsylvania for Governor of that State. Death, sudden and unlooked-for, snatched from his grasp the crowning honor of a well-spent life, as it has just now arrested the brilliant career of this, his promising son.

But although Mr. MUHLBERG's pathway in life was surrounded with the luster of a distinguished ancestry, he yet lived long enough to prove that in his own true, noble, and intellectual character was contained the germ of high distinction and usefulness. Elected in 1850, by the people of Berks county, Pennsylvania, to the Senate of that State, he occupied for three years a seat in that body; and upon the expiration of his term of office, was elected by them to the present Congress. During a portion of his term in the Senate I was associated with him, and can testify to the ability, fearlessness, and truth with which he served his constituents and the State. With a clear and comprehensive intellect, a sound, cautious, and cultivated judgment; a devotion to business, and a taste for public affairs, he united the high quality of fearlessness in the discharge of what he believed to be his duty; and the ray of light that comes from yonder sun was not more direct than was he in all his intentions and purposes. Though but so short a time in the Senate, he was able, as I have reason to know, to impress his character indelibly upon the legislation of his native State.

In the loss of my lamented friend and colleague, Pennsylvania has suffered what will be to her a grievous loss. Talent he had, but that may be easily repaired; but his high honor, his chivalrous sense of public integrity, and his devotion to the best interests of the State he loved so well, are qualities much too rare to be lost without the deepest regret. It affords me much gratification to believe that this Congress will regret the loss it has sustained in his death. To me his sudden and untimely decease comes with the most sincere, heartfelt, and poignant sorrow. Few, very few, in all this world, unconnected by ties of blood, stood in closer relationship to him we now deplore than for the last few years I stood. None knew him, I believe, so well; and surely, surely none loved him better. But were it within the bounds of propriety to obtrude in this place the sorrow I feel, I must yet remember there are others whose grief is more sacred than mine. Dear and anxious relatives waited and watched around his bed of death, and received his parting sigh. In the innermost recesses of their affectionate hearts was he enshrined. He was their idol and their pride, and the terrible blow that struck him from existence has crushed them too. And she whose comfort and whose joy he was through so many hours of happiness; that mourner who is without sympathy because none can enter into the depths of her woe; she whose life but yesterday was one unbroken scene of gladness, and to-day is filled with gloom, without light, without hope, desolate and dreary; oh! may there be given to her from above the only balm that can restore the bowed and wounded heart to bear her up and sustain her through this sad trial, until time, the great physician, shall have alleviated her sorrows and soothed her bitter woes.

As for him, Mr. Speaker, our departed friend and brother, who, in the full flush of early manhood, has gone before us, and explored the mysteries of life, death, and immortality, we dare have no regrets for him. With the seal of truth and probity upon his brow, with all the endearments with which affection can beguile the descent to the grave clustering around his footsteps, he has entered the portals of the glorious life eternal.

For him let not dejected pity mourn,

For him no tear of anguish bid to flow;

While pensive memory doth his name inurn,

Let joy commingle in the cup of woe.

Few have, like him, to soothe the dying hour,

The sorrowing group bewailing his sad doom;
Or feel, with grateful soul, affection's power,
That strew'd with flowers his passage to an early tomb.
Departed shade! though fleet thy days and few,
Short the fruition of each high desire,
As gorgeous tracery of the morning dew,
Or the bright embers of day's fading fire,
Virtue shall cite thy lesson to mankind;
And death, awhile remorseful, blunt his dart;
To the cold elements of earth resigned,
Thy cenotaph shall be a fond and faithful heart."

Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That this House has heard with deep emotion the announcement of the death of the Hon. HENRY A. MUHLBERG, a member of this House from the State of Pennsylvania.

Resolved, That this House tenders to the relatives of the deceased the expression of its sympathy on this afflictive event; and as a testimony of respect for the memory of the deceased, the members and officers of the House will go into mourning by wearing crape on the left arm for thirty days.

Resolved, That the Clerk of this House communicate a copy of the foregoing resolutions to the widow of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Speaker appoint a committee of four members to accompany the remains of the deceased to his late residence.

Resolved, That, as a further mark of respect for the memory of the deceased, this House do now adjourn.

Mr. DAWSON. Mr. Speaker, it is, sir, with feelings of no ordinary emotion that I rise to notice the melancholy event which has just been announced. As associated with the deceased in the representation on this floor of the people of Pennsylvania, and standing to him in the relation of personal and intimate friendship, I feel that I am but discharging the last painful duty.

HENRY A. MUHLBERG, as has been well remarked, could boast an ancestry of eminent distinction. The brother of his grandfather, Frederick Augustus Muhlenberg, was the first Speaker chosen to preside over the House of Representatives of the United States under the present Constitution. Joseph Heister, his maternal grandfather was among the early Governors of Pennsylvania. His father, Henry A. Muhlenberg, long a distinguished member of this body, was afterwards chosen by General Jackson the representative of his Government to the court of Vienna; and after discharging with high credit to his reputation the duties of that responsible position, he was, shortly after his return to Pennsylvania, nominated to the highest office known to her constitution.

It will be fresh, sir, in the memory of many who now hear me, how, with the prospect of being carried triumphantly to the chief magistracy of that honored Commonwealth, the father was stricken down by the hand of the same invisible enemy which now, on the threshold of a public career, and in the bright morning of life, has prostrated the son.

The deceased, sir, was a man of high character, of inflexible integrity, of polished education and manners, and with a mind richly stored with solid and practical information. It was conceded by all who knew him that he would have been a most invaluable member of this body. True, he had represented his native county—the ancient county of Berks—in the Senate of Pennsylvania, and had shown an ability which promised much for the future. Although comparatively a stranger in this body his death will cast a gloom over every portion of his native Commonwealth.

As a husband and a father his happiness was complete, and it is with feelings of sympathy, the most heartfelt, that we recur to the images of the devoted wife, and little boy—an only child—watching anxiously, and hopefully, by the bed of the stricken sufferer, soothing by their presence his dying moments, and rendering the last sad tribute of affection.

Sir, it is a solemn thing to die. When we close our eyes, for the last time, upon the objects of our affections, and the bright light of the morning—to feel, to know that when the portals of the tomb close upon all that pertains to this perishing mortality, the spirit has taken its flight to "that undiscovered country from whose bourn no traveler returns!" The column which will mark his grave may serve to perpetuate by its inscription the memory of his virtues, but the desolation of his own home nothing can supply.

When we contemplate, Mr. Speaker, the domestic woe, as well as the public loss, which an event so sudden and overwhelming occasions, we cannot but feel, with a painful sense of its reality, the uncertain tenure of our mortal existence. But yesterday, and I saw him within these marble columns, full of life and spirits, participating in the organization of this House, wearing modestly the honors of his trust; and to-day, numbered with the dead! It is in the providence of God to create and to destroy. The honored and the lowly crumble alike before his power. In a few short years, and the national representation now seated around me will follow in the path of our departed friend, and the grave become a common receptacle.

I second, Mr. Speaker, the resolutions which have been offered by my colleague.

Mr. STRAUB said:

Mr. SPEAKER: It is but one brief hour since I heard of the demise of the Hon. HENRY A. MUHLENBERG, and not being accustomed to public speaking, much less to deliver a becoming eulogy, it illy suits me to undertake so grave and important a task; and more particularly so in the present case, as that duty has been so ably and eloquently performed by the gentlemen who have preceded me; but as Mr. MUHLENBERG was my neighbor and social friend, (having lived in an adjoining county,) I will add a few words more on this solemn and heart-rending occasion.

Mr. Speaker, another light has been extinguished. The Hon. HENRY A. MUHLENBERG, of Berks county, Pennsylvania, is no more. He has passed to the dark valley of the shadow of death—has passed from time to eternity. With the deceased I was personally acquainted; and it is due to my own feelings that I should avail myself of the occasion, which is a most melancholy one to me, to add, in my feeble manner, a tribute to his memory.

Sir, Mr. MUHLENBERG died last evening in this city, at the residence of his bosom friend, the Hon. RICHARD BRODHEAD. A few days ago we saw him in the flush of manhood, and, apparently, in the enjoyment of health; but he is gone; and by his demise how truthful is the lesson taught us, "That in the midst of life we are in death."

The deceased, young as he was, in point of ability had very few superiors. He possessed a mind clear and logical, and an energy of character rarely surpassed. In deportment he was extremely kind and gentlemanly, yet firm and unwavering in his attachment to the principles which governed his conduct in life. At an early day he was elected by the people of his native county (Berks) to a seat in the Senate of Pennsylvania, where he distinguished himself with such signal ability as to secure the unlimited confidence of his constituents; and they, desirous of evincing their regard for the services of one whose youthful, but towering intellect so well fitted him for a seat in the Congress of the nation, at the first opportunity that presented itself after the expiration of his Senatorial term, elected him to a seat in this body. But, Mr. Speaker, he has left us, and his spirit has winged its flight to another, and, I trust, a better world.

"When forced to part from those we love,
Though sure to meet to-morrow,
We yet a kind of censor prove,
And feel a sense of sorrow;
But oh! what art can paint the grief
Of those who are forced to sever,
To meet no more—no more forever!"

The deceased, whose loss we now deplore, was born in Berks county, Pennsylvania, and was descended of an illustrious ancestry. Gen. Muhlenberg, the grandfather of the man whose death we now mourn, was intimately connected with the early history of the Republic. He was an associate of Washington and La Fayette. Prominent among that band of patriots who gained our national independence, his deeds will shine brighter and brighter as the nation progresses. He enlisted first as a clergyman in the service of the Redeemer; but no sooner was the cry of war sounded than, dismissing the flock over which he presided, he joined the service of his country—and battled in the cause of freedom. Clergyman, soldier, and statesman; after the war with Great Britain was ended, he received the honor of his countrymen. His deeds were worthy a Cincinnatus. He was elected a member of the House of Representatives of the United States, over which body he was subsequently called to preside. Such was the grandfather of the deceased.

Henry A. Muhlenberg, the father of our lamented friend, was not inferior to his sire in the cause of patriotism. A minister of the Gospel, he was subsequently called by the people of his district to the Congress of the United States, where, by his towering ability, suavity of manners, and gentlemanly deportment, he became a universal favorite. General Jackson, appreciating as he did the noble elevation of his character, without solicitation upon his part, appointed him Minister to the Court of Vienna, where, as a diplomatist, he ably represented the country which had thus honored him with her confidence. After his return, at the request of a large majority of the people of his native State, he became a candidate for the gubernatorial chair; but before the election took place, he was summoned by the hand of death to the scenes of another world. Such is the history of the forefathers of the deceased.

Mr. Speaker, the record of the tomb is fast, very fast, filling up. In the providence of an all-wise God, a proportion of victims more than usual have been snatched from the councils of the nation by the hand of the dread destroyer. Should not the rapid recurrence of these melancholy circumstances cause us to pause and reflect whether there is not something portentous in these mysterious providences of a wonder-working God, who holds the destinies of the nation in the palm of his hand?

These reflections have been suggested by the announcement, one after another, in quick succession, within the last few months, of the death of our great men. First in the list was our beloved and much-lamented Vice President of the United States, the late William R. King. Following in quick succession were Mr. Atherton, of New Hampshire, late a Senator of the United States; and Mr. Campbell, of Tennessee, late a member of this House, and now HENRY A. MUHLENBERG, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. Speaker, is there nothing portentous in this train of events? Does not the death of these great and good men, filling as they did some of the most exalted positions in the nation, portend something more than if they had been snatched from more humble positions in life? Believing, however, as we do, that the hand of God was at work in the establishment of this great Republic, may we not continue to look to him as our helmsman, to guide the ship of State to that exalted destiny which a wise Providence has designed for us?

The question was then put on the resolutions, and they were unanimously adopted; and

The SPEAKER appointed the following gentlemen to constitute the committee to attend the remains of the deceased to his late residence: Mr. DRUM, of Pennsylvania; Mr. LILLY, of New Jersey; Mr. RUSSELL, of Pennsylvania; and Mr. JOHNSON, of Ohio.

The House then adjourned till to-morrow.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 11, 1854.

Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PETITIONS.

Mr. SEWARD presented the petition of the heirs of Captain Antoine Paulet, and of the heirs of Lewis Gosselin, praying remuneration for the depreciation of commutation certificates; which were referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Also, the memorial of J. Wilson Smith, praying indemnity for the illegal seizure of the steamer Fanny by the United States district attorney and the custom-house officers at Savannah; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

CLAYTON-BULWER TREATY.

The Senate proceeded to consider the motion submitted by Mr. CASS on Thursday, the 5th instant, to refer to the Committee on Foreign Relations the message of the President of the United States received on the 3d instant, communicating, in compliance with the resolution of the Senate of December 12, 1853, the correspondence which had taken place with the British Government on subjects growing out of the treaty of Washington of July 4, 1850, since the message of the President of December 30, 1852.

Mr. CASS then rose and addressed the Senate at great length, chiefly in reply to the speech delivered in the Senate at the called session of the Senate, by Mr. CLAYTON, and in vindication of the views originally expressed by him on the construction placed on the Clayton-Bulwer treaty by the Senate at the time of its ratification.

[The speech will be found in the Appendix.]

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. President—

Mr. BUTLER. Does the Senator wish an adjournment?

Mr. CLAYTON. I am perfectly willing to go on now; but if the Senate wish to adjourn, I have no objections.

Several SENATORS. Let us adjourn.

Mr. BUTLER. In order to give the Senator a full opportunity to be heard, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. HAMLIN. Unless the Senator from Delaware desires that motion to be made, I trust that he will move to postpone the further consideration of the subject till to-morrow, so that we may proceed to the consideration of Executive business.

Mr. CLAYTON. I am anxious to proceed with my reply, when I commence, without being interrupted by other business. If the Senate is willing to hear me, I am prepared to go on now; but if the Senate desires an adjournment I am willing to yield; or if the Senate desires an Executive session, I shall not object.

Mr. BUTLER. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. HAMLIN. I move that the further consideration of the subject be postponed until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. FORNEY, its Clerk, announcing that it had passed the following bills:

A bill for the relief of Lewis B. Willis, late a paymaster in the Army of the United States;

A bill for the relief of the legal representatives of Isaac P. Simonton, deceased; and

A bill for the relief of William Blake.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

On motion by Mr. HAMLIN, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of Executive business; and after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and

The Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 11, 1854.

The House met at twelve o'clock, m. Prayer by Rev. HENRY SLICER.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

COMMUNICATIONS FROM THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Treasury Department, transmitting statements furnished by the heads of the several bureaus of that Department, in pursuance of the act of Congress approved August 26, 1842, requiring a detailed statement of the manner in which the contingent fund of the said Department had been expended; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

Also, a communication from the War Department, transmitting a statement of the expenditures of the national armories, and of the arms and appendages made thereat during the year ending June 30, 1853; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

CAPTAIN INGRAHAM.

The SPEAKER stated the business first in order to be the consideration of the joint resolution of thanks, and presentation of a sword, to Captain Duncan N. Ingraham, the question pending being the motion to commit to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. DISNEY rose and addressed the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana having obtained the floor when the resolution was last before the House, is still entitled to it if he wishes to address the House.

Mr. DISNEY. Well, sir, I will then only give notice that I desire to address the House upon the subject of these resolutions when the opportunity shall occur.

Mr. HOUSTON. Does the Chair decide that the motion to commit keeps this resolution before the House as unfinished business?

The SPEAKER. The Chair decides that the resolution, being a report from a committee, and a motion having been made to commit to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, is regularly before the House as unfinished business.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I have been informed that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PHILLIPS] desires to offer an amendment to the amendment, or rather a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. BARRY.] If he desires to offer it now, I will give way for that purpose.

Mr. PHILLIPS. In availing myself of the polite invitation of the gentleman from Louisiana, and of the promise of the gentleman from Mississippi to accept my amendment in place of his own, I propose to strike out the words "in extending the protection of the American Government over Martin Koszta," and to insert in lieu thereof, "in vindicating the right of Martin Koszta to American protection."

This, sir, will directly meet the issue which was made up when the question was before the House.

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to offer a resolution of inquiry, which I ask the unanimous consent of the House to adopt, before I make any remarks in reply to the gentlemen from Alabama and Virginia. The resolution reads:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to this House, as far as may not be incompatible with the public interest, all correspondence, other than that heretofore communicated, that may have taken place between the State Department and our representatives abroad, or the representatives of foreign Powers and States near this Government, in regard to the protection extended by the United States Government to its citizens in foreign countries, and to those who have declared an intention to become its citizens.

A MEMBER objected.

Mr. PERKINS. I am grateful for the consideration of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BOGOCCK] in moving an adjournment on Friday last, in order that I might have the floor this morning.

I should have preferred, however, to have said then what I design saying now. I desired that some explanation of the action of the Committee on Foreign Affairs in relation to the subject before the House should have accompanied the criticisms of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PHILLIPS] upon the action of that committee, which he must excuse me for calling a little unkind.

As a member of that committee, I confess to some sensitiveness under the imputation of having evaded the expression of any principle it was our duty to declare.

Sir, the friends of Captain Ingraham must be gratified at the fact revealed by this discussion, that there is not a dissenting voice in this House as to the propriety and gallantry of his conduct in the rescue of Martin Koszta.

The difficulty of the gentlemen who complain of the action of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, seems to be, that that committee has not been able to find language sufficiently expressive of their sense of the high gallantry of Captain Ingraham's conduct, and, at the same time, distinctly enunciative of those great principles upon which they think that conduct justified. In their embarrassment in this particular I sympathize. They can frame no eulogy on the conduct of Captain Ingraham in which I will not concur. They can express in no language too forcible my admiration of the ability of the letter of the Secretary of State. I think that, in this matter, the Secretary has been almost as fortunate as Captain Ingraham; and that as the rescue of Koszta will forever remain a bright act in our naval history, so will the letter of the Secretary be regarded as inaugurating a new era in American diplomacy.

I make these remarks that I may not appear subject to the imputation that the gentleman from Alabama casts upon the Committee on Foreign Affairs, of having evaded a frank and direct expression of opinion upon the sentiments of that letter. I do not, however, consider that that imputation was at all called for by the resolution before the House.

What was the original proposition of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DEAN?] It was simply a vote of thanks to Captain Ingraham and the officers and men under his command for their gallant conduct in asserting and protecting the rights of American citizens, native and adopted.

The resolutions read:

"Resolved, That the thanks of Congress be, and they are hereby, presented to Captain Duncan N. Ingraham, commanding the United States sloop of war St. Louis, and to the officers and men under his command, for their gallant conduct on the second day of July last, in asserting and protecting the right of American citizenship, native and adopted, by the rescue of Martin Koszta, in the harbor of Smyrna, from his forcible and illegal seizure and imprisonment."

"Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to cause to be made a sword, with suitable devices, and presented to Captain Duncan N. Ingraham, as a testimonial of the high sense entertained by Congress of his valor, promptness, and judicious conduct on the above-mentioned occasion."

"Resolved, That the President of the United States cause the foregoing resolutions to be communicated to Captain Duncan N. Ingraham, in such terms as he may deem best calculated to give effect to the objects thereof."

When these resolutions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, what was their position? They desired to respond at once to sentiments which they believed, with the gentleman from Alabama, to be those of the national heart.

In what manner could they best do so? They considered that these resolutions had two objects: First, to compliment, in just and proper terms, Captain Ingraham; and second, to nationalize, as far as the action of the committee could, conduct which, as that of an individual, had reflected credit upon the country. They had not before them the President's message, the correspondence of the Secretary of State, nor the additional correspondence which the resolution I have just offered proposes to give the House. They considered, however, that, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. DEAN] disclaimed all party purposes—as the name of Mr. Marcy was not mentioned, as the President was not referred to—he desired his resolutions to be what the gentleman from Alabama wished them to be—a response to the great national heart, which, he said, had been stirred to its utmost depth.

The committee thought it could best make such a response by putting the resolutions in a form that would secure prompt and unanimous action upon them. They did not wait to have diplomatic documents before them. They did not wait for the call which I have sent to the Clerk's desk; but they came immediately into this House, with resolutions so framed as to secure the unanimous approbation of a committee composed of both Whigs and Democrats.

Sir, if the gentleman from Alabama will pardon me, I will suggest, in all kindness, that he might have hesitated to charge these resolutions as worthless, and stripped of all their original force, when he found them coming back from the Committee on Foreign Affairs under such circumstances, and reported by their original mover, satisfied with their amendment.

But, sir, I meet the gentleman on this issue. What are the resolutions as reported back by the committee? Has that committee weakened, in any degree, their original force? The committee reported back to the House that the thanks of Congress, with a medal, be given to Captain Ingraham for his judicious and gallant conduct in extending the protection of the Government to Martin Koszta. The resolutions read:

"Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the thanks of Congress be, and they are hereby, presented to Duncan N. Ingraham, commanding the United States sloop of war St. Louis, for his judicious and gallant conduct on the second day of July last, in extending the protection of the American Government to Martin Koszta, by rescuing him from forcible and illegal seizure and imprisonment on board the Austrian brig Hunsar."

"Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to cause to be made a medal, with suitable devices, and presented to Captain Duncan N. Ingraham, as a testimonial of the high sense entertained by Congress of his valor, promptness, and judicious conduct on the above-mentioned occasion."

"Resolved, That the President of the United States cause the foregoing resolutions to be communicated to Captain Duncan N. Ingraham in such terms as he may deem best calculated to give effect to the objects thereof."

Now, sir, what are the changes made in the resolutions by the committee? First, they have struck out "his officers and men." They have left the resolution distinctly a compliment to Captain Ingraham. They concluded that the moral force, and the gallantry displayed in that act, was Captain Ingraham's alone. Therefore, they have left the resolution more complimentary in its present form than it was before. The original resolution proposed the presentation of a sword—the one reported by the committee proposes the presentation of a medal.

In fixing the value of a compliment, from the action of this House, we must refer to its usages, and the estimation in which it is regarded by naval men. Now, it so happens that the presentation of a sword is not one of the highest expressions of approbation from this House to an officer of the Navy. A higher one than that is the presentation of a silver medal; and a higher one still is the presentation of a gold medal, which has only been given to naval officers engaged in successful combat in command of a vessel-of-war. It was in this way Commodore Truxton was honored in 1800; Captains Hull, Decatur, and Jones in 1813; and Captain Stewart in 1816. A higher compliment than any I have mentioned, is a vote of thanks and a medal. Within the history of our country this has only been voted on three memorable occasions: first in 1804, to Captain Preble; secondly, in 1813, to Captains Perry and Elliott; thirdly, in 1814, to Captain MacDonough, on Lake Champlain. In every instance the naval officers commanded squadrons, and were successful in gallant engagements.

Sir, the Committee on Foreign Affairs did not suppose, when they redeemed the original resolution from a faint expression of thanks, and elevated its object into the same rank with MacDonough, with Perry, and with Preble, that they were to be told that they were weakening and making contemptible the expression of Congress.

Mr. PHILLIPS, (from his seat.) I had no reference to the thanks to Captain Ingraham personally.

Mr. PERKINS. The gentleman says he has no reference to that. Well, then, we will regard it in another light—with reference to the expression of principle, as embodied in that resolution.

Now, sir, have the committee, by the change made in the form of the resolutions, weakened the enunciation of any great principle? Sir, a great French orator has remarked that in certain connections words are things. The committee, sir, in regarding the facts, came to the conclusion that this act of Captain Ingraham was in itself a principle. If the gentleman insists, however, that some great principle—a principle of international law—should have been embodied in these resolutions, I would ask him if the principle embodied in the original resolution meets to-day, as it did on Friday, his approbation?

Sir, what was the principle asserted in the rescue of Koszta? How could the committee best express that principle? It was evidently not expressed in the resolution referred by the House. That voted the thanks of Congress to Captain Ingraham—for what? For asserting and protecting the rights of American citizens, native and adopted? Now the committee concluded that Captain Ingraham had done nothing of the kind in the rescue of Koszta. He [Koszta] was neither a citizen, native or adopted. Therefore, the resolutions did not answer the purpose of the original mover, nor did they embody all the principles of the Secretary's letter. That letter went further than that—that letter stated three grounds, each one of which, according to the reasonings of the Secretary, was in itself distinctly sufficient to justify that act. What were those principles?

1st. That of humanity.

2d. That of nationality arising from domiciliation in a country: carrying with it the duty of protection.

3d. That of nationality resulting from the possession of a tessera or certificate of protection, such as it is customary for consuls in the East to give to those recognized as under the protection of their respective Governments. Now, sir, did the original resolutions assert any one of these principles?

The gentleman disclaims for them the first—that of humanity; and as American citizenship, native or adopted, complete or inchoate, is not identical, nor always coexistent, nor in any way necessarily connected with the nationalities spoken of by the Secretary—the resolutions certainly do not declare the other two grounds.

What, then, were they based upon? Upon no principle at all; but simply upon the fact, and by no means a material fact, of Martin Koszta's having declared in one of our courts an intention to become a citizen of the United States.

Now, sir, the circumstance of such a declaration of intention to become a citizen was not referred to by the Secretary as a prerequisite to nationality, but simply in evidence of Koszta's domicile in this country; and so careful was the Secretary to make this appear, that he expressly states that had Koszta's declaration been just the reverse—that is, had he sworn to an intention never to become a citizen of the United States—still, if his domicile here was established beyond all question, he was entitled to our protection.

Then, sir, as the original resolutions did not express the great principles embodied in the act of Captain Ingraham, and argued in the letter of the Secretary, what was the committee to do? Why, certainly, that which they proceeded to do; to frame such resolutions as they thought would best express the national significance attached to Captain Ingraham's conduct.

They did not feel disposed, sir, even if they approved all the reasonings of that letter, to make it a kind of test act for the approbation of Captain Ingraham's conduct. Some members of this House, without being able to concur in all three of the grounds taken by the Secretary of State, might yet find in one of them an ample vindication of Captain Ingraham's conduct. Others, like the gentleman from Alabama, might have additional grounds of justification for that conduct. Between the act of Captain Ingraham and the letter of Mr. Marcy there was no necessary connection, and the committee, looking at the rescue of Koszta as a great act, responded to by the national heart, did not feel disposed, acting above party considerations, and above sectional interests, to come into this House and say to the large and respectable body composing the Whig party, "unless you indorse such and such reasonings, you shall be placed in the false position of disapproving an act which has met the approbation of the whole country."

But, sir, there was another alteration. All resolutions heretofore passed, complimentary of naval officers, have been worded, "for their good and gallant conduct." The committee supposed that this House took a higher ground than that contained in any action of this House merely complimentary. They therefore inserted the words "judicious and gallant conduct." They wished to ascribe to Captain Ingraham something of the judgment of a statesman. They thought this act united the moral courage and sagacity of a statesman with the spirit of a soldier, and hence they said "for his judicious and gallant conduct on the second day of July last, in extending the protection of the American Government to Martin Koszta," &c.

I think the gentleman himself, on reflection, will agree with me, that in this view of the case, we have not weakened, but rather extended the principle embodied in the resolutions. I ask the gentleman when he proposes to approve the conduct of Captain Ingraham specifically, if he does not limit the extent of that approbation? He reduces a mere question of principle to one of fact. If it should happen that he had not acted exactly in accordance with the gentleman's statement, he is then, by implication at least, censured.

But I go further. I take higher ground. I contend that if the committee had simply in view the enunciation of a great principle of nationality, they could not have adopted more suitable language than that they have employed. What was the issue? When Captain Ingraham first rescued Martin Koszta, the act was met by the protest of the Russian Government, and by that of Austria and Prussia. Protests against what? Against any doctrine of nationality, against any right to protect our own citizens, native or adopted, against any reasoning in the letter of Secretary Marcy, against any action of this Government? Not at all. It was simply against the act of Captain Ingraham. When Mr. Hülsemann made his complaint to this Government in reference to this matter, was it directed against the action of this Government, against the assertion of any great principle, against any reasoning of Secretary Marcy? By no means. After alluding in his letter to some preliminary matters which he did not consider of importance, he proceeds to say that the greatest cause of complaint is the conduct of the American officers at Smyrna; and he concludes by asserting the expectation that this Government will not hesitate to rebuke that conduct, and give reparation to Austria. That, then, is the issue? It is Captain Ingraham's conduct, in extending the protection of this Government to Martin Koszta. The issue is made by the protests of foreign Governments—it is made by Mr. Hülsemann with the Secretary of State. And how does the Secretary meet it? He begins by saying that the President of the United States has maturely considered the cause of the complaint against the American officers; and concludes by saying that he is not prepared to disclaim that action, and make the reparation demanded. How does the President meet it? Instead of disclaiming, he is constrained to approve the conduct of Captain Ingraham. Then what was the issue before the committee? It was not a question of reasoning to the American people. They were preparing to utter the voice of the American people in regard to this matter. Should they respond in the same manner that the Secretary had done, that the President had done? In what form did they give that response? They could have confined themselves simply to saying that they disclaimed that act. They might have gone as far as the President, and said that they simply approved that conduct. But the committee propose to go further, and vote thanks for the gallant and judicious conduct of Captain Ingraham. The Government of Austria has promoted the commander of the Austrian vessel. This House cannot promote Captain Ingraham. But the committee have done what they could to honor him, by proposing to confer upon him the highest compliment in their power.

Mr. Speaker, in discussing the resolutions before the House, I have sought to confine myself to a defense of the action of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I have not felt that the conduct of Captain Ingraham required an eulogy. It has already received the approbation of the country. The action of this House can only make permanent the evidence of that approbation.

By European nations the passage of these resolutions may be regarded as an indorsement by the country of the reasoning of the letter of Mr. Marcy, as well as of the act of Captain Ingraham. Let it be so. That letter is not now properly before us, and I am therefore not disposed to follow gentlemen into a discussion of its principles. Whenever it comes up in some practical form, I have no doubt it will be responded to by this House, as it has been by the country. There are sentiments in it, however, so appropriate to the action of the House on the present occasion, that I have found it difficult to check their utterance. I especially admire his expression of our "duty to make our nationality respected by other nations, and respectable in every quarter of the globe," "without being obliged to explain" our "conduct to any foreign Power."

It was in this view that I thought there was much force in the remark of the chairman of the committee, when he said that we were to pronounce judgment, but not to give our reasoning in this matter. I cannot agree with him, however, that American State papers lose either in beauty or force by being addressed in language which the popular mind can understand, and with which the popular heart can sympathize. I think it is an honorable peculiarity of our institutions, that while the State papers of Europe are frigid with a dignity that addresses itself simply to the learned, the dispatches of this Government are clothed in language simple and easy of apprehension. But in this instance we are not speaking to the American people. We are speaking to foreign Governments; and the more concise and forcible our language, the more likely are we to command respect.

Although I have spoken in approval of the doctrines contained in the letter of the Secretary of State, I do not admit that the letter itself embodies any new principle. The Secretary himself protests against this idea.

He says, speaking of nationality resulting from domicile:

"It is no new doctrine now for the first time brought into operation by the United States; it is common to all nations, and has had the sanction of their practice for ages; but it is new that, at this late period, when the United States assert a claim to it as a common inheritance, it should at once be discovered that it is a doctrine fraught with danger, and likely to compromise the peace of the world."

The merit of the Secretary's letter is, however, greater to my mind than if its doctrines were novel. I think it no light thing that he has brought forward, in a bold and forcible manner, on a highly proper occasion, a great principle of international law that has been suffered to lie long dormant in our law books. As early as 1817, in the case of the Pizarro, 2d Wheaton, this doctrine of nationality, resulting from domicile, was laid down in broad terms by Judge Story, and concurred in by Judges Marshall, Washington, Livingston, and Johnston. Secretary Marcy has only given to it vitality by its application to persons as well as property. There is no just reason for its being restricted, so as to apply to one and not to the other.

The principle is broad enough for both, and that it has not always been extended to protect both is attributable to the watchful jealousy with which the monarchical Governments of Europe have sought to make perpetual the allegiance of the subject. Recognizing, as we do in this country, the opposite doctrine—that is, the right of an individual to expatriate himself—the reasoning of the Secretary, and the conclusions of his letter, are in harmony with the spirit of our institutions.

I agree with the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, that the time had arrived when the voice of this country should be heard in declaring the law of nations. I think we have acquiesced long enough in European interpretation of that law. For the last fifty years it has been moulded to suit the necessities of particular nations. At this time it is practically little more than a code, conventional in its character, for the protection of existing institutions—interpreted always against the individual, and in behalf of the Government. Now, sir, while I yield to no one in reverence for those great principles of right that civilians tell us lie at the base of abstract justice, and constitute the links that bind together the great commonwealths of mankind in the mutual practice of honesty and humanity, and while I would not willingly interfere with their legitimate influence, nor rashly add to or subtract from them, still I think that we have reason to complain against their perversion.

I think, sir, the time is coming when this country will be forced to declare, in some degree, its independence of a code which is so framed as to justify tyranny in almost all its forms—a code which is too often made a screen for the perpetration of great national crime. When we do declare our independence of the perversions of this code, I believe the act will be attended with moral results almost equal to those which attended the establishment of our colonial independence.

In these sentiments I may not have the concurrence of all the members of this House, nor even of all those who will vote for a resolution of thanks to Captain Ingraham, and I am unwilling that their utterance should be made a barrier to a full vote on the resolutions before the House. For this reason I think the phraseology used by the Committee peculiarly happy. It takes the whole subject out of the region of party, and enables all to unite in the expression of their gratitude. To attempt to write down, in the form of a resolution, and to classify, as you would political principles, the emotions excited by the act of Captain Ingraham is impossible. You might as well attempt to write down the emotions excited by one of our martial airs, or by the sight of our flag victorious in battle.

The gentleman from Alabama on my left, [Mr. PHILLIPS,] seems to think that the resolution, as reported, will have no significance. I cannot agree with him. The act, as that of an individual, has caused the flag of our country to be hailed with enthusiasm in all the ports of the East, and cannot have less significance when made a national act.

An act which has thrown around our nationality a degree of honor which it has never enjoyed before may well precede the disturbance of the peace of Europe. It may well precede the movement which is felt in all the ports of Asia.

I rejoice that this act occurred just when, and where, and as it did. The circumstances attending associate themselves, in my mind, with something of the sublime.

The great Powers of Europe were negotiating in those seas with reference to territorial limits and dynastic rights. With these questions America and American officers had no sympathy; but so soon as a great principle of international law was invaded; so soon as an individual—an outcast from other Governments, yet clothed with our nationality—was touched in his rights, the protection of our Government was thrown around him.

I am proud of the act—I rejoice that while this country, by its enterprise, was peopling the valleys of the great West, and dotting, with towns and cities, the shores of the Pacific, it was yet equal to such a moral display in the remote East. I look upon the rescue of Koszta, in all its circumstances, and in all its consequences, at home and abroad, as vindicating, in the strongest and most unmistakable manner, the great principle of our nationality.

Mr. DISNEY. When this resolution was before the House the other day, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HILLYER] remarked that the world would not only notice the passage of this resolution, but would also examine the observations which had been made, and the opinions which might be expressed, when the resolution was under consideration. There is truth in the remark. And had it not been that during this discussion some opinions have been advanced from which I must totally dissent, I should not have participated in the debate.

So far as the resolution itself is concerned, I feel that after the exceedingly able, clear, and lucid defense which the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. PERKINS] has just made, any additional remarks of mine in that regard may perhaps be said to be entirely uncalled for. That gentleman has placed the resolution and its phraseology, and the reasons which operated on the committee to adopt that phraseology, upon grounds unmistakable, and, in my judgment, not to be questioned.

I believe that it is conceded, on all hands, that the thanks of Congress are justly due to Captain Ingraham for his gallant action; and the only difference of opinion, so far as I understand it, is in regard to the reasons upon which that act should be based. I believe that every gentleman is prepared to go to the extent to which the resolution goes; and allow me here to say, that I see no substantial difference between the resolution, as it now reads, and the substitute suggested by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. PHILLIPS.]

What is the resolution as it now stands before the House? It proposes a vote of thanks to Captain Ingraham, for his judicious and gallant conduct in extending the protection of the American flag to Martin Koszta, under the facts, and under all the facts of the case, without any limitation. It is true, that the facts themselves are not specially set forth in the resolution; nor would usage or good taste permit a thing of the sort. But by necessary and unavoidable implication, the resolution proposes to give a vote of thanks to Captain Ingraham for extending the protection of the American flag under the facts. Nay more, sir; the resolution goes further, for it declares that the seizure of Martin Koszta was illegal. What more can gentlemen ask than a resolution which declares that Captain Ingraham is entitled to the thanks of the American Congress for his judicious and gallant conduct in extending the protection of the American flag to Martin Koszta, who has been seized in violation of his rights, and in view of his relations to the American Government? Does not that cover the whole case? I ask the question, is there any substantial difference in idea or principle between the resolution as it stands, and the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I think there is. The resolution reported by the committee nowhere asserts the right of Martin Koszta to protection. The seizure might be illegal in reference to other Governments as well as to our own. It is the right of Koszta to protection that is the proper foundation of the whole proceeding.

Mr. DISNEY. The right to ask protection, and the duty to grant it, are correlative and co-existent. That resolution asserts that Captain Ingraham did right in extending the protection of the American flag to Martin Koszta; and, by necessary implication, the right of Martin Koszta to that protection is asserted. I repeat, that the resolution is, as I take it, an avowal of the principles agitated, and whose avowal is asked for by the gentleman from Alabama.

But, sir, as I have already said, the very able elucidation and defense of the resolution, by the gentleman from Louisiana, has rendered it entirely unnecessary for me to interpose any additional observations upon these points. But remarks have been elicited during this discussion, and opinions have been enunciated, from which I am compelled to dissent. It is at all times unpleasant to differ from one's friends, and the more unpleasant as the occasion rises in dignity and importance. Nobody has a higher admiration for the ability of the present distinguished Secretary of State than I have. I am proud to call him my friend. I admire his ability, an ability exhibited on no occasion with more signal success than upon the occasion of Martin Koszta's seizure; but there are points in his letter with which I cannot agree. When this country shall undertake to interpolate the law of nations with new principles and a new creed, it will be time for us to consider the policy of so doing.

It has been remarked, as well in the Koszta letter as upon this floor, that the Secretary of State set forth on that occasion no new doctrine; that he only referred to principles known to the law of nations. To this I must give my dissent. I do not so read it. For the purpose of commerce, the laws of nations have recognized the fact that an individual may acquire a domicile in a country alien to the one of his origin. They have recognized that, for commercial purposes, he may be clothed with the nationality of a country alien to the one to which he owes his allegiance; and the error of the Secretary consists in this: that while he finds the language which he uses running through the books upon the subject, yet he has omitted to notice and recognize the distinction of which I have spoken, that the nationality which is given by domicile is conferred for commercial purposes; and that this distinction is palpably and unmistakably laid down in the very authorities which the Secretary himself cites; and that in this nationality the individual must be limited to such acts as are not incompatible with his allegiance.

Clothed with the nationality for commercial purposes! The distinction, sir, is an important one. In a state of war between two countries, in order to define the rights of respective parties, courts have tried, with exceeding nicety, the relations existing with parties under certain circumstances; and it has been held, that when an individual acquires a domicile in a country alien to the country to which he owes his allegiance, he does so for commercial purposes; but that such nationality does not affect his allegiance.

It has been held, sir, by the English and French, as well as by the American courts, that as the property of a country constitutes a part of its strength, so the legitimate right of a country in time of war is to weaken its enemy by the destruction and capture of its property; and they have held that in the execution of this right it is not to be permitted to an individual, under cover of nationality, to protect the property which is the product of the hostile soil. So in the case of a subject of Great Britain domiciled in the city of New York, and still retaining his allegiance, never having abjured it to the crown of Great Britain, but still professing and acknowledging it. When, under these conditions, his property is destroyed, in a state of war between the two countries, that property—even though it is owned by a British subject, if domiciled within the limits of the United States of America—is to be considered as American property, and as a just object of legal prize and capture. Because, though his allegiance was due to the British crown, and he was, in every respect, a British subject, yet his domiciliation clothed him with the American nationality for commercial purposes, and his property was therefore American property.

More, sir; the courts have gone further; they have held that even where there are two parties in copartnership, who hold a joint adventure, one of them having domiciled in the country of one belligerent, and the other being a resident of the country of the other belligerent, but without having abjured his allegiance, the courts will proceed to inquire into the domiciliation of the parties, and make a partition, though both be subjects of the belligerent which has made the capture; because the domiciliation of the one has clothed him with the nationality of the other country for commercial purposes; so strictly has it been held that domiciliation clothes with nationality for commercial purposes. And this principle is acted on in all cases; and, as I have said already, is laid down as authority by the very writers cited by the Secretary of State himself.

I am not desirous to weary the House by going into the multitude of cases to be found in the books of England, and France, and this country, nor to fatigue the House by reading the authorities now lying before me. Permit me to state, however, in general terms, that the essence of the whole law can be found in Kent. The case of the Venus illustrates it. The authorities are clear and distinct. It is, perhaps, right and fair to say, that in all of these cases the American writers, as well as the American courts, have copied and fully indorsed the principles laid down by Sir William Scott.

In reference to the intimations which have been made, that this right of protection should extend to citizens and persons who have declared their intentions to become citizens, I would repeat what has been said by the gentleman from Louisiana, that the decision of the question of Martin Koszta's right to protection as an inchoate citizen has not been contemplated by the Secretary's letter. The essential point of it, in that respect, was that Martin Koszta intended to acquire a permanent residence in this country; and this was evidence of his good faith, and his intent to acquire rights of domiciliation. But what is the position of an individual who has merely declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States? By the terms of the naturalization laws, you recognize the fact that these persons, so declaring their intentions, owe allegiance to the country of their origin. By its terms, before you recognize them as citizens of these United States, you require them to make an express abjuration of their allegiance to the country of their birth. You require, in addition, that they shall take upon themselves an assumption of allegiance to this country. Neither of these things have been done upon the part of a man who has merely declared his intention to do them at some future day—not now, but in the future—that he would swear and assume that allegiance to you. Upon a mere declaration of an intention in the future to do these things, are you to take the things as though already done, and thereby create all those legal obligations between the parties which clothe them with the relative duties of protection and dependence? No, sir. The Secretary of State too well understood the case to lay down any such doctrine. He merely alluded to the fact, that Martin Koszta had made a declaration of intention, in order to show that his domicile was here, and that his residence among us was made bona fide, and with an intention so to remain within our community as to acquire that nationality of character which domiciliation gives. This point was well understood and stated to the House by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. SMITH.]

The Secretary makes a point on the nationality which domiciliation gives. Why, sir, the whole course and policy of our Government would have to be changed if this doctrine were avowed and sanctioned by the American Congress. Your usage now is, to refuse a passport unless the fact of citizenship is established to the satisfaction of the authorities of the Government. You do not undertake to give passports of protection to anybody but those who are citizens. You never have, and, in my judgment, you never will. The policy of this Government has been settled and uniform. While I appreciate all that glowing loyalty which prompts gentlemen to extend the protection of the Government, even before they become citizens, to those who come to this country from foreign lands, and while, as all who know me well understand, my feeling toward the emigrant is as broad and generous as those of any gentleman upon this floor, or elsewhere, still a regard to the future of this country—a future which every statesman will endeavor to look to, and jealously guard—will not permit me to yield to those feelings when they propose to lead me into the impracticable and the indefensible.

You have, sir, upon the statute-book, a law which recognizes the very principle of which I am speaking. You have a law there which declares that any man who, owing allegiance to this Government, shall be found in arms, and doing violence to her citizens, though under color of a commission, or of authority, and the direction of a foreign prince, shall be deemed and treated as a pirate. That act shows the rule which you have adopted in reference to the conduct of your own citizens; and can you adopt a different rule in regard to the citizens of other Powers? By that act you avow the doctrine that a man owes allegiance to his Government, and can do no act incompatible with that allegiance; and if he does, he thereby compromises his own safety, and is a traitor to the country to which his allegiance is due. There must be an express abjuration of his original allegiance, and a formal assumption of another, before the authority of that other can be held as a justification for his obedience to it in opposition to the allegiance of his origin. Nay, more, it may be well for gentlemen before they enunciate an opinion upon this subject, to examine with some care what ground our country has taken upon these subjects heretofore. It is quite a common event for American citizens to domiciliate themselves in England, in France, and in other countries, in order to carry on their commercial transactions there.

Is it to be said, as it necessarily must be by the doctrine of the Secretary, that the American merchant who crosses the ocean and locates himself in Great Britain for commercial purposes, with the bona fide intention of acquiring a domicile, but with the equally bona fide intention to retain his rights as an American citizen, becomes entitled to the protection of the British Government, and, as a matter of necessity, subjects himself to the correlative duties of a British subject, and thereby of necessity loses his right as a citizen of this Republic? And yet such must be the result of the doctrine which I combat. I repeat, that the right of protection, and the duty which the individual owes the Government, are correlative, and are co-existent; and where there is no allegiance, there is no right or duty of protection. The whole difficulty in this case has arisen from confounding commercial relations with the right and duty of an individual, as a subject; and I use the word "subject," not in contra-distinction to the term which we use in this country—that of "citizen"—but to designate the relations between the governed and the Government. I am inquiring into the relations of the individual under the Government, without regard to a foreign Government. The right and duty of an individual under a Government, viewed in his political relations to that Government, and the rights of that individual toward that Government, in his commercial transactions, in regard to the property of the country in which he is a resident, are different and separate things.

Mr. PHILLIPS. The gentleman from Ohio states a proposition accurate in itself; that is, that allegiance and protection are correlative. I would then ask him, whether that protection is not due to the individual who establishes his home among us, though the full term of five years may not have expired, which admits him to the right of full citizenship?

Mr. DISNEY. I am glad that the gentleman from Alabama has asked this question, and called my attention precisely to this point. There are two sorts of allegiance. The books of this country and Europe recognize them with entire distinctness. The temporary allegiance growing out of a domicile, and connected with the commercial transactions of the country, and the permanent allegiance growing out of the duties of the citizen in the abstract, without regard to his commercial relations and connection with the property of the country. Permanent allegiance imposes upon an individual the obligation to support, defend, and obey the Government, whether at home or abroad; temporary allegiance imposes upon the individual the necessity of obeying the laws of the country, while he is within the jurisdiction of the country within which he is residing, within which he is domiciliated, provided they are not incompatible with the obligations he owes to the country to which his permanent allegiance is due. This is a distinction which the Secretary of State has overlooked. It is an important one, vast and mighty in its consequences.

Take the case of Koszta to illustrate this: while he remained within the limits of the Republic, with an intention to remain permanently here, he owed temporary allegiance to the Government, and was entitled to protection within its jurisdiction. But if he had left these shores without the intention of returning, no sooner had he quitted the dock at New York, than he would have been divested from all his obligations of temporary allegiance to this Government, and this Government would have been relieved from all obligations in respect to his protection. They were under obligations to protect him in his property and in his relations to his property, but not to protect the individual outside of the jurisdiction of the country on account of any claim which he may have acquired in his relations to the institutions of the country during his residence here.

But, sir, before we can decide whether Martin Koszta was entitled to any privileges even of domiciliation, we must first inquire into the intention of the party in leaving our shores—whether it was for temporary purposes merely. In the case of Koszta, he left, as we understand, with the intention of returning to this country. What, then, was the position he occupied? To that question, my reply is, that he occupied precisely the position of a British subject residing—domiciliated—as a merchant in New York, who leaves the country and takes a voyage to France to accomplish certain purposes connected with his business. Now, sir, while he is there in the heart of France, he is an American merchant, but a British subject—with a temporary allegiance to the United States, but a permanent allegiance to Great Britain. Martin Koszta, in commercial matters, would have been as an American merchant who was temporarily in Smyrna; but though occupying such relations, he might have been an Austrian subject beside. Such is the doctrine of the law. It was the right and duty of the United States to protect his property as an American merchant; but as soon as he left our shores he was absolved from all allegiance to this Government, and the Government at the same time was absolved from obligations to protect him while he remained without the jurisdiction of the country. As an individual, Koszta owed no allegiance to the American Government; and, as I before observed, the American Government were then relieved from the correlative duty of affording him its protection. He stood in the attitude of an American citizen, so far as property was concerned; and as such, the American Government were placed under obligations to protect him in his property. His right to such protection would have been recognized in any of the courts of Europe, or in any courts of our own.

But, sir, it is not my intention to detain the House with the multitudinous cases which might be produced in illustration of this rule; I only desire to add, in this connection, that, in my judgment, the Secretary of State is entirely mistaken in supposing that, in asserting the right of this Government to extend its protection over Martin Koszta, on the ground of his domiciliation in the United States, he is uttering no new doctrine in regard to the law of nations.

Mr. MACDONALD, (interrupting.) I desire to inquire if the morning hour has expired?

The SPEAKER. It has expired.

Mr. MACDONALD. I move, then, that the House proceed to the business on the Speaker's table.

[Loud cries of "No!" "No!" "Go on with your speech!"]

The question was taken, and the House refused to proceed with the business on the Speaker's table.

Mr. DISNEY, (resuming.) Sir, I shall not detain the House much longer. But there is another point in the defense of the Secretary of State to which, I confess, I do not attach much importance;—I allude to the point where he refers to the fact of the extradition of Koszta, with the consent of the Austrian Government, and that, under the laws of Austria, a subject of that Empire, under certain circumstances, forfeits his rights as such. I confess that I am not able to see the force of that position. As I understand the law in such cases, a criminal who forfeits his rights of citizenship does not thereby necessarily divest himself of the duties devolving on him as a matter of allegiance to his Government. A citizen of one of these States, who, by the commission of crime, is divested of the rights of citizenship, does not thereby render himself incapable of committing high treason against the Government. But I will not trespass on the time of the House by amplifying upon this point. Gentlemen can themselves trace the suggestions to their necessary results, and conceive the illustration of the point I present.

With regard to the policy of adopting the doctrine that an individual coming here without any assumption of allegiance creates a duty upon the part of this Government to extend to him its protection, the idea is utterly absurd; and if this Government attempts to defend such a position, it will ere long be compelled to retract and retrace its steps. Our Government is but one among a community of nations.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, (interrupting.) I dislike to interrupt the gentleman from Ohio; but I ask him if Secretary Marcy does not distinctly state that the right of Koszta to protection was an imperfect right, and that the obligation on the part of this Government to protect him was also imperfect, to be exercised or not, according to the discretion of the Government?

Mr. DISNEY. I am unwilling to trespass on the time of the House to go fully into that question. I have authorities before me; I could refer to them without number; I could cite them by the hour. But I have even avoided reading the paper of the Secretary, that I might shorten the time during which I should trespass on the attention of the House. Were I to go fully into these matters, I could show still more conclusively than I have done the authority of the position I have taken. The very authorities which the Secretary has consulted, and whose language may be found in every page of his document, have laid down the doctrine for which I contend. Gentlemen can find them; they are easy of access. The admiralty reports of England and the United States, and the American law writers, all lay down the doctrine which I have referred to. I repeat again, that the very authorities cited by the Secretary of State lay down the doctrine of which I have spoken, and the limitations which he has entirely overlooked—that is, that the nationality of which he speaks is acquired for commercial purposes, and can impose no duty incompatible with allegiance.

Sir, I have said enough to call the attention of the House and the country to the doctrine. I have referred them to the reports and the books. Another word on the point in which I was, when interrupted by the gentleman from Virginia, and I have done. This thing called the law of nations is those rules which are to govern and control nations in their international intercourse. This country is now occupying a position among the nations of the earth vastly more important than what she has heretofore done. That position is becoming more and more important. As the future comes upon us, there is no American in this country, having the feelings which belong to the American heart, who does not view and contemplate that future with a just and exulting pride. And proud as we are, and just in proportion as we are proud of the glory, and the honor, and the renown, and dignity, and the reputation of this Republic, we will be chary of putting this country in any position which may inflict hereafter a stain upon that reputation and renown. I say, for this Government, exalted as she is in character, and developed as she is in strength, to lay down doctrines from which, in the future, she will be compelled to recede, would be a stain upon that character; and it is to avoid a position of that kind that I have felt myself called upon to direct the attention of the House and the country to the doctrines which have heretofore been entertained, not only by our own Government, but by every Government in Europe, in this connection.

Sir, I will not detain the House longer by attempting to persuade it. I have done all I intended to do. I have shown the House and the country in what, in my judgment, the error of the Secretary of State consists. The authorities show the matter as I have stated it. It would be injurious to pass the resolution on the grounds advocated in some quarters of the House. I concede and admire the impregnable defense made by the Secretary of State of the action of our Government and its officers; but the points which, in my opinion, he has in that defense unnecessarily made, and which, in my judgment are indefensible, and portentous of evil in the future, I must, as a matter of necessity, repudiate.

[During the delivery of Mr. DISNEY's remarks, a message was received from the President of the United States, by the hand of his Private Secretary, SIDNEY WEBSTER, Esq.]

Mr. McMULLIN obtained the floor.

Mr. PRESTON. It was my intention to have interrogated the gentleman from Ohio in reference to certain matters which weigh upon my mind, before he yielded his right to the floor.

Mr. DISNEY. I should like to accommodate the gentleman; but not being now in possession of the floor I cannot do so.

Mr. McMULLIN. It occurs to me that we have had discussion enough on this subject, and unless there is some gentleman present who is not prepared to vote, and desires further discussion to enable him to do so, I shall call for the previous question.

Mr. PRESTON. I desire to submit a few remarks, and would ask the gentleman from Virginia whether or not he insists upon his call for the previous question.

Mr. McMULLIN. I do insist upon my call, unless there is some gentleman present unprepared to vote at this time.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I would appeal to my colleague to withdraw his call for the previous question.

[Cries of "No!" "Hold on to the call for the previous question."]

Mr. SMITH. I am not prepared to vote. [Laughter.]

Mr. McMULLIN. Many gentlemen around me ask for the withdrawal of my call for the previous question; and as the gentleman from Kentucky desires to submit some remarks on the question under consideration, I do withdraw it.

Mr. PRESTON. If it is agreeable to the House—

Mr. McMULLIN. I would request my friend from Kentucky [Mr. PRESTON] to renew the motion for the previous question.

Several MEMBERS. "No!" "No!"

Mr. PRESTON. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DISNEY] in his criticism on the Secretary's letter; and I intended to wait for an appropriate opportunity to ask him a question, so that I might not interrupt him while he was pursuing the current of his thought in the elucidation of the proposition under discussion; but he had concluded before I could attract his attention to it.

For my own part, sir, I see nothing censurable, but, on the contrary, much to be commended in the doctrines of domiciliation as laid down by Secretary Marcy, and feel that the principles of his letter might be decisively indorsed in this House. I believe, sir, the committee, however, have placed the matter on true grounds; and that the resolution is not open to the objection of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. PHILLIPS], who wants it more definitive; nor to the criticisms which have been advanced by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DISNEY].

What is the resolution? It is a return of thanks, in general terms like a Baltimore platform, on which everybody can stand without doing violence to their particular views; for the more you multiply propositions the more will you multiply objections to the resolution. As it stands now, it is a simple vote of thanks to Captain Ingraham for his protection of Martin Koszta. Is this the appropriate body, let me ask the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. PHILLIPS], to announce diplomatic doctrines? Or should we, as a matter of taste, permit the declaration of principles of public law to emanate from the Secretary of State and the Executive Department; and is it not proper to confine ourselves to returning thanks to the gallant officer for guarding the rights of one who had been, impliedly, promised the protection of the American flag abroad?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I desire to answer the question of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. PRESTON] addressed to me. I do say, sir, that this House, constituting as it does the representation of the American people, is an apt place for the assertion of the great American principles on which our Government should be conducted.

Mr. PRESTON. The point, sir, is one of taste. The gentleman [Mr. PHILLIPS] might desire the whole Marcy letter spread upon the record as a preamble to the resolutions of thanks. Congress might prefix a whole treatise on national law as expressive of the views of the House. No body doubts the power of the House thus to express its opinions; and if there were any pressing reason, the House might appropriately go into the discussion of public law. But with all due deference, I think it is better for us to look on the simple fact that Ingraham has done his duty in this matter bravely and patriotically; and to thank him for what he has done, without going into an examination of the principles of national law in-involved in the correspondence of the Secretary of State and Chevalier Hüsemann. I think the committee stopped rightly there.

I would attract the attention of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. DISNEY]—and I am now prepared to yield to him, for the purpose of permitting him to answer, the time which his own regard to the supposed wishes of the House prevented him from occupying—I ask him whether or not, under the acts of Congress, prior to 1848, an alien was not forbidden to leave this country under pain of forfeiting the privileges acquired by residence? So that if an alien, having resided here for four years, should touch his foot for one instant upon foreign soil, would not his inchoate right of citizenship have been gone?

But in 1848 all that part of the law which required a continued residence was repealed, and the Congress of the United States, and the Government of the United States, said, by implication, to every alien, that they might go to foreign lands, and the time of their absence should not be deducted from the period required by law to acquire the rights of citizenship. If Congress had expressly said to Martin Koszta, "you may go abroad into any neutral port in the world, and you shall still be within the protection of the American flag, and be still acquiring the right of American citizenship, according to your declaration of intention," would not this Government be faithless to its promise, would it not be betraying the hope it had inspired, if its officer had permitted the brig Hussar to carry him back, torn from the port of Smyrna, to gratify the vengeance of the Government of Austria?

Mr. DISNEY, (interrupting.) The gentleman propounded me a question which I did not fully understand.

Mr. PRESTON. The question which I asked was, whether the act of Congress of 1848 does not permit an alien to go abroad, and still acquire his right of citizenship, and render that absence lawful?

Mr. DISNEY. Admit the fact, and what does it prove? It has been the custom of every country in Europe to adopt naturalization laws—in England and France, as well as the United States. The principle of naturalization, that is, the adoption of citizens of alien birth, is as old as the earliest ages of the world. It is not an invention of our day. It is no modern thing. But the terms and conditions upon which an individual shall be admitted into the Government, as a member of the community, are to be regulated by each community according to its own notions of right and wrong.

Now, that portion of the laws of the United States which prescribe a residence of five years, or any other term, does not confer the right of citizenship; but it is made a condition, a compliance with which, and other conditions—the more important of which is an express abjuration of all existing allegiance, and an express assumption of a new allegiance to the United States—creates, for the first time, the relative relations of which I have spoken. Until the conditions have been complied with, this relation of the individual to the Government, the citizen to the ruler—the relation of protection on the one hand, and allegiance on the other—cannot be created and established. The act spoken of by the gentleman from Kentucky is simply a modification of one of the conditions by which, when complied with, the individual becomes invested with the rights of citizenship, and entitled to the protection which follows.

Mr. PRESTON. If the Government of the United States permits the alien to go abroad under the authority of our laws and the protection of our flag, it is impossible, in good faith, that we shall afterward stultify ourselves by declaring that he placed himself beyond the pale of safety. If the Government of the United States had declared expressly that aliens might go abroad into foreign ports, the Secretary of State is bound in his correspondence to support that right, and the Government is bound to afford him protection. Up to the year 1848, as I stated, the acts of Congress, in regard to naturalization, did not permit the alien to leave the United States or interrupt his residence, and required that he should have resided within their jurisdiction for the continued term of five years, without being at any time absent from our territory, before he could demand his final papers. These were the provisions of the act of 1813. In 1848, Congress repealed that clause in the act of 1813, and rendered the absence of the alien in foreign and neutral ports lawful.

Martin Koszta, when he landed in the city of Smyrna, in my opinion, did so under the implied authority of the act of Congress, and his absence was lawful. If such absence were lawful, the United States were in duty bound to protect him. If it were unlawful, the United States were not bound to protect him.

There is one part of the letter of Mr. Marcy which is justly subject to criticism. It is in the concluding portion of the letter, in which he says it is optional with the United States to protect Koszta or not. Let me read the passage:

"The conclusions at which the President has arrived, after a full examination of the transactions at Smyrna, and a respectful consideration of the views of the Austrian Government thereon, as presented in Mr. Hüsemann's note, are, that Koszta, when seized and imprisoned, was invested with the nationality of the United States, and they had, therefore, the right, if they chose to exercise it, to extend their protection to him; that from international law—the only law which can be rightfully appealed to for rules of action in this case—Austria could derive no authority to obstruct or interfere with the United States in the exercise of this right, in affecting the liberation of Koszta; and that Captain Ingraham's interposition for his release was, under the peculiar and extraordinary circumstances of the case, right and proper."

If Koszta was absent with the sanction of the United States; if he had the right of protection, it was at once the duty of the United States, without any choice or option at all, to give him protection; and the conclusion of the letter is in conflict with its antecedent positions, in which Mr. Marcy asserts that Koszta had an unequal right to the protection of the United States, and it was the unquestionable duty of our Government to afford it.

The history of the case shows that Martin Koszta went to Smyrna with the belief that he was under the protection of our Government; that he obtained a passport, or tezkereh—a sort of safe conduct permitted by the Sultan, and issued by our Consul—which was considered sufficient to protect him from molestation; and it was to assert those rights, and afford that protection, that Captain Ingraham approached the Austrian brig.

Mr. CUMMING. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question, merely for information?

Mr. PRESTON. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CUMMING. Did Captain Ingraham, or did he not, write to the Chargé ad interim at Constantinople—for I believe the Chargé himself was absent—for instructions before he demanded Koszta's release? And did he not receive instructions to that effect from our representative at Constantinople, Mr. Brown? I merely ask these questions for the sake of information.

Mr. PRESTON. My impression is that he did not delay his action; but it is a matter quite immaterial to my present argument.

Mr. CUMMING. I was under the impression that he did.

Mr. PRESTON. I do not remember all the facts and the dates of the correspondence between Mr. Brown and Captain Ingraham, in reference to the point to which the gentleman alludes. The correspondence, however, will show; nor is it material to the view I desire to present.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Ohio. If the gentleman will allow me, I think I can inform the gentleman upon this point. I had occasion a day or two since to look at the correspondence upon this subject, and I recollect to have seen a letter from Mr. Brown, Chargé ad interim, dated the 28th of June, in which he advises Captain Ingraham to demand Koszta's release, and to extend the protection of the American flag over him.

Mr. PRESTON. Well, sir, whether he did or not is not a matter of much importance to my purpose. My main object is that this country shall stand by the doctrine asserted by the Secretary of State in his letter, and when he maintains our international rights with ability, I, as a Whig, do not desire to criticise his action, but to indorse his course—

Mr. CUMMING. If the gentleman will allow me for a moment more, I desire to read a single paragraph from Mr. Hüsemann's letter, upon the point to which I rose a moment since. He says:

"On the morning of the 2d of July the commander of the American sloop-of-war St. Louis, Mr. Ingraham, sent a message to the commanding officer of the Hussar, to the effect that, in pursuance of instructions received from the Chargé d'Affaires of the United States, at Constantinople, he had to call upon him to deliver the aforesaid Koszta into his hands; adding, that if he did not receive a satisfactory answer by four o'clock in the afternoon, he should cause the prisoner to be taken away by main force."

Mr. PRESTON. Still stronger. I did not recollect the passage the gentleman has quoted; but it serves still further to authorize the act of Captain Ingraham. Under the circumstances, Captain Ingraham fulfilled his duty as a naval commander; and it is for that very reason we propose to return him the thanks of Congress. The resolution of the committee simply declares our approval of his act, and leaves all questions of public law to be settled by correspondence of the diplomatic functionaries. We leave Mr. Marcy to vindicate the principles which he has asserted in his correspondence.

The correspondence approves the acts of Captain Ingraham, and more than covers the views which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. PHILLIPS] desires to express by his amendment; but yet, to my mind, it seems better to adhere to the resolution as reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations; because, though no objection may exist as to principles—correct in themselves—yet it does not seem necessary to reassert them in a simple resolution of thanks.

Every speech uttered by those who profess to be in favor of returning thanks to Captain Ingraham, has been an additional argument for adopting the resolution as it now stands, without the insertion of other views, which might need controversy. We all approach the same end by different roads. Let us all concur in the chief object, which is to return the thanks of the American Congress to Captain Duncan N. Ingraham for his gallant conduct in the bay of Smyrna. Let the alien who seeks to become a citizen among us, when he goes to foreign lands, feel the consolation of security, and that he is still within the protecting shadow of the flag of the Union. Do not let us damp the courage of our Navy, by refusing, after this protracted discussion, to pay a tribute of respect which might possibly have been pretermitted if we had not gone thus far. Let us take no steps backward. I would rather adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. PHILLIPS,] than recede from the resolution—

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, (interrupting.) I desire to ask a question of the gentleman, and also of the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs. If Captain Ingraham acted, as appears to be the fact, under the instructions of Mr. Brown, the Chargé d'Affaires of the United States at Constantinople, instead of upon his own responsibility and his own judgment, would it not be more appropriate to give this vote of thanks to Mr. Brown, than to Captain Ingraham?

Mr. PRESTON. I will not attempt to answer that question. It would involve a consideration of all the opinions about this matter which may be entertained here—

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia, (interrupting.) If the gentleman will allow me, I will answer it. To my mind, there is some significance in the question put by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CUMMING,] followed up by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. TAYLOR,] and still later by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES.] It is asked, if Captain Ingraham acted under the instructions of Mr. Brown, whether Mr. Brown is not the man to be thanked instead of Ingraham? Well, now, the reply to that is a very easy one. I know that Mr. Brown acted very well in this matter, and I mean to see that justice is done him; but Mr. Brown is in civil life and can be promoted, and this administration ought to promote him. Ingraham cannot be promoted under our laws and usage; and this is the only return we can make him.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Will the gentleman from Kentucky allow me to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question?

Mr. PRESTON. I am afraid that in all this cross-fire I shall lose the floor myself; but I will permit the gentleman to ask the question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Then I ask the gentleman why it is that we have passed resolutions thanking our generals for fighting our battles? They have done it under the direction of the President and Secretary of War; and yet I never heard of a resolution being passed thanking those officials for their conduct.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman from Illinois has the advantage of me in having been in the wars. I never have been.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That does not answer my question.

Mr. JONES. I shall answer your question, though. I have no recollection of ever having seen, in any report of the battles in which that gentleman was engaged, and so gallantly behaved himself, or of any battle in Mexico, or any battle fought by the American arms in any one of the wars in which we have been, where the President or the Secretary of War gave orders to fight a particular battle, and to conduct it in a particular way. It is the commanding general, as I understand, who has the whole control, the arrangement and direction of these things in the field. Congress declares war, and the President sends forward troops; but the responsibility of fighting, when and how, rests upon the commander. The commanding general takes the responsibility, and he it is whom we have been in the habit of thanking for victories, and rewarding with sword and medal.

Mr. RICHARDSON. With the permission of the gentleman from Kentucky, I will say a word or two by way of reply. The President commands the army to fight the battle, and they fight it in their own way. The gentleman from Tennessee says that they ought to be thanked. Mr. Brown told Captain Ingraham to do this thing, and he did it. He stands, therefore, in about the same relation as a general. I can see no difference between them.

Mr. PRESTON. I feel so dislocated—not complicated—by the interruptions which have taken place—though I have willingly yielded to them, and would do so again—that I desire to fulfill my promise not to obtrude longer upon the time of the House. I think that nearly every gentleman present has made up his opinion. The purpose for which I rose was to say, that we now have either to recommit, reject, or adopt this resolution. Why not act upon it at once? Why discuss it further? It will be gratifying to Captain Ingraham, who deserves it, and honorable to Congress if we pass it.

Whatever may be the desire of the friends of Ingraham in this House, they can have no better opportunity of testifying their appreciation of his services and gallantry than that which the committee have offered. Shall we recede and refuse to pass the resolution? I cannot agree with the gentleman from Alabama when he proposes such a course. Ingraham is an American officer, who, in my judgment, deserves this honor.

It was but a few days since that I most cheerfully concurred in offering a similar compliment to General Wool. I trust a like sentiment will prevail among us in concurring in the resolution of the Senate, intended to bestow a merited honor upon General Scott. Much, however, as I think the country is indebted to him for the most memorable, valuable, and brilliant military services, and richly as I think the tribute due to the greatest living captain and soldier of the age, yet, whatever may be its fate, it cannot affect my wish to see justice done to Wool and Ingraham.

It is suggested that I should call the previous question; but it is foreign to my habit to do so, and would be very inappropriate after the indulgence extended by the House. Allow me to say, in conclusion, that I earnestly hope the House will adopt the resolution as modified by the Committee on Foreign Relations, without ingrafting any amendment upon it.

Mr. CLINGMAN. I move the previous question.

The previous question being seconded, the main question was ordered to be put—ayes 82, noes 58.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, what is the main question?

The SPEAKER. The first proposition is to commit to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. DEAN. I shall not, Mr. Speaker, at this hour of the day, avail myself of the opportunity which the rules afford me to occupy the attention of the House by making a speech on this subject, as I have already once addressed it. I shall rather take the opportunity to write out and publish my views at length in the Appendix to the Congressional Globe. But I think it is proper that I, as the mover of the original resolution, should explain that I approve of the act of the committee on this subject. And in doing that, sir, I wish it to be understood, distinctly and unequivocally, that I am in favor of the resolution of the committee as reported, instead of the resolution which I offered here on the second day of the session.

I am in favor of the resolution as amended by the committee, instead of those which I proposed, for this reason: because they now come from one of the standing committees of this House; and for that reason it goes forth to the country as the matured expression of the committee rather than the production of an individual, and the result of careful and deliberate consideration. I, therefore, sir, dropping all personal considerations, which I might be supposed to entertain in regard to the adoption of my own proposition unamended, say that I am, under all the circumstances, in favor of the amended resolution of the committee rather than of my own, as originally proposed. The resolutions, as first offered here, were drawn by me in haste at my desk in the House, and without having had time to consult with any one, and with no opportunity to select the best form of expression to convey the principles intended to be asserted. They were offered the very day on which the President's message came into the House, in which we were informed that the Government, after mature deliberation, had given its approbation to the conduct of Commander Ingraham. And I was anxious, sir, that the same medium of communication—whether mail or telegraph—which carried forth that declaration by the President, should also convey the intelligence to the whole world that the Congress of the United States—another branch of the Government—approved the conduct of Captain Ingraham as emphatically as the President had done. And, sir, so long as the object is attained, I care not in what particular language the information is conveyed—I am for the substance, and not for the letter—the particular form of expression matters not. The people, on looking at that vote of thanks, and the presentation of the medal, will regard the thing, and not the precise phraseology in which our thanks are conveyed. The act is more eloquent than all the studied forms of speech; and the simpler the expression, the more emphatic the approval. They, sir, will not haggle about words, or study the force of sentences; but they will see that their representatives, the representatives of the American people, have, in Congress assembled, deliberately approved of that conduct which they have so emphatically indorsed—

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, (interrupting.) I beg to assure the House that I do not rise for the sake of making a speech upon this question, but simply to propound a question to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. DEAN,] in relation to the phraseology of the resolution. As the gentleman from New York originally offered the resolution, I beg leave to propound the question to him.

Mr. DEAN. Though disliking more than I can express the habit of interrogating gentlemen while addressing the House, if the gentleman from Virginia desires to ask me a question I will answer it.

Mr. SMITH. The preamble of the resolution is in these words: "In extending the protection of the American Government to Martin Koszta by rescuing him from forcible and illegal seizure and imprisonment on board of the Austrian brig Huzzar." What I wish to know is this: Did this committee mean to assert that he was seized on board the brig Huzzar? Another question; the resolution says "forcible seizure." I want to know the use of the word "forcible?" The word "seizure and imprisonment" imply force. There is a manifest tautology, and in a matter of this importance, I would not send out to the world a paper defective in phraseology in this respect.

Mr. DEAN. I hope, in a discussion of this importance, that Congress will not be turned into a grammar school, [laughter,] and that we shall not be forced from the discussion of a matter of national importance to the settlement of a question of syntax; or be compelled to consult our dictionaries, or refer to some work upon synonyms. The words "forcible seizure," however, are intentional, and mean something where they occur, and I desire to meet the gentleman upon his own criticism. We have in our law books—and I have not the pleasure to know whether the gentleman is a lawyer or not—we have a term which says "molitor manus imposuit"—he placed his hands lightly upon him. We mean to convey by the expression "forcible seizure" directly the reverse of "molliter manus imposuit," and to say that the commander of the Austrian ship, who was at the time the representative of the Austrian Government, with his hired body of men, who seized the Hungarian refugee and forced him from neutral territory on board the Huzzar, did not go up to Koszta and say to him, "We desire you to come on board of this ship," but that they committed the outrage "vi et armis"—with force and arms—not in the technical sense of the term, but in its fullest meaning and significance.

Now, sir, I will answer the other criticism of the gentleman, and that is in reference to whether we mean that he was seized on board of the ship Huzzar. We did not design, in this resolution, to go on and give the whole history of the affair. That history was known to every man who reads the English, or any other language. The original seizure being forcible, and Koszta being carried on board the ship, the seizure continued to be forcible and illegal, as larceny in one country is larceny in every country into which the thing stolen is carried. It was proper, therefore, that it should be put in this language, and is far more expressive than a detailed statement of the whole transaction.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire, as one of the committee, and as a member of this House, to say here, in my place, distinctly and unequivocally, that the object of this resolution is not merely to pay a personal compliment to Captain Ingraham. That, of course, is included in it. But, sir, the compliment has been paid by the united voice of the world. It has already been paid, not only by this Government, but by the freemen of every Government, and by the liberal press all over Europe. But if we pass this resolution, as I trust we shall, we are going to do far more. We are going to declare that we, the representatives of the people of his country, approve of the act in the light of all its surrounding circumstances. It is the attending circumstances which give character to every transaction, and not the act itself. Killing is felonious, excusable, justifiable, or it may be praiseworthy—depending upon the circumstances under which it occurred—so that we, if we make this declaration, do it now, that we know the circumstances which invest and give importance and character to the act.

And the compliment which is conveyed is merely an incident, while the declaration of principle is the object for which the resolution was introduced, and for which, if passed at all, it should be adopted. And I must dissent from the remark which has been made during this debate, that this is not the place to enunciate principles. So did not the signers of the Declaration of Independence think. But they, in Congress assembled, proclaimed their principles; and we, by passing this resolution, will announce and affirm a principle of vital importance. As a member of the great family of nations, it is our duty, as well as our right, to take part in the settlement of questions which concern us; and in these matters our power, our intelligence, and progress, allow and require us to take an elevated position. We have, in fact, the power to take our own position; and it is time, high time, that we should have something to say in reference to international law, and that in the discussion and settlement of these questions, we should consult reason, justice, and humanity, rather than the musty codes of worn-out despotisms. We have declared new principles in our system of Government—principles vitally affecting the rights of individuals, as distinguished from the State; and it is proper that those principles should be carried out to their results. And now I will state what I understand by this resolution.

I understand the first resolution—and that, of course, is the one which contains the whole declaration of principles—to contain three distinct propositions. The first is, the right of an individual to expatriate himself, the right of a man to choose his own place of residence, irrespective of the accident of birth, and a distinct denial of the right of a Prince to track his subject into foreign countries and there claim jurisdiction over him. The second proposition is, the right of this Government to afford protection to such persons as choose to come here, and adopt this country as their place of residence. The third proposition is, the approval by Congress of the act of Captain Ingraham, and the act of our Government in sustaining him. If there is any man in this House who is not prepared to take this new step, who is not now ready to assume this position, I trust that he will vote against these resolutions. I understand them to sustain these three distinct propositions; and I believe the time has come when we should, and when we must, concur in these principles. The Executive branch of the Government has already done so in the letter of Secretary Marcy, which has so often been referred to—a letter which, let me say, is destined to an immortality equal to the Declaration of Independence, or Magna Charta, if it is not sacrilegious to compare anything to the Declaration of Independence. This letter, sir, is another Magna Charta—one that has long been needed—a Magna Charta for adopted citizens.

It cannot be inappropriate for me to allude here to a fact in our past history. The war of 1812 was declared and fought for the assertion of these great principles. Our merchant vessels were forcibly entered and searched, to take from them natives of Great Britain who were engaged on board them; and in the exercise of this pretended right, two thousand American-born citizens had been impressed, and were in the service of Great Britain at the time of the declaration of war; and after fighting two years, a treaty of peace was concluded, in which there was no distinct abandonment of this right on the part of England. As we have increased in strength, and as public opinion has exerted its force upon the legislation and the diplomacy of the country, one thing after another has occurred which has enabled this Government to assert the rights of our citizens abroad, and at last, in the harbor of Smyrna, it was the good fortune of Captain Ingraham to be able again to assert and vindicate them.

Mr. MILLSON. It seems to me that the friends of this resolution unnecessarily create prejudice against it, by attributing to the letter of the Secretary of State a position which he never meant to assume. My friend from New York has just told us that the position taken by the Secretary of State in his letter, was one novel and hitherto unknown in international history. Now, I wish very briefly to call his attention to a paragraph in that letter, in which I think he will discover that the Secretary did not regard his position as at all novel or unknown. He says:

"The vindication of these agents is not placed upon any principle new to the international code, or unknown in the practice of enlightened nations. These nations do not hesitate, in the exercise of the right of protection, to extend it to persons (not always subjects according to their municipal laws) who are clothed with their nationality; and in some instances they have carried this right of protection to limits which this Government would not venture, because it would not feel justified, to approach; nor have any of these nations been disposed to abandon the exercise of this right from a timid apprehension that it might possibly bring them into an occasional collision with other Powers."

I will not take up the time of the gentleman from New York, by reading further, but will content myself by declaring that this letter of Secretary Marcy has been very often entirely misunderstood in relation to this point. Mr. Marcy never said that the Government of the United States were bound to protect Martin Koszta, but in twenty instances he has said that they had the right to protect him; and in saying this, he expressly says that he asserts a principle not new to the international code. And the whole experience of the present day justifies him in saying it. At this very moment it is a question under consideration by England and France whether they shall not interpose, in the exercise of their sovereign discretion, for the protection of the Sultan of Turkey. Yet no gentleman will pretend that the Sultan is a citizen of either Power, or that there is any obligation resting upon them, except in their own discretion, to afford him any such protection.

Mr. PARKER. I ask the gentleman from New York to allow me for a moment.

Mr. DEAN. How long does the gentleman want to talk?

Mr. PARKER. Only a moment. I think the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MILLSON] is laboring under a mistake.

Mr. DEAN. I must interrupt the gentleman. I prefer to answer the gentleman from Virginia myself.

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman allow me to quote a single sentence from the letter of the Secretary of State?

Mr. DEAN. Well, I will hear the quotation.

Mr. PARKER. The Secretary says:

"This right to protect persons having a domicile, though not native born or naturalized citizens, rests on the firm foundation of justice, and the claim to be protected is earned by considerations which the protecting power is not at liberty to disregard."

I think this is conclusive upon this point.

Mr. DEAN. I had the letter of the Secretary open at that precise point, and was about to read, in reply to my friend from Virginia, in reference to one misunderstanding of the position of the Secretary of State. I had not intended to do it; but, inasmuch as the gentleman from Virginia has called attention to the point, I desire also to call attention to what he does say upon this subject, and to what I regard as American law in relation to naturalized citizens, and the duty of the Government to protect those citizens; and not only to protect them, but also those who have come to our shores, under the invitation of the Government, to become citizens. The clause to which I allude is this:

"Whenever, by the operation of the law of nations, an individual becomes clothed with our national character, be he a native-born or naturalized citizen, an exile driven from his early home by political oppression, or an emigrant enticed from it by the hopes of a better fortune for himself and his posterity, he can claim the protection of this Government, and it may respond to that claim without being obliged to explain its conduct to any foreign Power; for it is its duty to make its nationality respected by other nations, and respectable in every quarter of the globe."

Now, sir, in that part of the Secretary's letter is contained the ground upon which I plant myself for the justification of Captain Ingraham's conduct; and upon that ground it can be justified, notwithstanding the principle always claimed by England, that "once a subject, always a subject."

My colleague from New York [Mr. MAURICE] refers me to another place, in which the Secretary puts it upon the ground of domicile—that upon that ground Martin Koszta had a right to claim protection, and the Government had a right to extend it to him. The Secretary, as I understand it, puts it upon three distinct grounds, which I will not now reiterate, and domicile is one of them.

Now, sir, the Committee on Foreign Affairs, in preparing this resolution, decided that they would leave the argument with the State Department; that we would report the resolution without giving our reasons for it. In rendering a verdict, a jury simply finds "guilty" or "not guilty;" they do not give their reasons for that verdict. The surrounding circumstances must be taken into consideration; and so it is with regard to this resolution. The third proposition, which I suppose is included in this resolution, is an indorsement of the act of Captain Ingraham in full, and of the action of the Government in approving that act.

And now, sir, at this precise point, I wish to correct a misapprehension that has gone abroad in reference to the conduct of the Government on this question. It has been erroneously stated, in the public press, that the Government did not at first approve the conduct of Captain Ingraham; that the Government doubted and hesitated; and that it was not until they felt the beating of the popular pulse that the President and his Cabinet came up to the mark and approved of Captain Ingraham's conduct. That is an entire mistake. The letter of Captain Ingraham, giving an account of the transactions in the Bay of Smyrna, arrived here about the 19th of August, and immediately the Secretary of the Navy addressed an answer to him, in which he said that the Government approved his prompt and judicious conduct. The next day the Secretary of State corresponded with our diplomatic agents at Smyrna and at Constantinople, unconditionally approving the act without giving the reasons for that approval. Subsequently, and after the protest of the three Powers—Russia, Prussia, and Austria—and the letter of Mr. Hülsemann, the Secretary of State came out and gave the reasons which justified the conduct of Captain Ingraham, and why the Government approved it.

The Government never for a moment held back or hesitated about the matter, and when gentlemen say that this is a question of doubtful propriety, I tell them that upon that point the Administration take issue with them, and for the verdict appeal to the country. That there may be no misapprehension, and that no one may vote for this resolution ignorant of the facts, what did

Captain Ingraham do? And here let me pause to say a word in reply to the objection raised by the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES.] The gentleman wants to know why we do not tender this vote of thanks to Mr. Brown instead of to Captain Ingraham? If the gentleman will look at the letter of Mr. Hülsemann, he will see that Mr. Brown directed, or rather advised, Captain Ingraham to demand the release of Koszta. Well, he did demand his release, but what use would it have been if he had stopped there? The letter of his instructions beyond this was silent. But Captain Ingraham, having demanded the release of Koszta, went further, took the means necessary to make that demand effectual, and told the representative of the Austrian Government—the commander of the Hussar—on the morning of the 2d July, that unless the man was delivered up by four o'clock in the afternoon he would take him by force. It was his gallant, prompt, and judicious conduct in going further that awards the great merit to Captain Ingraham, and which has invested his name and the flag he bore with such peculiar glory.

Mr. Hülsemann says that he then drew his ship up in line of battle, and prepared to carry out his threat. I will say further, that the captain of the Austrian brig waited until within ten minutes of four o'clock before he undertook to release his prisoner. Koszta was in the hold of his vessel, and in irons. At that time, having made previous threats of shooting him, they sent down for him. He was afraid that they were taking him to be shot, for he had been told in the morning that such would be his fate, if the demand of Ingraham was persisted in. It was a sublime right—one which has rarely been equalled in history—to see Captain Ingraham standing on the deck of his vessel, with her guns pointed, the torches lighted, and he awaiting, with watch in hand, to give the word of command to fire; the Austrian officers, however, just before the expiration of the time, said, hurriedly, to the prisoner, "we want you no longer here," and he was delivered just three minutes before four o'clock.

The gentleman inquired the other day whether, if Koszta had not been given up, Ingraham would have been justified in firing into the Austrian vessel? I answer promptly that he would; and if he had done it, the whole American people, and the laws of nations, would have sustained him. He was at that time the representative of our nation, and demanding the release of a man who claimed the protection of our Government, and who had in his possession papers which entitled him to that protection.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I put no such question as the one the gentleman states.

Mr. DEAN. I understood the gentleman to put the question.

Mr. JONES. I said that if the Austrian commander refused to give Koszta up, would this Government be justified in declaring war against Austria?

Mr. DEAN. I desire to meet this thing fairly, and follow it to its utmost conclusion. I say, sir, that the great object of Government is to afford protection to those who owe it allegiance. If the Government of Austria had refused to deliver Koszta, and Captain Ingraham, our representative in the Bay of Smyrna, after using all the force within his power, had failed to release him, it would be right for us to carry out our demands at all hazards—at all hazards.

Now, there is another ground upon which the American people will justify Captain Ingraham, and that is this: Our diplomatic agents, whether properly or not, have been charged with remissness in asserting the rights of Americans traveling abroad. They have waited, and they have doubted. Ingraham, in this case, the moment he received the word from our agent that there was a man claiming the protection of the American Government in imprisonment, did not send home to search the parish registers to know where he was born, nor trace out the branch of the genealogical tree from which he claimed to spring. He did not wait to examine the records of all the courts to see whether he had declared his intention to become a citizen—or to ascertain the genuineness of the papers he bore, or inquire into the power of the court to grant them. Is an American commander to do so in any case? On the contrary, when the right is claimed by one whom he is satisfied is entitled to it, he should get nine points of the law—that is, possession—leaving the question involved to be afterward settled between the two Governments. That is the manner in which our representatives should act. And the conduct of Ingraham, acting as he has, promptly and successfully, upon these principles, has given us respect abroad, and dignity and consideration everywhere.

I was reading but yesterday an extract from a letter received from one of the officers of the St. Louis, which stated that when Captain Ingraham entered the harbor of Alexandria he was received amid the joyful ringing of bells and firing of cannon; and that when he entered the theater the American flag was flying, and he was received with cheers. Such tributes as these, sir, make an American proud of his country, and will have their effect in the Army and Navy. No single battle has ever added such luster to the American name. It has given us a respect abroad which could not be secured by the most successful naval engagement.

I did intend, Mr. Speaker, to answer some of the objections which have been urged against the Marcy letter—objections, sir, many of them arising, I think, from misapprehension of the Secretary's reasoning, and from taking disconnected portions of it, and not regarding it as one entire argument.

But this discussion has taken so wide a range—so much has been spoken on the subject, and the hour is so late—the press and the people having so unanimously approved it—that I leave that part of the case, saying only that, in my judgment, it can be sustained fully and entirely—as a whole, and in each distinct proposition. I will, however, say a single word in reply to the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. SMITH,] who advised us never to consult the heart, but rather the head. Sir, on any question like the one now under discussion, I had rather trust the heart—in its warm, its generous impulses—than the cool calculations of the wisest philosopher. And though he says that Samson will lose his strength in the lap of Delilah, yet, sir, nature will soon restore that again. But when a man lets his heart be eaten out by the rust of conservatism, it withers and becomes paralyzed, and is forever incapable of conceiving a noble thought, or appreciating a generous or heroic act.

He said that Lieutenant Hunter was dismissed from the Navy because he had gone forward and had "taken Alvarado," without the aid of foggy diagrams. The gentleman is mistaken in what he said. Lieutenant Hunter was, it is true, court-martialed for disobedience of orders. He pleaded guilty. But, instead of being dismissed from the service, he was dismissed from that squadron, and was immediately transferred, by the Secretary of the Navy, to the command of the Taney. That was the only thing. He pleaded guilty to the charge of disobedience of orders—and was simply reprimanded, and transferred from the command of one ship to the command of another.

There is, however, one point in the gentleman's speech to which I most heartily subscribe; and that is, that this resolution does commit the Government to the act of Captain Ingraham, to the letter of the Secretary of State, and to the message of the President of the United States. I agree with him there; and, agreeing with him, I shall vote for it with that distinct understanding, and because it does thus commit us.

Now, sir, for a single word further. I desire that this vote, when taken, shall go forth as a deliberate expression of this House. When I first introduced the resolution, I supposed that no debate could arise, and therefore I moved the previous question; but debate having arisen, and gentlemen belonging to all parties having spoken, I am glad that debate has so arisen; and as we come now to vote upon the resolution, and to send that vote forth, it must be taken, and will be received by the country, as the deliberate expression of the legislative branch of the Government. Wherever that vote goes on this continent, it will carry joy and gladness; and wherever it is translated—as it will be into all the languages of the earth—it will carry with it a weight and a power which cannot be resisted.

Mr. CUMMING. Will my colleague allow me to explain?

Mr. DEAN. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMING. I had not intended, sir, to minge in this affair at all. I intended to cast my vote for the resolution as brought forward by the Committee on Foreign Affairs. But, in order to relieve myself from any sort of false position, I think it right to state at once that I intended to vote for this resolution. But, sir, I cannot subscribe to the ground taken by my friend and colleague, [Mr. DEAN,] with some other gentlemen here. I cannot subscribe to the proposition that this compliment intended to be paid to Captain Ingraham shall, for one moment, go forth to the world as the expression of a great principle, as the gentleman calls it.

Mr. FAULKNER. I call the gentleman from New York to order. I have desired to express my own views on this question, but have been cut off by the previous question. I cannot consent that any gentleman shall exercise a privilege on this floor, of which I and others have been deprived by the action of this House.

Mr. CUMMING. I was merely making an explanation, in order to set my position right on this matter. I am in favor of conferring this honor upon Captain Ingraham. The only question is the ground upon which it shall be conferred. For the gallant and chivalrous performance of his duty, I am perfectly willing to give a medal and the thanks of Congress—or, if you choose, for his vindication of our common humanity. But, sir, as an exposition of principles, I am not willing, as far as I am concerned, that this Congress should send the resolution forth clothed in this way.

The gentleman says, according to the English code, "once a citizen, always a citizen." Now, apply that to this very case.

The SPEAKER, (interrupting.) The Chair will remark, that the previous question having been called, the gentleman is cut off thereby from making a speech upon the subject; and nothing but an explanation is allowed.

Mr. DEAN, (resuming.) I was willing my colleague should explain; I will not longer detain the House. As I understand the matter, the first motion to be put to the House is to commit this resolution to the Committee of the Whole. I desire to say that, if that should be done, it would be equivalent to a vote against the resolution.

Mr. WHEELER. I would ask my colleague how that would be equivalent to a vote against the resolution?

Mr. DEAN. It is upon this ground: If sent to the Committee of the Whole, it is sent there for further discussion and examination. But, appropriation bills and special orders having preference over others, those of us who have served here before know it will be impossible ever to reach this resolution again. It has now been discussed for two days, and at length, and the House is as well prepared to vote as it can be. I trust, therefore, that the vote upon it will be taken at this time.

Mr. WHEELER. My colleague will remember that we have a very patriotic colleague [Mr. LYON] now absent, who has been with Captain Ingraham at Smyrna and has examined into this subject with great care and deliberation. He is desirous of taking a part in the debate of this question, and I hope he will be allowed to do so. I cannot see what object the gentleman can have in calling the previous question, and forcing the House to a vote now.

Mr. DEAN. I am quite willing that my colleague from the Lewis and Jefferson district [Mr. LYON] should have an opportunity to discuss this question. I know that he has been with Captain Ingraham at Smyrna; but the passage of this resolution now will in no way interfere to prevent him from speaking on the subject. The President's message is still under discussion in Committee of the Whole, and whenever we again go into committee, he can avail himself of that opportunity to speak upon this subject.

Mr. WHEELER. I only wish to state one thing. My colleague [Mr. DEAN] should be aware that certain gentlemen in this House are desirous of applying the Administration-gag again, even upon the President's message. Gentlemen have already called the previous question upon a motion to stop debate upon the message, and they are anxious to do it again, and we shall be cut off.

Mr. DEAN. I do not exactly understand the force of the expression the "Administration-gag" upon the President's message.

Mr. WHEELER. I will explain it fully, if the gentleman desires.

Mr. DEAN. It is always in the power of the House to determine when debate should close upon any subject—a power that has always been exercised since the adoption of the present rules, and which is absolutely necessary in so numerous a body as this. I have full confidence that that power will not be improperly exercised.

I have explained this matter so that gentlemen may vote understandingly, and not send this resolution to the Committee of the Whole, where it must inevitably be lost. We have long since taken our position in reference to European colonization on this continent. President Pierce has reiterated the doctrine in his inaugural, and extended it. This continent—this whole continent—and the adjacent islands, are safe to us and our institutions.

We are now called upon to take our position in reference to another matter, and that is the right of our citizens abroad. And those who favor the passage of this resolution mean to send word to all, that it is the deliberate voice of the American Congress that the rights of an American citizen abroad shall be guarded as vigilantly as if he were upon our own soil; and if necessary, that the whole force of the Government shall be invoked to afford him protection—that the deck of an American ship is sacred, and the spot on which a person entitled to the protection of our Government stands, whether at home or abroad, is as inviolable as the sanctuary of the gods.

The SPEAKER. The question first in order is the motion made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MILLSON] to commit the resolutions to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BAYLY, of Virginia. I ask for the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 30, nays 153; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abernethy, Barry, Campbell, Caruthers, Cox, Crocker, Cullom, Cumming, Eastman, Franklin, Aaron Harlan, Haven, Hill, Hunt, George W. Jones, McMullin, Mayall, Meacham, Parker, Peckham, Pratt, Puryear, Ready, Reese, William Smith, William R. Smith, Solters, John L. Taylor, Tracy, and Zollcoffer—30.

NAYS—Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Thomas H. Bayly, Banks, Barksdale, Belcher, Bell, Benson, Bissell, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Carpenter, Chamberlain, Chandler, Chase, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clark, Clingman, Cobb, Cook, Corvin, Craigie, Cutting, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dean, Disney, Dowdell, Dumbur, Eddy, Edwards, Edmundson, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Everhart, Ewing, Farley, Faulkner, Fenton, Flagler, Fuller, Giddings, Greenwood, Grey, Grow, Hamilton, Andrew J. Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Hastings, Hendricks, Henn, Hubbard, Hilyer, Houston, Howe, Hughes, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kittredge, Knox, Kutz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Lindley, McDougal, McNair, Mace, Macy, Matteson, Maurice, Maxwell, May, Middlesworth, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Millson, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Noble, Norton, Olds, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Preston, Pringle, Ready, Richardson, Riddle, David Ritchie, Robbins, Rogers, Rowe, Rufin, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seymour, Shaw, Shower, Simmons, Singleton, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Solters, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Tweed, Upham, Vail, Wade, Walbridge, Walker, Walley, Walsh, Warren, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, Wheeler, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Yates, and Zollcoffer—153.

The SPEAKER. The question now in order is upon the substitute proposed by the Committee on Foreign Relations for the resolutions originally offered.

The substitute is as follows:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the thanks of Congress be, and they are hereby, presented to Duncan N. Ingraham, commanding the United States sloop-of-war St. Louis, for his judicious and gallant conduct on the second day of July last, in extending the protection of the American Government to Martin Koszta, by rescuing him from forcible and illegal seizure and imprisonment on board the Austrian brig Hussar.

Resolved, That the President of the United States be, and is hereby, requested to cause to be made a medal, with suitable devices, and presented to Captain Duncan N. Ingraham, as a testimonial of the high sense entertained by Congress of his valor, promptness, and judicious conduct on the above mentioned occasion.

Resolved, That the President of the United States cause the foregoing resolutions to be communicated to Captain Duncan N. Ingraham in such terms as he may deem best calculated to give effect to the objects thereof.

Pending its consideration, Mr. BARRY offered the following amendment, to insert after the words "Martin Koszta" the following:

A refugee from Hungary, who had fled to the United States; who had filed a declaration in the proper court of his intentions to become an American citizen, and who was at the time of his seizure upon Turkish territory.

The amendment will be the first question in order.

The question was then taken on the amendment to the substitute; and it was not agreed to.

The question was then taken on the substitute; and it was decided in the affirmative.

The SPEAKER. The question now is upon ordering the resolutions to be engrossed as amended.

The resolutions, as amended, were then read the third time, and ordered to be engrossed.

Mr. DEAN. I move the previous question upon the adoption of the resolutions.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Upon the passage of the resolutions I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and there were—yeas 173, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Aiken, James C. Allen, Willis Allen, Appleton, Thomas H. Bayly, Banks, Barksdale, Barry, Belcher, Bell, Benson, Bissell, Boyce, Breckinridge, Bridges, Brooks, Campbell, Carpenter, Chamberlain, Chandler, Chase, Chrisman, Churchwell, Clingman, Cobb, Cook, Corvin, Cox, Craigie, Crocker, Cullom, Cumming, Cutting, John G. Davis, Thomas Davis, Dawson, Dean, Disney, Dowdell, Dumbur, Eddy, Edwards, Edmundson, Ellison, English, Etheridge, Everhart, Ewing, Farley, Faulkner, Fenton, Flagler, Fuller, Giddings, Greenwood, Grey, Grow, Hamilton, Andrew J. Harlan, Sampson W. Harris, Wiley P. Harris, Harrison, Hastings, Hendricks, Henn, Hubbard, Hilyer, Houston, Howe, Hughes, Hunt, Ingersoll, Daniel T. Jones, Roland Jones, Keitt, Kerr, Kidwell, Kittredge, Knox, Kutz, Lamb, Lane, Latham, Lindley, McDougal, McNair, Mace, Macy, Matteson, Maurice, Maxwell, May, Middlesworth, John G. Miller, Smith Miller, Millson, Morgan, Morrison, Murray, Noble, Norton, Olds, Andrew Oliver, Mordecai Oliver, Orr, Peck, Peckham, Pennington, Bishop Perkins, John Perkins, Phelps, Phillips, Pratt, Preston, Pringle, Ready, Richardson, Riddle, David Ritchie, Robbins, Rogers, Rowe, Rufin, Sabin, Sage, Sapp, Seymour, Shaw, Shower, Simmons, Singleton, Skelton, Gerrit Smith, George W. Smyth, Snodgrass, Solters, Frederick P. Stanton, Richard H. Stanton, Hester L. Stevens, Stratton, Straub, Andrew Stuart, David Stuart, John J. Taylor, John L. Taylor, Thurston, Tracy, Trout, Tweed, Upham, Vail, Wade, Walbridge, Walker, Walley, Walsh, Warren, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wells, John Wentworth, Tappan Wentworth, Westbrook, Wheeler, Witte, Daniel B. Wright, Yates, and Zollcoffer—173.

NAYS—Messrs. Abernethy, Barry, Campbell, Caruthers, Cox, Crocker, Cullom, Cumming, Eastman, Franklin, Aaron Harlan, Haven, Hill, Hunt, George W. Jones, McMullin, Mayall, Meacham, Parker, Peckham, Pratt, Puryear, Ready, Reese, William Smith, William R. Smith, Solters, John L. Taylor, Tracy, and Zollcoffer—9.

So the resolutions, as amended, were agreed to.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, pending the call of the roll, said: Not having been within the bar when my name was called, I desire to say that I should have voted in the negative had I been present.

Mr. DEAN. I move to reconsider the vote just taken, and to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The question was then taken on the latter motion; and it was decided in the affirmative.

The resolution was then read by its title.

Mr. DEAN. I move to amend the title by inserting "medal," instead of "sword."

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, the change will be made.

Mr. HAMILTON. I move that we proceed to the business upon the Speaker's table.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative.

CENSUS.

Mr. STANTON, of Kentucky. I beg leave to present the following report from the Committee on Printing:

The members of the House on the Committee on Printing, to whom were referred the resolution of Mr. SPRAGUE, proposing the publication of five thousand additional copies of the report of the Superintendent of the Seventh Census, and thirty thousand copies of the Abstract; the resolution of Mr. FETTER, proposing to publish fifteen thousand additional copies of the report of the Seventh Census; and the resolution of Mr. WRIGHT, proposing to publish thirty thousand copies of the Seventh Census, report:

That there were published, by order of the last Congress, for the use of the Senate, seven thousand, and for the use of the House of Representatives, ten thousand copies of the returns of the Seventh Census; which, together with the usual numbers, made an aggregate of about twenty thousand copies. The work is comprised in one large quarto volume of eleven hundred and sixty pages, and was printed by the public printer at a cost, including paper and binding, of about two dollars and seventy-five cents per copy, or fifty-five thousand dollars for the whole number.

From its size and minute statistical details, the work is more designed for reference than popular use. It is, in the opinion of the committee, better adapted for the public libraries, institutions of learning, and learned societies of the country, than for general distribution. The number already published is more than sufficient to supply each public library, college, learned society, and county in the United States, with one copy, and will afford an excess of several thousand for distribution to such other public institutions and individuals as it may be desirable to supply. In view of these facts, the committee see no reason why a further edition of so expensive a publication should be issued, and therefore decline recommending it.
